April 29, 1875.

Nine hundred and seventy-nine pensioners received their dues at the government pension office at Indianapolis this week. There are over three hundred more on the list.

Hayes welcomed Kilpatrick as a good and faithful servant. In fact he sent for him. Hayes wasn't going to be angry at any one for saying that the Independents of Indiana ought to be bought up.

The Government officials at Cincinnati have orders from Wishington not to allow anyone to pry into the Income returns of Mr. Hayes. Yet we are told that his election will not be a continuation of Grantism.

The Hayes tax list gives the Republican party a vast deal of trouble. They spend a great deal of breath in telling us that there is nothing in it, but Caplain Harper says there was just $400 in it. Hayes got the money but he could not tell what he did with it.

Mr. M. Tweed has been captured. He foolishly placed himself within reach of extradition. One would naturally suppose that Tweed would be too smart for that, but the news of the Republican treatment of thieves, must have reached him in his exile, and made him care less.

Charles Francis Adams is the Democratic candidate for Governor in Massachusetts. Horatio Seymour was nominated in New York, but owing to his health was compelled to decline. It will be seen that the Democracy are determined to put good men before the people for their high positions, men who have been tried, and found to fill the measure of honesty and ability.

The voice of the people exclaim with no uncertain sound: we must have a change. The men who are stealing our money, closing our workshops, driving the honest mechanic, laborer, farmer and artisan to poverty, must be swept from office to make room for honest men. The Republican party has outlived its usefullness! A change must be had.

Hancock and Hooker, the two great fighting Generals of the war are for Tilden and Hendrick's. Dix and Garfield two great soldiers of fortune, who stand convicted by a report of a Republican investigating committee of a Republican Congress of taking Credit Mobilier, are for Hayes and Wheeler. Which two are "the boys in blue" most likely to follow this campaign?

Against the thievery of Belknap, the wholesale robbery of Robeson, the pocket-picking of Pinchback, the famous corruption of Shepherd, the peculations of Clapp, the damning position of Kilpatrick, and the infamy of Holloway, the Republican press gravely sets up the charges that Uncle Jimmy Williams while a member of the Committee on Accounts paid sixty-two and a half cents apiece for combs for the Congressional wash-room, and thereby swindle the Government of the United States.

A Brave Soldiers' Views.

GEN. BARTLETT [illegible]

Among the people of Berkshire county there is perhaps no one whose sentiments on political topics are entitled to greater weight than are those of Gen. Bartlett. His gallant services during the war and his wide reputation as an able, conscientious and upright citizen since the surrender at Appomattox have secured for him a warm place in the hearts of his countrymen. Gen. Bartlett has been well known hitherto as belonging to the large class of independent voters, and that these people may know the sentiments of so distinguished a member of their ranks, I am kindly permitted to make public the substance of a brief interview which I had with the General to-day.

"I have no hesitation in saying that I am earnestly and heartily in favor of the election of Tilden and Hendricks," said Gen. Bartlett, in answer to a question as to his position in the present campaign. "I think the early prosperity and welfare of the country are entirely dependent on their success."

"Do you think you express the sentiments of the class of voters to which you belong?" I asked.

"Whether they are the sentiments of a majority of the Independent voters of the country I am not able to say," replied Gen. Gartlett, "But they seem to be entirely consistent with what I regard as the platform of the Independent reformers, namely, the Fifth Avenue Address. I entirely agree with Mr. Parke Godwin in his interpretation of that address. Mr. Hayes may be a very respectacle gentleman, but, in my opinion, he is nevertheless the man described in the address as "the man who ought not be nominted," while Gov. Tilden appears to me to be exactly the kind of a man which the address describes as the man who ought to be nominated. As Governor of New York he has shown that he possesses both the ability and the courage to institute and carry out the reforms which are so much needed in the administration of the National Government, and which the people so earnestly desire. To quote the address: "His capacity and courage for the work of reform are matters of record rather than of promise."

"Then you have no faith in the promises made by Gov. Hayes in his letter of acceptance?"

"Gov. Hayes may mean well enough, but look at the men who are supporting him! Does anybody suppose that on the event of his election Gov. Hayes is going to say to Blaine, Chandler, Morton, Conkling, Butler and the rest of them. "You are the men who have brought the country into disgrance,' and then turn his back upon them? Such a supposition is absurd upon the face of it, Look at Gen. Kilpatrick's letter to Gov. Hayes. That shows the kind of men who are supporting the Republican candidates. I regard the letter as simply infamous, and if it can be shown that Gov. Hayes received the letter without denouncing its author openly at once, it ought to defeat him by itself."

"Being a soldier, yourself, General, what is your opinion of Gen. Dix's circular calling for the organization of the 'Boys in Blue' to aid in the election of Gov. Hayes?" "That circular," replied the General, forcibly, "is simply infamous, and it will hurt Gov. Hayes and his cause far more than it can help him. I am confident that the soldiers who carried a musket in the army will not be influenced by any such appeals. The war is over and what the country wants is peace and good feeling throughout all sections. I notice, by the way," continued Gen. Bartlett, "that some of my Independent friends, including Carl Schurz, who joined the Liberal party in 1872 and cordially supported Mr. Greely now attempt to show their opposition to Mr. Tilden by stating that they fear the influence of the 'ex-confederates' in case Mr. Tilden was elected. Now the absurdity of this excuse appears when it is suggested that they did not entertain those fears in 1872, when they obtained in a tenfold proportion to what they do now."

There is no better evidence necessary as to what the Democracy will do in the way of reducing public expences, if they succeed in the coming election, than to point out what Tilden has done in New York—a saving of one-half the expenses, or $8,000,000, in a single year.

A simple-minded burglar made an attempt to go through the First National bank at Indianapolis, while a torch-light procession was passing, Saturday, but Mr. Walter Rivers, confidential clerk of President English, caught sight of the fellow and shot at him. The scamp dropped through a trap-door and made his escape.

A Proper Correction.

Shortly before the adjournment of Congress, Senator Windom presented in the Senate a table from the Treasury Department purporting to show the receipts and disbursements of the government from its beginning, also the am't of defalcations and their ratio for $1,000 of the aggregate revenue. By this statement the total losses both in collection and disbursement for the six years ending June 30th, 1875, are $2,846,192. This was claimed to be a very favorable showing, and a special comparison of it with Johnson's administration was pointed, the losses during which period are alleged to be $4,619,000, the loss on Internal Revenue alone being set down in the table as $2,126,602. The figures as made up show that the loss during Lincoln's term was $1.51 for $1,000; during Johnson's, $1,11; during Grant's $0.62. Now, remembering the corrupt condition of the civilservice, and that the service has been getting worse instead of better during the last eight y'rs this result seems on its very face to be contrary to probability. The table given is declared by its title to have been "prepared under the direction of the Secretary, to accompany his answer to a resolution of the United States Senate, dated February 9, 1876, calling for a detailed statement of balances due from public officers no longer in the public service, which have arisen since 1820." This resolution was offered by Mr. Davis, of West Va., the same Senator whose attempted inquiry into the notorious discrepancies in the debt statements was practically smothered by committing the work to the same Treasury officials who had made the discrepancies. The information called for by this resolution was kept back for over four months before it was sent in—June 17, last—and the Republicans in the Senate successfully resisted all attempts to order the document printed. The "detailed statement of balance due from public officers" was kept out of sight and was not mentioned by Mr. Morton's speech compairing expenditures; but it has been hunted out since adjournment and it shows that from ex collectors of Internal Revenue alone, $2,312,544 is due during Grant's term (instead of $2,846,192 as returned for the total loss), and that the total balances due from public officers during his term is $5,500,595. Thus one part of the loss is really nearly double the sum reported and bepraised as the total loss.

W. Rickel furnishes all kinds of first-class lunches. Keeps the best brands of cigars and tobacco. Keeps all kinds of candies and nuts, and sells lower than the lowest. Give him a call next to Woodford's shoe store. tf

A man by the name of Wm. Davis, a farm hand working near Cold Springs on the pike running from Indianapolis to Lafayette, was killed Thursday by a boy named John Dumser. Davis had asked Dumser for a chew of tobacco, when the latter playfully pointed a gun he held at him, which was in some unaccountable manner discharged with the above fatal result." That was a very Dum(trick,)ser.

Money To Loan.

C. A. O. McClellan, of Waterloo, Ind., has now completed his arrangements to loan an unlimited amount of money on five years time in sums of ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS and upwards, at nine per cent. interest payable semi-annually, on first mortgage security on improved farms. He will also make investments for parties having money to loan and guarantee security.

A "friend" of Hayes tells an Ohio editor that the whole lot of Uncle Birchard's nephew's carriages and wagons are not worth $100. What sort of a creature must he be who, after inheriting half a million dollars, permit his family to go lumbering around in "pleasure carriages" of a style that a cabbage pedler would be ashamed of? If Mr. Hayes has any more friends who are as knowing as this fellow in the matter of vehicles, he should get them gagged at once.—[Chicago Times.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

A colony of frame structures, located in the immediate vicinity of the Philadelphia Exposition, caught fire the other day, and were destroyed. The Centennial buildings and their contents narrowly escaped at least partial destruction. The mere accident of the wind being in a favorable direction was all that saved the big show from the fire fiend. In view of this fact, the grand jury have made a special presentment, declaring the cloud of frame shanties that have arisen around the Exposition a nuisance, and asking that they be removed.

A frightful collision occurred the other day on the Lehigh Valley railroad, near Wilkesbarre, Pa. A large train of empty passenger cars going north, en route for the Erie railroad, for the purpose of bringing an excursion to Philadelphia, collided with a down freight train, demolishing both locomotives and piling the freight cars on the top of one another. At the same moment a rear section of the passenger train telescoped with the preceding one, piling the track indiscriminately with the ruins. The destruction of the trains was complete, but, fortunately, unattended with loss of life.

THE WEST.

A Cheyenne dispatch says: "Mr. Ingram, who came into Rawhide Springs, the present terminus of the Black Hills telegraph line, reports that on Sunday last fifteen Indians attacked his party on Indian creek, and two men, named Gannon and Stearns, of Golden City, Col., were killed. A defensive position was maintained by the whites until ten Indians were killed or wounded, when the rest abandoned the field."

Advices from Gen. Crook's columns indicate that Sitting Bull's forces have split, the larger number, in straggling bodies, going in the direction of the agencies, while about a thousand hostiles have taken the direction of the Black Hills, with the intention of making a murderous raid on the miners of that locality. Crook, with a force of 1,900 men, is now on the trail of this latter body, which he hopes to overtake ere they reach their destination.

A terrible disaster occurred at a Hayes and Wheeler pole-raising, at Lancaster, Ohio, last week. The pole, which was 250 feet in length, had been elevated to a height of 100 feet, when the ropes snapped, and one of the derricks fell into the large crowd that was witnessing the work. Charles Drinkle, George Fink and Charles Hoffman were killed, and George Martin had a leg broken and was badly bruised otherwise.... The Peace Commission met the Indians in council at the Red Cloud agency on the 9th inst., and presented their ultimatum: First, that the Black Hills country should be vacated; second, that they should receive rations at the Missouri river; third, that three roads be opened from the Missouri river to the Black Hills, through their country.

The celebrated trotting stallion, Ethan Allen, known as the King of the American Turf, has just died at Leavenworth, Kansas, at the age of 27. For a long time he had no peer on the American turf, his record being 2:15.... A most extraordinary duel occurred a few days ago near Colorado Springs, Col., the circumstances of which are shaded in mystery, as nothing is known of the affair, save the finding of the body of A. J. L. Schlesinger, one of the parties. Schlesinger was private secretary of Gen. Palmer, President of the Denver and Rio Grande railroad, an estimable and very quiet gentleman, the last man one would expect to fight a duel. He left a note saying he would fight at a certain time and place, and if he fell the other party would never be known. The party went to the place and found his body dead and cold, shot through the heart. Everything indicated that he fell in a duel, but no trace of the other party was found beyond tracks in the sand.

During the progress of a game of ball near Eufaula, Kan., the other day, a colored man from the Choctaw nation was creating some disturbance on the ground, and the captain of the Creek light horse attempted to quiet him. He drew a revolver, and the officer, in the struggle to disarm him, struck him over the head with a pistol, which was discharged, the ball striking Crawford Thomas in the nose and passing through his head, killing him instantly. The officer then shot the colored man dead for continued resistance.... Hon. John Purdue, a wealthy citizen of Lafayette, Ind., and the founder of Purdue University, died last week, aged 74.

The Government is about to take steps to recover at least a portion of the money of which the revenue was defrauded. The District Attorney at Chicago has entered suit against Jacob Rehm demanding judgment in the sum of $1,000,000. Similar suits against other members of the ring, it is said, will follow.

Chicago elevators as per official figures contain 1,101,283 bushels of wheat, 1,281,890 bushels of corn, 278,579 bushels of oats, 96,966 bushels of rye, and 371,865 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 3,130,583 bushels, against 1,711,467 bushels at this period last year.

A telegram from Bismarck says a complete enrollment of Indians at Standing Rock Agency shows only 450 lodges—a total of 4,000 Indians. Rations have, heretofore, been issued on the basis of 7,000, from which it would appear that nearly 3,000 are absent or else a large amount of stealing has been done. Indians are known to have returned from the hostiles, but so stealthily that they could not be caught, and an attempt to disarm hostiles has, therefore, proved abortive. Gross, Chief of the Blackfeet, was lately arrested for harboring and supplying hostiles. The Indians threatened rescue, but the garrison was too well prepared to resist, and so the attempt was not made.

THE SOUTH.

Fort Smith, Ark., has again been the scene of a wholesale hanging, the victims, as usual, being Indians. Four of the noble red men were executed on Friday, the 8th inst., making sixteen criminals that have been hung on the same spot and on the same gallows within the period of twelve months.

Ex-Gov. Henry A. Wise, of Virginia, died last week at his residence in Richmond, after a protracted illness.

The yellow fever has become seriously epidemic in Savannah, Ga., the deaths numbering from 18 to 25 per diem. There is said to be much suffering among the poor people, white and black.

WASHINGTON.

The officers of the Washington National Monument Society have executed a conveyance of all the rights and privileges of the society to the United States.

President Grant has issued the customary proclamation ratifying the reciprocity treaty with the Sandwich Islands, which was passed by the Senate last winter. It will, no doubt, be of great benefit to the Pacific slope, which is largely dependent on Kalakaua's dominions for its sugar supplies.

The thirty-fourth call for the redemption of 5-20 bonds of 1865, May and November, has just been issued from the Treasury Department. The call is for $10,000,000, as follows: Coupon bonds—$50, from No. 601 to No. 650, both inclusive; $100, from No. 2,501 to No. 5,600, both inclusive; $500, from No. 9,701 to No. 15,000, both inclusive; $1,000, from No. 25,001 to No. 33,950, both inclusive; total coupons, $7,000,000. Registered bonds—$100, from No. 65 to No. 1,100, both inclusive; $500, from No. 1,051 to No. 1,400, both inclusive; $1,000, from No. 1,801 to No. 5,700, both inclusive; $5,000, from No. 1,551 to No. 2,800, both inclusive; $10,000, from No. 2,101 to No. 3,100, both inclusive; total registered, $3,000,000; aggregate, $10,000,000. The principal and accrued interest on these bonds will be paid Dec. 12, after which date interest will cease.

Congressman Walker, of Virginia, has purchased Gen. Belknap's residence for $[illegible],000.... The work of withdrawing the 5 and 6 per cent. bonds deposited by national banks to secure circulation still continues.... It is certain that negotiations are pending for a new treaty with Great Britain which will be chiefly devoted to extradition. It is understood that the initial steps have been taken by Great Britain. It is safe to say that in any new treaty which may be submitted, Great Britain will be bound to place the United States officials upon the same footing with her own. This has not been the case under the treaty which is now abandoned.

GENERAL.

The steamer Arbitrator, from New Orleans for Liverpool, struck an iceberg on the 23d of August, and foundered in twenty minutes. The passengers and crew were all saved.... The stock of oil in the oil regions, as gauged under the supervision of the Exchanges of Titusville, Oil City, Parker's, and Petrolia, is 3,164,000 barrels.

Gen. Sherman has expressed the opinion that the Indian troubles will all be settled this winter by whipping the Indians into a lasting peace.

A Madrid dispatch furnishes the following additional particulars of the arrest of William M. Tweed: "Capt. Gen. Jovellar, at Havana, received intelligence that Tweed had disembarked at Santiago de Cuba, and notified the authorities there. Before the latter could take action, Tweed embarked on the sailing-vessel Carmen, bound to Vigo. Capt. Gen. Jovellar telegraphed to the Madrid Government, which, fearing that the Carmen might go into some other port, requested the authorities at all Spanish ports to examine persons on board of all vessels named Carmen. There are twelve Spanish vessels of that name. A portrait of Tweed being indispensable, the Spanish authorities obtained and made copies of a caricature in an American journal representing him as beating a child, supposed to typify American justice. The caricature led the Spanish authorities and reporters of the Spanish papers to believe that Tweed had been kidnapping children. Hence, in the first official announcement received of the arrest of "Twid, Antelmi," a supposed telegraphic corruption of Tweed, American, it was stated that he had been arrested for kidnapping American children."

The proposed scheme to form a telegraph line between New York and Paris has fallen through, failing to receive the necessary subscriptions.... The International rifle match at Creedmoor has resulted in a substantial victory for the American team, which won by 22 in a score of 3,126 points. The second prize is awarded to the Irish team, which made 3,104. The result gives satisfaction to all the parties interested, except the delegation from the land of the thistle, who protested against the Americans enlisting the services of Gildersleeve and Bodine at the last moment.

POLITICAL.

Complete returns of the Vermont Gubernatorial vote give Fairbanks 44,585; Bingham, 21,035; scattering, 23. Fairbanks' majority, 23,527.... The President has appointed S. S. Fry United States Marshal for Kentucky, and J. R. G. Pitkin United States Marshal for Louisiana, vice Packard, resigned.

The Greenbackers of Ohio met in State Convention at Columbus last week, and, after discussing the matter, decided not to put a State ticket in the field. Gen. Sam Cary was present, and spoke earnestly against a State ticket, claiming that as many of the prominent greenback men of the State had participated in the late State Democratic Convention of Ohio, which adopted a greenback plank in the platform, it would be unwise to go back on that platform.... The Delaware Democrats have nominated James Williams for reelection to Congress.... The Independent Greenback party of Connecticut have nominated the following State ticket: For Governor, Charles Atwater; Lieutenant Governor, Francis Gillette; Secretary of State, Lucien M. Pinney; Treasurer, Loren T. Judd; Comptroller, John A. Peck. John P. Philips and Henry S. Pratt were chosen Electors-at-large.... The Woman Suffragists of Massachusetts held a State Convention at Boston last week, and nominated John J. Baker for Governor.

The New York Democratic State Convention, to nominate a candidate for Governor in place of Mr. Seymour, who declined, met at Saratoga on the 13th inst., and nominated Lucien Robinson by acclamation.... Ben Butler has been nominated for Congress by the Republicans of the Seventh Massachusetts District.

The Republicans of South Carolina have nominated Gov. Chamberlain for re-election.

FOREIGN.

The following are the particulars of the arrest of William M. Tweed, as furnished by a cable dispatch from Madrid, Spain: It was found, in July last, that Tweed was in Santiago de Cuba, having passed there from Havana. Gen. Jovellar was applied to by the American Consul to have Tweed secured and sent to the United States. Gen. Jovellar was quite willing, even in the absence of an extradition treaty, to oblige the American Government, in return for their courtesy in the Arguelles case, some years ago. Tweed, however, was apprised in Santiago of his impending danger, and sailed for Vigo, Spain, July 27, on board the sailing vessel Carmen. Mr. Cushing thereupon notified the Spanish Government of this fact, and found them willing to arrest Tweed and return him to Cuba, or deliver him up to the American Consul. Every precaution was taken by the Spanish Government to secure Tweed's arrest in any port of Spain or on any coast line by which he might arrive. Severe orders were given to local authorities, especially those of Vigo the Galician coast. The Carmen hove in sight off Vigo, on Sept. 6, and was immediately boarded by the Governor of Pontevedra. The Governor at once recognized Tweed from photographs which he had in his possession for some time previous to the arrival of the fugitive. Tweed was entered on the ship's papers as Secor, and was accompanied by a man giving his name as William Hunt, who is said to be his nephew. Both were immediately secured and thrown into the Calaboza, under a strong guard, but were subsequently transferred, by order, to a fortress in Vigo, under command of the Captain General.

The Turks recently met a large body of Montenegrins in battle on the banks of the Monatecha river. When repulsed, a portion of the Turks were cut off from the fords. They were driven into an angle between the two fords and pushed into the river, which runs between perpendicular and rocky banks. The Turkish artillery was ineffectual to check the pursuit, and the slaughter was great. Eight hundred Turks were left dead on the field, and upward of 1,000 were drowned. The Montenegrins lost 300 in killed and wounded.

Anarchy and revolution are again raising their heads in South America. The Colombian republic is in a state of siege, and its dismemberment is feared. At Lima, Peru, the services of troops were required to suppress a mob which made an attack on the residence of the ex-President, after having rifled a large mercantile house of a quantity of arms and ammunition.

The London Times, in reviewing the situation at the East, gravely observes that the effect produced by recent reports of the horrible outrages committed in Bulgaria and other Turkish provinces is of a most serious and startling character. It intimates that not only in Russia, but in other European countries, public sentiment is assuming a dictatorial character which can hardly be ignored by the rulers, and that it would require little additional aggravation to bring down upon Turkey a retribution that would end only with the utter dismemberment of the empire.

A Constantinople dispatch says fifteen Turkish officers, who are implicated in the Bulgarian atrocities, have been sent there under guard. They are the leaders indicated in the report of Blacque Bey, who has been investigating the atrocities. It is said Blacque Bey's report admits that the atrocities were indescribably horrible, and that the report will be suppressed.... Serious riots are reported in Amsterdam, caused by the Government suppressing a fair.... Internal troubles are again imminent in Spain. This time it is in the Basque provinces, where the greatest dissatisfaction prevails, growing out of the modification of the old laws, "fueros," by the Cortes.

Russia is endeavoring to induce the Bulgarians to emigrate to the Crimea, where the population is decreasing on account of the extirpation of Musselmen Tartars, who get settlements in the Greek provinces of Turkey.

THE ORIENT.

Interesting Budget of News from China and Japan.

By the arrival of the steamer City of Peking at San Francisco we have dates from Shanghae to Aug. 15, and Yokohama, Aug. 23.

CHINA.

The report of the massacre in Kingkuohier is fully confirmed. The Roman Catholic Church was destroyed, the officiating priest tortured and killed, and his assistant torn in pieces. Dead bodies were taken from the graves and defiled, and hundreds of the congregation were slain. The French Minister is taking active steps to secure the punishment of the guilty parties, among whom are numerous officials of rank. Several other assaults and murders of Christians have followed, and forty buildings were destroyed. The damage to property is estimated at $60,000.

The difficulty with England still continues unsettled. The authority recently granted by the Peking Government to Viceroy Shen, of Nanking, proves to be insufficient, and the British Minister having signified his dissatisfaction, Viceroy Le Hung Chang has been appointed to confer. The latter official, however, postpones visiting Chifu, the place of meeting, and it is reported that he is detained in Tientsin by the fear of violence from his own subordinates, who bitterly oppose submission to the British demands. The situation appears more critical daily. The Taku forts are strongly reinforced and the Peiho river is obstructed. The Chinese Government is greatly embarrassed by the renewed revolts and intrigues of secret societies, and by the want of money; the native bankers refusing to make further advances.

JAPAN.

By order of the Government most of the restrictions upon travel to the ancient capital Kioto and vicinity will be removed Sept. 1.

The export duty upon Japanese paper is abolished.

The famous temples of Kawiakura, near Yokohama, in decay for many years, are to be restored by the Government.

A Buddhist mission has sailed from Yeddo for the Loo Choo Islands.

E. Peshine Smith, the legal adviser of the Japanese Foreign Office during the past six years, returns to America by the City of Peking. He received distinguished marks of attention on taking his leave.

The prolonged drought causes great injury to the rice and other crops.

The Supply of Cattle.

The annexed table shows the number of cattle in the States and Territories named, in 1860 and 1875:

Was It a Theft?

"See that! see that!" exclaimed an anxious-acting man as he grasped a policeman's arm on the Chicago base-ball grounds one day this week.

"Wh—what?" said the blue-coat.

"Why, that fellow stealing there—stealing—"

"No; wh—where?" demanded the officer, as he grabbed his club and danced around.

"Why, there"—explained the citizen, pointing to the grounds—"that player there—stealing a base!"

The policeman gave the fellow a withering look, and then wilted.—Chicago Journal.

Matrimony at the Hub.

There were but 3,416 marriages in Boston last year, a decrease of 632 from the previous year, and of these 92 grooms and 70 brides were under the legal marriageable age. The births also were fewer—11,082, or a decrease of 697, the ratio to population being 1 in 31.02. The males exceeded the females by 262, and there were 81 twin births. The deaths were 1,146 more than the year previous, 8,958 in all; and, according to sex, the male deaths were in the ratio of 1 in 35.03 of the male population, and the female deaths but 1 in 40.34 of the female population.

Paint.

The early Massachusetts fathers did not believe in paint. The Rev. Thomas Allen, of Charlestown, was brought up in 1630 for "having paint about his dwelling," and only escaped by showing that it was done before his time, and that he disapproved of it. The first Boston church was never painted, and a list of Boston mechanics, in 1670, does not include a painter. This abomination did not become common until after the revolution.

There are over 100 millionaires in California.

BOLD HIGHWAYMEN.

Particulars of the Robbers' Foray at Northfield, Minn.—The Story of the Tragedy as Told by Eye-Witnesses.

[From the St. Paul Pioneer-Press.]

THE STRUGGLE IN THE BANK.

Mr. Heywood occupied the Cashier's seat at the desk at the end of the counter. Mr. Bunker and myself occupied seats at the desk, Mr. Bunker being nearest the opening at the corner. The first thing we knew the three men were upon or over the counter, one of them exclaiming: "Throw up your hands, for we intend to rob the bank, and if you halloo we will blow your G—d d—n brains out," and we could not do otherwise than comply.

They then asked which was the cashier, to which Mr. Heywood replied, "He is not in." They then sprang over the counter and demanded that the safe be opened. Addressing each one in turn, they said, "You are the cashier," which was denied. Seeing Heywood seated at the cashier's desk, one of the ruffians went up to him with his long, narrow-barreled pistol and said, "You are the cashier; now open the safe you —— —— son of a ——." Mr. Heywood said, "It is a time lock and cannot be opened now." One of the men then went into the vault, the door being open, also the outer door of the safe. Heywood at once sprang forward and closed the door of the vault, shutting the robber in, when another of the men seized Heywood by the collar and dragged him away from the door and released the incarcerated robber.

The man who came out of the vault—a slim, dark-complexioned man with a black mustache, then called to the other to seize the silver which was lying loose (about $15) and put it in the sack. They did not do this, but seized about $12 in scrip and put it into a two-bushel flour sack which they had with them. The dark-complexioned man, who appeared to be the leader, then again attacked Heywood, insisting upon his opening the safe, threatening to cut his throat if he did not, and actually drawing a big knife across his throat. The heroic and faithful teller, however, was not to be deterred from his duty, and would rather sacrifice his life than betray his trust. Some few moments—it seemed ages to the bewildered and terror-stricken lookers-on—were spent in Heywood's struggle to break from the murderous villain and gain his liberty. At length he broke away, and regaining his feet ran toward the door, crying "murder!" The man at once struck him with a pistol and knocked him down, and dragged him to the safe door commanding him to open it. But the intrepid clerk stolidly refused, when the villain shot at him but did not hit him. Evidently the shot was intended to intimidate rather than to injure, but the scoundrel had reckoned without his host, for the effect was lost upon Heywood. But upon the discharge of the pistol Bunker made a start for the back door and ran for dear life, one of the robbers pursuing and firing, the shot taking effect in the shoulder. Bunker, however, reached the street (Water street) and ran to Dr. Coombs' office.

During the whole of this time four or five men were riding up and down the street, shooting in every direction and keeping up an incessant fusilade. One of the men outside came riding up furiously and called for the men to leave the bank. "The game is up," he said, "and we are beaten."

THE RETREAT.

Almost immediately they took the alarm and somehow jumped over the counter, making their exit. The small man was last to go. He mounted a desk at the front, and as he turned to go fired a shot at Heywood, which I do not think is the one that took effect. Heywood dodged behind his desk, or sank into his chair (Heywood's desk stands at right angles to the bank desk, and he sat sideways to the opening at the front, with his back next to the wall), and as the robber made over the desk railing he turned, and, placing his revolver to Heywood's head, fired, shooting him dead. He staggered forward and fell behind the counter. The robbers made out of the door. I do not remember much more that followed.

Wilcox was not sure whether the ruffian struck Heywood when the latter staggered to the cashier's chair, and he did not stop to see if he was dead when he fell. He said the reason he did not try to get out or help Heywood was that one of the men stood over him with a pistol in his hand.

THE BATTLE IN THE STREET.

The statement of Mr. G. E. Bates, who witnessed that part of the affair which occurred in the streets, is interesting. Mr. Bates said that about 11 o'clock his attention was called to four men who came from over the river. They came over the bridge and were mounted on four splendid horses. The men were well-dressed, and, Mr. Bates says, four nobler looking fellows he never saw; but there was a reckless, bold swagger about them that seemed to indicate that they would be rough and dangerous fellows to handle. Altogether he did not like the looks of them. Again, at about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, as he was standing at the entrance of the store, talking to Mr. C. C. Waldo, commercial traveler from Council Bluffs, he saw the same men ride past—three came up street from Mill square, and one down street, meeting within thirty feet of the bank. They dismounted and tied their horses to the hitching-posts, and two, he thought, went into the bank and two went down to the staircase leading up into the upper stories of Lee & Hitchcock's buildings, and here they stood leaning against the banisters, talking. Commenting upon their fine physique, and upon their unusually good mounts, Mr. Bates and Mr. Waldo withdrew to the far end of the store to look over some sample trusses. They had not long been so occupied when they heard several shots fired in rapid succession, and the thought flashed upon the mind of Bates at once that the bank was in danger—Mr. Waldo stating that he cried out: "Them men are going for the town; they mean to rob the bank," although Mr. Bates does not recollect saying anything, he became so excited. He remembers, however, rushing to the door and seeing some men riding up from the bank—they came riding toward him with long pistols in their hands and called out, "Get in there, you son of a——"

Mr. Bates at once seized a shot-gun and ran back to the door, but the gun would not go off. He then put down the gun and seized a fine seven-shooter which was not loaded, and as the men came down again, (they were riding to and fro, evidently intent upon keeping people from going toward the bank), he standing behind the door-jambs, cried out, "Now, I've got you," and pointed an empty pistol as if drawing a bead on them. They turned their horses suddenly and fired at Mr. Bates, the balls crushing through the plate glass. This ruse he practiced over and over again with the same effect. There were other men at the bank firing down the street. The next he saw was Mr. J. S. Allen running down the street from the bank, and two shots were fired at him.

Mr. Manning, of Mill square, whose store is in the same block as the bank, next came upon the scene. He ran out of his store with a Remington repeating rifle, and took a deliberate aim, and fired from the corner, Mr. Bates calling out, "Jump back now, or they'll get you." Next Mr. J. B. Hine came up with a double-barrelled shot-gun and discharged the two barrels, and retired to reload. Rev. Phillips also took a turn at the scoundrels, and L. Stacey delivered a cool, deliberate aim. Mr. Bates next heard a report over his head and saw one of the desperadoes fall from his horse. The horse made a faltering plunge forward and then suddenly stopped and the man pitched over on his face to the ground, and in a few moments was dead. This shot was fired by Henry Wheeler, from an old carbine, from out one of the windows of the Dampier House, from the very room in which this report is written. Mr. Manning was still firing, and as he crept to the corner to fire, Mr. Waldo called "Take good aim before you fire." Immediately after this shot, one of the horses started up the street, and the rider began to reel and sway to and fro, and suddenly fell to the ground just opposite Eldridge's store. Another horseman immediately rode up, dismounted, and spoke to the prostrate man, who was stretched out at full length, supporting himself on his outstretched arms, when he rolled over on his back. Then the other man took from him his cartridge-belt and two pistols, and, remounting his horse, rode off.

Another horseman, finding Mr. Manning's fire too hot, dismounted from his horse, and got on the opposite side of it for protection, when an unerring ball from the Remington brought the horse down, the man running behind some boxes which were piled beneath the staircases before mentioned, and now ensued a lively fusilade between this fellow and Manning, the scoundrel keeping himself well under cover. But a ball from Wheeler's musket struck the fellow in the leg, half way above the knee. He at once changed his pistol to the left hand and grasped the wounded limb with the right, still trying to get at Manning. Finding himself getting weak he turned and limped off up the street, but seeing Bates with a pistol in his hand, he sent a ball whizzing toward that gentleman, grazing the the side of his cheek and the bridge of his nose, and burying itself in a collar box in the store. Mr. Bates says he feels the ring of that ball in his ear still, and the ball, he says, he will ever keep as a souvenir of the hottest day Northfield ever saw.

The man limped away as he got opposite to Mr. Morris' store, when he cried out to his retreating companions, "My God, boys, you are not going to leave me—I am shot." One of the party riding a sorrel horse with light tail and mane, turned and took the wounded man up behind him.

THE DEAD BRIGANDS.

During Friday forenoon the robbers were stripped of their clothing and washed clean, preparatory to the coroner's inquest, which took place at about 11 o'clock. The coroner's jury, after a short deliberation, rendered a verdict in accordance with the facts previously sent you. On the body of the shortest man was found a fine Howard gold watch, worth at least $175, a pocket map of Minnesota, purchased of Williams Bros., Minneapolis, a pocket compass, and $5.75 in currency; gold sleeve buttons, with enameled leaf on the face, and a plain gold ring. The possession of the map would seem to indicate that the dead man was one of, or the principal leader of the gang.

The larger man of the two killed had nothing in his possession except a fine gold Watham watch and 10 cents in currency.

On the person of the smallest was found an article from the Northfield paper describing the Vale chonometer lock and safe just procured by the bank.

How He Was Going to the Centennial.

Those colored residents of Raleigh who were talking of an excursion to the Centennial have about given up the subject. The idea originated with a gray-haired "uncle" who didn't expect to live another hundred years, and who, it turned out, had a private ax to grind. He planned the excursion on the co-operative principle. To a crowd of his friends he explained:

"I reckon de expenses at $50. Fifty of us will frow in $1 each, an' I will go down thar. When I git back we will frow in another dollar aroun', and de next man kin go, an' we'll keep the system goin' till de hull caboodle hez bin down thar."

The idea took at once and was freely talked over, but was knocked in the head at a second meeting by a brother asking:

"Uncle Ike, how long does you expect to be gone?"

"Only two weeks," he replied; each one will be gone just two weeks."

"If thar's fifty of us an' each one is gone two weeks, what part of de show will de last man see?" was the blunt query.

"Uncle Ike tried to convince them that dates and figures were made for mere convenience sake, and the crowd thinned out so rapidly that he was soon left alone. When he had seen the last man turn the corner, he sighed a sad sigh and muttered:

"Iguess I'll have to go widout dat razor for another year. Dese here niggers seem like day hadn't any genius."—Raleigh Sentinel.

THE OCTOBER ELECTIONS.

A List of the Candidates in the Field.

The remaining States to hold elections previous to the grand contest in November are Ohio, Indiana, Iowa, Nebraska, Georgia, and West Virginia. The elections in these States will occur on Tuesday, Oct. 10. With the exception of Nebraska, we present below a complete list of the candidates to be voted for on that day:

Germination from Seed Two Thousand Years Old.

A most interesting observation, referring to the power of germination in seed which is hundreds, or even thousands of years old, is said to have been made by Prof. Hendreich, in Greece. In the silver mines of Laurium, only the slags left by the ancient Greeks are at present worked off, in order to gain, after an improved modern method, silver still left in that dross. This refuse ore is probably about two thousand years old. Among it the seed of a species of glaucium or poppy was found, which had slept in the darkness of the earth during all that time. After a little while, when the slags were brought up and worked off at the melting ovens, there suddenly arose a crop of glaucium plants, with a beautiful yellow flower, of a kind unknown in modern botany, but which is described by Pliny and others as a frequent flower in ancient Greece.—London Examiner.

The Best He Could Do.

A deacon living in a Berkshire town was requested to give his prayers in behalf of a poor man with a large family who had broken his leg. "I can't stop now to pray," said the deacon (who was picking and barreling his early apples for the city market), "but you can go down into my cellar and get some corned-beef, salt-pork, potatoes and butter—that's the best I can do."

TILDEN AND REFORM.

Great Speech of Hon. D. W. Voorhees, at Greencastle, Ind.

A Scathing Arraignment of Grantism.

Why a Change of Administration is Necessary.

The Tall Sycamore Pays His Respects to Bloody-Shirt Morton.

Never in the whole course of my life have I known such audiences to gather together as are now gathering to listen to public discussion, upon the brief notices that have been given. There is a philosophy and a reason for all things, if you look at them calmly and fairly. The reason why the good county of Putnam—and when I speak to you as the people of Putnam, I speak not merely to my Democratic brethren; I speak to them, it is true, with a warm, embracing affection; but I likewise speak to my Republican friends, for whom I have nothing but kind words here to-day; I speak to my Independent friends, if they are here, for whom I have entire respect and personal kindness—I say to you, one and all, that the reason why the people are moving is that they have waked up from the very foundations to the necessity of a change in the civil administration of your Government. A change is demanded by every interest that you hold dear, and from one ocean to the other, this hour, the prevailing thought in honest men's minds is that things have gone far enough in the direction they have been going so long, and that there ought to be a change; that a change cannot make matters worse, and may make matters far better. That is the prevailing sentiment of the public mind.

GETTING TO BUSINESS.

My fellow-countrymen, who is it that promises you a change? Does the Republican party? Many an honest Republican in Putnam county has consoled himself for his disappointment in Grant's administration by whispering to his own heart, "Yes, but Hayes won't follow in his footsteps; there will be a change from Grantism by the election of Hayes." Who promises you that event? Who asserts that? I hold in my hand the Cincinnati platform; I have it here. My good Republican brother, if you think you are going to get a change in Hayes' administration, let me read you something that will disabuse your mind.

[Mr. Voorhees here read from the last plank in the Republican platform the portion indorsing Gen. Grant's administration.]

INDORSING GRANT.

Let me ask, right here, a personal question, addressed to any individual Republican upon this ground. Is there a Republican in the county of Putnam who unqualifiedly indorses Grant's administration of your civil affairs, domestic and foreign? The platform at Cincinnati does it. It says that "he is worthy of commendation for his administration of our civil government, both domestic and foreign." I don't believe that at this hour there is an intelligent and candid Republican in the county of Putnam who believes that resolution states the truth. For if there is any one thing more and better understood than another in this country, it is that Grant's administration is tapering to a close, an utter and universally-conceded failure. In every respect the confidence of the people is broken in it. But it is indorsed by the platform on which Hayes is nominated and must be elected, if he is elected, and what promise even have you Republicans that you are to have a change under Gen. Hayes? They indorse the backward flight of eight years in Grant's administration. They say all is well, when you know that all is not well. They say he deserves commendation, when you know that he deserves condemnation. They say he managed our domestic affairs in a manner calculated for the benefit of the people. Why, look for a moment back. I could stand here and occupy two hours reciting those acts of his administration which have met not merely with the condemnation of the Democratic party and the Democratic press, but of the Republican press as well. I can take the New York Tribune, the Cincinnati Commercial, the Springfield Republican and the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, and in the last eight years I can drag forth from their columns condemnation of every feature of Grant's administration, personal and political; assailing his personal honesty in connection with the collection of the revenue, the San Domingo job, the sale of the French arms. Everything that was ever hurled at an administration can be proved against his by the leading Republican journals of the United States. Why, then, should they say that there is to be a change and a reformation if Hayes is elected, when the very convention that nominated Hayes indorsed the administration which they had condemned? There is no change in that direction. The cry in the land is for reform. There is no reform in that direction.

DISCOUNTS HAYES.

My fellow-citizens, the influences which have controlled Grant would control a hundred men like Hayes. Grant has more iron force in his little finger than there is in the whole body of Rutherford B. Hayes. I served in Congress with Gen. Hayes. I have no unkind word to speak of him. He is a man whose personal integrity I do not question; but I say with all respect to him and to his friends, he is the smallest man that ever was thought of, much less spoken of, in connection with the Presidency of the United States. [Laughter.] The Mortons, the Logans, the Conklings, and the other powerful men of the party, who have dictated and shaped the course pursued by this little square-jawed man who is now President, would have no more difficulty in shaping the policy and conduct of Hayes' administration than you would have in shaping the policy of your youngest child at home. The same old political leaders will surround him, the same influences will prevail, the same men will be at the helm and at the front, and instead of improvement by turning Grant out and putting Hayes in, it will be only consolidating, confirming and continuing Grant's administration four years longer under a different name.

A TUB TO THE WHALE.

Then, gentlemen, if I have sufficiently shown that the Republican party do not even pretend to offer you a change, do not even pretend that they are going to reform the Government, I will pass on to some other things. What else do you see? Do you pretend to say that there is not much need of change? Look abroad throughout this country. Look at the labor out of employment, hundreds of thousands of men and women that are without wages with which to procure bread, the whole Government in a state requiring administrative statesmanship to restore confidence, health and prosperity. Why, a change in itself is always desirable. What, then, do we promise? If, my friends, change is desirable in every sense of the word, it becomes me, after showing you that the Republican party offers no change; after showing you that they do not even condescend to offer a change; after showing you that, it becomes me to take another step and show you something else. Does the Republican party promise on solid grounds and in a faithful way, such as to win your confidence, a purification of the civil service of your Government? I am here to talk candidly with you old men, and if my party promised nothing better than there does I would say there was but little to gain in a change. Yes, there would be something still. A change, in itself, for the sake of a change, is a good thing. When an atmosphere becomes laden with poisonous vapors, and a storm rises in the West, and the thunder is heard and the lightning seen, you know that there will be a change in the air, and that health will come in the track of that change. It is sometimes the same in politics. The Republicans have been in power so long that the political atmosphere is laden with poison. Theft, plunder, peculation and fraud are in the air, as you well know. You cannot tap the body politic without evidence of corruption coming to the surface and pouring out. When men have held office as long as the Republican party has—for fifteen years—holding all the offices of the Government, they become derelict in duty; they become negligent. They feel themselves set aside as a favored class, to hold the offices and draw the salaries, and that the people have nothing to do except to bestow the offices upon them and pay taxes to feed them and theirs. And if nothing else was to be accomplished this year except to drive out the old set and put in a new set, it would be a purification to a certain extent; and then, at the end of four years, if your party and mine does one-tenth part as bad as their party has done, I will be first to join you to turn them out and put somebody else in, and see how they can do.

The law of change is a healthful law. A person sick in one chamber often feels a benefit by merely being changed into some other room or some other place. You farmers know the benefit of changing crops in your fields from corn to wheat and wheat to clover. This Republican party has been pasturing too long in the fields at Washington. They ought to be turned out and some other kind of stock put in their place. [A voice, "The land is worn out."]

THE DEMOCRATIC HOUSE.

Well, we have had our Democratic convention. We have likewise had something else, old Democrats of Putnam. We have had a Democratic House of Representatives for the first time in sixteen years. For the first time in sixteen years the people have trusted the popular branch of the American Congress to the Democracy. I admit to you that with that trust reposed in our hands came heavy responsibilities, and we have got to meet them, and we have got to show the people how we have met them, or we will stand condemned. No party can survive or ought to survive that can't make an honest showing of the trust reposed in its hands. The Democratic party has been out of power for sixteen years. Have we met our duty since we were called to power? It is said that there were many members of that House who served in the Confederate army and the Confederate Congress: that there were fifty or sixty of them. Yes, that is so, too. How could it be otherwise, unless you desired to destroy your Union of States? This Government is a Government of States. Each State is guaranteed by the constitution certain representatives, and the people of those States are guaranteed the right to choose those representatives. Now, would you have them choose niggers, scallawags, and carpet-bag robbers down there, or would you have them choose men of known and high character, even though they have been in the Confederate army?

But let us come a little closer. Let us see whether they have been hurt any by this Democratic Congress. I come to talk facts and figures to you. Sixteen years of Republican rule have piled up, step by step, your Government expenses, until you have been the heaviest burdened people for your civil service of any people beneath the sun. On the adjournment of this Congress a few days ago, a solemn fact went into history. It went into history that the first reduction in the appropriation of the people's money that has been made for sixteen years has been made by this much abused, traduced and maligned Democratic House of Representatives. Congress adjourned after relieving you and other tax-payers of the United States of $30,000,000 of taxes, as compared with the last year. Go home and tell that to your neighbors. Walk erect, look them in the face and tell them what the Democratic party has done to win the public confidence. It has done what the Republican party has never done. It has reduced the burden of the people in the support of their Government in one session $30,000,000. Thirty million dollars, my Republican friends. Show me where you have reduced it one dollar. If it had not been for a Republican Senate and a Republican President the reduction would have been sixty millions instead of thirty millions. And there is not a single branch of the Government that is going to suffer. All will go on as well or better than before. Some useless office-holders will be put out and lose their places. Some foreign Ministers and Consuls will have to come home and earn an honest living instead of loafing about foreign capitals where they have no more to do than I would about your farm if I didn't know how to plow.

THIRTY MILLION REASONS.

I don't come here and ask you to trust the Democratic party, my Republican and Independent friends, without giving you good reasons for it. There are thirty millions of reasons in the measure I have spoken of to you—all solid reasons, every one of them a dollar in the market. [Laughter and applause.] Nobody will dispute that, but when you stick that fact at a speaker of the Morton stripe, he will tell you that there has been a nigger killed down South, or something of the kind. [Renewed laughter.] I can tell you of a good many white men killed in Indiana, but a white man living here in the interior of the State don't amount to anything. It takes a black man here on the other side of the river to raise a first-class muss when he gets into trouble. It does seem to me that people had better look at home and reform in quarters where they can save money, so that, instead of giving your wife $5 to go shopping, you will have $10 next time.

It is something remarkable that this Republican party, talking loud and long about its patriotism, only succeeded in making the appropriations every year a little higher until this much-abused old Democratic party got there with its representatives, and not very well organized either. We can do a great deal better next time. They have just been learning how, this last session. Give the Democratic party a full chance; give it a President as well as a House of Representatives, and after a while, a Senate, and you will see old-fashioned times, and old-fashioned economy. And remember the power is in your hands. If the Democratic party should betray you and become faithless and corrupt as the Republican party is, you can just give it a whipping and turn it out, too. But this year is a good year to give this Radical urchin a good licking and turn him out and put some one else in.

But, gentlemen, what else has this Democratic House of Representatives done? We could stop and feel right comfortable upon the record made in reducing Government expenses. I have always thought that the legislator who saved a man a dollar that he had worked hard and sweated for was the man to vote for next time. I may be mistaken. It may be that it is the fellows that indorse Grant's administration, that put it up instead of down, whom we should support. It may be that you want to vote for these fellows that have brought your debts back to you every year. No, I guess not. My old friend here shakes his head very emphatically. I have heard from one precinct on that subject. No, you will vote in the direction of economy and for those Representatives who have assisted in these measures. You will, all of you down here in Putnam, vote to send Frank Landers back. I should not think that anybody would vote against him and vote for a party that indorses all the fraud and high taxes that have resulted from Grant's administration. But let us go a little further. There was a good deal of doubt in the public mind whether this Democratic House of Representatives would stand up to the St. Louis platform on the resumption question. There was a fear in the public mind, and I shared it somewhat, that we did not understand ourselves well enough there at Washington to produce harmonious action against this Resumption act. But our Democratic brethren—although, as I told you, they were not very well used to the harness of legislation, having been out of office for some time—at last got together and passed an act repealing the Resumption act, which says: "On a given day you have got to come to specie payment, whether you are ready for it or not." Pretty good. You may say that they only repealed the day on which resumption is to take place. That is all there is of it, for when you repeal the time at which resumption is to take place, all the scaffolding by which you may reach that resumption must fall down. If you resolve not to finish your house this year and make no preparation to finish it any time, the scaffolding around the walls may just as well be taken down. So that the Resumption act is to-day a dead letter. There were some sections in it providing for certain action on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury, certain measures of contraction in order to reach resumption on a given day. We have said we are not going to resume on that day, so far as the Democratic party is concerned, and we do not fix any day except whenever the people's true interests require it, and then we are for it. Let there be no more contraction and no more inflation, but let the laws of trade and business regulate the matter. That is the St. Louis platform. That is its ratification by a Democratic House of Representatives. Of course the act is not repealed, for the reason that the Republicans have a majority in the Senate, and they won't repeal it or do anything else that hurts the bondholders in Wall street, and the like. They will never pass any measure to help you. My Republican friend, don't you wish they would repeal this measure? Sincerely and truly, don't you wish they would, with all your heart, because I know there are some of you listening to me, as you always kindly do? Don't you wish that the Senate would join in with what the House has done and repeal this Resumption act, which has been depressing and destroying your business so long?

But I have not told you all that the Democratic House of Representatives has done. I know there has been an idea disseminated industriously that the Democratic House of Representatives was a failure. I welcome such failures. I thank God for just such failures as they have been. Their heavy reduction of taxes, their repeal of the Resumption act, is not quite all. By a vote of two to one that Democratic House said that the old, round, bright silver dollar should again go back to its place as a legal tender; that it had been good enough for the people for eighty years, and it must be good enough for all classes now. I noticed a good many leading Republican newspapers that indorsed that. If the Republicans were for it, why didn't the Senate pass the same measure the House passed? They were there; they can read and write; they knew what the House had done. They could have done the same thing in thirty minutes if they had wanted to. They didn't want to. They didn't want to, for fear some public creditor, some holder of public securities would have to take a dollar in silver that was worth a few cents less in market than a dollar in gold. The Democratic House, however, placed itself on the side of the people on that question as on these other questions.

Don't it begin to look as if it were well to be here. Don't it begin to look as if there was life in the old party yet when it has a chance? My Republican friend, you must remember that we have not had as much chance in the last sixteen years as you have had. You have had all the chance that has been going and you have made a poor job of it. [Laughter.] You had all the opportunities, and you have pretty nearly ruined the country, and if you have another opportunity, I think the next Presidential convention will be a vast jury of inquest upon the dead body of the people. You have had sixteen years of an opportunity, and what have you done? You say you put down the rebellion. You did? Morton says he did, I believe. [Laughter and applause.] The whole people put down the rebellion—Democrats and Republicans, and Republicans and Democrats—all did that, both by fighting in the field, by hiring substitutes, and by paying taxes; and if it had been simply a party measure, and a party measure alone, this Government would never have been restored.

But let us judge of Republican legislation during the last eleven years, in peace. Are you satisfied with what you have done during that time? We have had no opportunity to show you what we would do until last winter. We have come to you now, telling you and showing you what we have done in one session of Congress, with only one house of Congress, under the most adverse circumstances, with the Senate against us, with the President against us, with every Cabinet officer against us, with every source of information locked up against us; we show you what we have done, and everything we have done has been for the people and their interests.

TURNING OUT UNION SOLDIERS.

A word here in regard to another charge that is constantly brought against the Democratic House of Representatives. It was said throughout the land that when this so-called Confederate Congress met it turned out all the Union soldiers and replaced them in the subordinate positions of Congress with ex-Confederate soldiers. That lie traveled well. It was an able-bodied fellow. [Laughter.] Swift of foot, good lungs, it didn't get tired, and it filled the mouths of radical orators and furnished items for radical newspapers, until at last a careful statement has been prepared, and it has been found that the Forty-fourth Congress has twice as many Federal Union soldiers in its employ as door-keepers, clerks, and in all the subordinate positions, as the Forty-third Congress had, which was Republican. No greater falsehood was ever uttered than that Union soldiers were discriminated against by this House of Representatives. The very reverse is true.

Hostile to Union soldiers, they say. For when you drive them on the question of economy, when you drive them with my thirty millions of reasons for turning them out, when you drive them with the repeal of the Resumption act, when you drive them with the restoration of the silver dollar, they say, "Oh, well, they were disloyal, anyhow." Who is disloyal in this country? Disloyal to what and disloyal to whom? Do you think the public man who stands faithfully by the people, reduces their expenses, passes laws to protect them from plunder and robbery—do you think he can be disloyal? Is he not necessarily faithful to the Government? He can not be disloyal, and why? Because he is faithful to the sovereignty. The people are sovereign, and he who is faithful to the people can not be false to this Government. If this Congress has been faithful to the people, it can not be false to its Government, for this is a Government of the people.

Let me state to you another item. Owing to the long continuance of the war, and the manner of enlisting and volunteering recruits during the war, there was great inequality in the amount of bounties which the soldiers received for their services. Some soldiers going in at the last moment received three times as much bounty as others who were in at the start, and served until the last gun was fired. There are men within the sound of my voice that practically know that fact in their own cases. There has been an idea that that inequality ought to be remedied—that the veteran ought to get as much as the eleventh-hour man—and some three years ago Congress passed a bill through both Houses to equalize the bounties. Soldiers of Putnam county, the man whom your convention at Cincinnati indorsed vetoed that bill. He said it should never become a law, and it did not. You veterans who went in with the firing upon Sumter, wherever you are, would have been largely benefited by that measure, except for Grant's veto. The last Congress again agitated the subject, and the Democratic House of Representatives, true to right and justice, passed the bill again equalizing the bounties. The bill went into the House, and the Republican Senate that had once before passed it were afraid to encounter Grant's veto again. And so the bill died this session—died by Republican opposition in the Senate, and the opposition of a Republican President. It died, although indorsed by the popular branch of Congress; died, although the Democratic House, called disloyal, had passed it and sent it to the Senate, and yet you will have demagogues traveling over this country and saying that this House is eminently disloyal, and hostile to the soldiers of the Union. They know what they say is false when they utter the word.

MORTON'S PATENT.

I am not here to abuse anybody, to say unkind words of anybody. The truth is, that Gov. Morton has got out a patent for that kind of business, and I am willing he should. Some of you men here have heard me in former years say hard things. As years have passed over my head, and age has brought its experience, I have come to the deliberate conclusion that men are guided by principles, controlled by argument, induced to act by the power of logic, rather than by the power of coarse epithets and personal abuse. I expect to speak in this canvass throughout the State. It shall be my business to reason with the people on these questions, and leave to others whose interests incline them in that direction a monopoly of invectives and of epithets. When, however, these solid facts are to be confronted, they can not be successfully met by personal abuse and denunciation, nor do I believe the people want them met in that way. I don't believe the Republicans want such a canvass.

I see there is a fellow by the name of Kilpatrick in this State, who wrote to Hayes yesterday or day before, in which he says that a "bloody-shirt" campaign and "plenty of money" will enable them to carry Indiana. Oh, where has reason fled to? Tax-payers, voters, Christian men and women, do you want a campaign of hate? For that is the meaning of "bloody shirt," and of corruption, for that is the meaning of "plenty of money." "A bloody-shirt campaign," says Kilpatrick, writing to the Presidential candidate himself, "and plenty of money, and Indiana is safe." In other words, he says, "Make the Northern people hate their Southern brethren with all their might, and supply them with plenty of money, and we carry Indiana." I pray Almighty God, whose eye is upon us all, to avert from the hearts of this people, one and all, those elements of poor, fallen human nature, that can be appealed to by such inducements as these. Hate and furious revenge and lucre, and bloody-shirt and corruption.

STALE THINGS.

After eleven years of peace they have nothing better to offer this people than the old stale bitterness of a by-gone war with one hand, and a corruption fund with the other. The people ask for bread, and they offer you a stone. You ask for fish, and they give you worse than a serpent. A hissing serpent, hot from hell, in this doctrine of diabolical hate in this land of ours. It comes not from the skies. It comes from pits of eternal darkness below us. Let us walk in the light; let us elevate ourselves where Christian footsteps tend. They say there is bloodshed and strife in the South. We do not hear of it until an election is approaching. Then they produce trouble themselves between the whites and the blacks, because that gives them votes up here, and don't give us any. When a man is out of corn, in your neighborhood, and has not any, and you find corn missing from your crib, and the grains are sprinkled off toward his house, and you go over there and you see his horse eating good, big ears of corn, big, yellow ears, just like yours, those circumstances tend to convince you that he stole the corn. In a State like South Carolina, where every officer is Republican, from the Governor down, and the courts all Republican, and the Sheriffs all Republican, when you hear of a negro riot down there, and then have the consequences traced right up this way, like the corn, that is dropped on the ground for Northern use, and when it gets up there you find Morton and those other—I was going to say horses [laughter]—in the barn eating this corn, or in other words, digesting and using these negro riots as political diet and sustenance, living on it, fattening on it, glorying in it, it looks to me like they had a word in it from the beginning. [Laughter.] It is their argument. They fatten on it. We do not.

Why is it these troubles do not spring up in Democratic States in the South? You hear nothing of them in good old Virginia, or in Tennessee, or in Georgia—States governed by Democrats. But you strike Mississippi, where this son-in-law of Ben Butler's, Adelbert B. Ames, has been Military Governor for a year past, and he has lots of trouble on his hands. Whenever a grist is wanted by the Republicans in the North he grinds it out for them. Whenever Ben Butler telegraphs him: "The hopper is about empty; throw in some more," it is done without delay. The negroes are not to blame. I respect the negroes a thousand times more than I do that kind of whites. Bad white men could at any time induce them to arm themselves, put themselves in a lawless attitude and provoke trouble.

READY TO HANG WHITE MURDERERS.

Look at South Carolina. What is there to prevent Republican officials there from hanging these men if they have murdered negroes? I would hang a man for murdering a negro a little quicker than I would for murdering a white man, and I will tell you why. The negro is a helpless being in this country. He ought to be protected because he cannot protect himself as well as the white man can. I would make him a peculiar object of care. But when a Republican State, with Republican government and Republican courts, comes to Washington and says, through her Governor: "These men have killed five or six negroes in my State, and although I have got the courts and Judges, and I am the Governor and won't pardon, but will sign a death warrant, yet I must have Mr. Grant send an army down here," then I know that there is forked tongue about the whole story, and that it is gotten up for political purposes. Understand me, I am for law; I am for order here and everywhere, and if I had the time and inclination I could stand here for an hour and point you to outrages here in Indiana at the hands of lawless mobs greater than have taken place in any of these States that they complain so loudly about. In Illinois it is the same, and in Ohio the same, and I believe in Boston and in New England crime rears its ghastly head in the most frightful and malevolent shapes.

Human nature is an average the world over. There is no perfection anywhere. Men commit crime in the North; they violate law in the South. When men cease to violate law Paradise will be regained, the Garden of Eden that our forefathers lost will be restored, and the millennium will dawn and Christ will reign again for his thousand years. But while we are here in this awful flesh the workings of the old man Adam are about the same under the Northern and under the Southern sky, and everywhere. And the man who comes to you to blind your reason and obscure your interests by telling you that you have anything to do down South, that they can not regulate their own matters, and that you must vote with the party that is robbing you of millions and hundreds of millions on some questions that are pivoting down South—such a man is an inherent demagogue and is not honest. Let us have a campaign for ourselves. Let us look at home and determine what it is for our interest to do, and do that thing.

THE DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATES.

A few words, my fellow-citizens, in regard to our candidates. I have shown you our platform. I have shown you their platform, not only indorsing Grant, but [illegible] indorsing the Resumption act as well. I have shown you what a Democratic House has done, and I have shown you who has kept them from carrying out their works. I have come to you bearing fruits. My mere words here would be nothing. I must have something to show. You remember when the children of Israel had wandered long in the wilderness, they came and camped on the long-sought borders of Canaan. Moses had died on the mountain in sight of the land, and the angels had buried him, and the command had fallen upon Joshua, and there was discontent and doubt. They did not know whether it was worth while to go into the land of Canaan. They doubted whether it would not be better to stop in the wilderness. They had been there so long that the places were accustomed places to them, and they said among themselves that, although their lot may be hard where it was, they did not know that a change would benefit them any at all. So Joshua sent his spies into the land of Canaan to look at the country and see what it promised in the way of relief and deliverance to the tried and worn people of Israel escaping captivity. After a time these messengers of Joshua returned; they returned with the ripe and purple grapes of abundance in their hands; they showed that it was the land of corn and wine, of milk and honey, the land not merely filled of a promise, but the land of promise fulfilled.

So in this canvass the Democrats can turn to their Republican neighbor, and when asked, "What assurance have we that the change you invite us to will benefit us at all?" you can show them the fruits of one single Congress, fruits more promising and pleasant to the tried American tax-payer than were the grapes and pomegranates with which the messengers of Joshua returned to the camp of Israel.

We can show, to our Republican and Independent brethren the repeal of this odious Resumption act, the restoration of the silver dollar, the reduction of the Government expenses $30,000,000. We can show to the veteran soldier the payment of his bounty amounting to $8.33⅓ per month for all the time that he was in the service. These are our evidences of good faith. We are not making a promise here to break it hereafter. We intend to fulfill it.

TILDEN.

"But," says some one, "we have heard that Mr. Tilden has no right to the title of a reformer." Since Mr. Tilden's nomination I have carefully examined his record. Gov. Morton and Gen. Harrison say that he was a secessionist during the war. My only answer to that is two things: First, that such a charge was never made till he became a candidate for the Presidency; and, second, that two years ago he was elected Governor of the great and patriotic State of New York against Gen. John A. Dix, an officer of the war of 1812, and a distinguished officer of the late war, by more than 50,000 majority. Queer people in New York! They don't know that he was a secessionist down there. He has lived there sixty-three years—that is his age. He was there all during the war, and made speeches during the war, but they don't know that he is a secessionist there, or else he would not have beaten Gen. John A. Dix for Governor of New York, would he? Is New York "secesh" by 50,000 majority? Morton ought to have gone there two years ago and told them not to elect this secessionist over Gen. John A. Dix. If they had only found it out then, they would have beaten him for Governor, of course, and then we would not be troubled with him as a candidate for the Presidency. But they did not find it out then, and I will tell you why they didn't—because it wasn't true. I take the entire State, with an indorsement of 50,000 majority, as an answer to all that Morton and Harrison and their followers can say. When a man's neighbors at home say he is a good man, I care but little what anybody else says.

Now, Morton lives out here in the State of Indiana, and I would not say that he would state anything that he did not think was true. Oh, no! [Laughter.] It is not necessary for me to say that to you. [Renewed laughter.] And then the truth is, that always along in the month of August, just before a Presidential election, politicians of the "bloody shirt" order get like rattlesnakes and mad dogs. They say and do things they do not understand themselves. Morton, out here in the State of Indiana, says Tilden was a secessionist, and the people of New York State, by a majority of 50,000, say it is not so. I am willing to leave to you which you will believe.

Then let us go a step farther. What has Gov. Tilden done that entitles him to our confidence? I have his record here. I have the New York Times here—a leading Republican newspaper—that six or seven years ago announced to the world that the city and State of New York were more indebted to Samuel J. Tilden than to any one man in existence for the destruction of Wm. M. Tweed and his great ring of robbers. That was the estimation he was held in in Republican circles before he was nominated by the Democratic party. The truth is that Tilden did not merely go and hunt up somebody to charge Tweed with fraud and gigantic plunder, and then come in as a lawyer and prosecute him, as we lawyers generally do. He took a higher responsibility. He filed his own individual affidavit, signed Samuel J. Tilden and sworn to by himself, charging Tweed with enormous peculation, fraud and gigantic larcenies. On that affidavit he was arrested, and the ball was set in motion that never stopped until Tweed and his followers either languished in prisons under conviction, or pined in foreign lands, not daring to come home.

Those are the solemn facts before God. He burst that ring into a thousand fragments. A man of iron nerve and great capacity is Samuel J. Tilden; a man whose heart will never seduce his brain from the path of sternest rectitude in administering this Government. There will be no personal Government, as there has been under Grant. It will be a hard, unrelenting Government on the side of reformation and against rascals. He never stayed his hand until he purified and reformed the Government of the State of New York, and with that great record behind him, the people of New York, desiring other reforms, made him their Governor by this enormous majority of which I have spoken, and in less than two years after he was inaugurated Governor what do you behold? He took New York from Republican hands with a burden of $16,000,000 of annual taxation. In less than two years he reduced that taxation $8,000,000, in round terms. Has he not a right to the title of reformer? The man who, upon his own personal affidavit, broke the Tweed ring and made successful war upon the canal ring of New York, until its plunderers are likewise in prison or fugitives from justice.

I can trust him, and so can you. I can vote for him, and so can you. Mr. Tilden was not my original choice. I longed to see a citizen of this State nominated for the Presidency; but the manner in which Indiana was treated at St. Louis leaves no sting behind, no sense of personal defeat, and if Samuel J. Tilden shall be inaugurated President of the United States, the term "Reform" will not be an idle word. The man who reformed the city of New York, and reformed taxation from sixteen millions to eight millions in the State of New York, and reformed the canal ring until the predatory bands are scattered to the four winds, is the very man whose iron hand we want to hammer at the closed doors of corruption in those departments at Washington and make them give up their secrets, and drive out from their dens and hiding-places the plunderers of the people. I have hope that this will be. I see the dawn of a better day.

What Our Presidents Were Worth.

Washington left an estate valued at over $800,000; John Adams died moderately well off, leaving about $75,000; Jefferson died so poor that if Congress had not purchased his library at $20,000 he would have been a pauper; Madison was frugal and left about $150,000; Monroe died so poor that he was buried at the expense of his relatives; John Quincy Adams left about $50,000; Jackson died worth about $80,000; Van Buren left some $400,000. It is said that he did not draw his salary while in office, but at the expiration of his term of service drew the whole $100,000. Polk left an estate valued at $150,000; Taylor had saved something of his pay while in the army, and died worth $150,000; Tyler married a lady of wealth; Filmore was always frugal, and added to his savings by marrying a lady of wealth, and was worth about $200,000; Pierce's estate was valued at $50,000; Buchanan left $200,000; Lincoln about $75,000, and Johnson $50,000.

Mr. Marratt, a graduate of Bowdoin College, walked in one day from the top of Mount Washington (N. H.) to Portland, a distance of ninety miles.

All Sorts.

Brigham Young has reduced his stock of wives to eighteen.

The Boston Herald printed an item about a "bold sneak thief."

A rejected lover in Virginia City blew up the offending woman's house with dynamite.

The paupers in the Warwick county (Indiana) poorhouse are marrying at the rate of four couples a month.

Mr. Ross has spent $60,000 in hunting for his son Charley, and seems to be as far from finding him as ever.

The Japanese have arranged for an international exposition, to take place shortly after that of France has closed.

"A postage stamp neatly framed" was the prize awarded to the worst shot at the late target practice of the Alabama State Artillery.

Horatius Bowen objects to the wearing of the cross by fashionable ladies as a personal adornment, and the ladies are—cross about it.

The Rev. Wm. A. Cornell, of Freedom Plains, N. Y., hanged himself because he had lost his voice, and was compelled to stop preaching.

A horse that was being shod, in Poughkeepsie, reared suddenly and struck his head against a beam with such force that his neck was broken.

A waiter advertises in Chicago for employment, giving as a recommendation his ability to "fold napkins in 300 different ways, in the perfect image of every kind of bird."

A man who tried to drown himself by jumping from an excursion steamer in Boston harbor, was so fat that he couldn't sink, and the boat sent for him found him floating like a cork.

The Danes are greatly exasperated by a ministerial decree forbidding dogs to run loose. Thousands of valuable brutes have been destroyed on an unauthenticated report of a few cases of rabies.

A Kentucky farmer says that his old sow is in the habit of chewing off grapevines that grow upon convenient trees, and, with the vine end in her mouth, swinging over the fence into a cornfield.

The man in London who suddenly deserted his family, and lived for fourteen years just round in the next street, is a standing instance of the complete isolation which it is at any time possible to command in the largest cities.

A Galveston merchant received a letter last week which has been nearly eleven years on the way. The news it contained was more like reading a page of ancient history in the local columns of a daily paper than like an epistle from a friend not 1,500 miles away.

"You are entirely welcome," said a man, as he yielded his seat in a horse-car to a young woman. She looked puzzled, and so did the listening passengers. "Entirely welcome, entirely so," he reiterated. "I didn't hear your thanks, but you are just as welcome for all that."

In less than one month the value of silver has fallen 10 per cent. in Calcutta. Business is practically at a stand-still, and a feeling of despondency is creeping over all India. The natives hail the prospect of a gold currency with intense delight, because gold is more easily hoarded than silver, and gold coins would be more valued as ornaments for females and children.

It is hard work to convict a man of violating the license law in Thompsonville, Conn., as a prosecuting agent discovered, much to his chagrin. Out of a large number of witnesses put on the stand, only three ever heard that William Maddock kept a saloon, although a stranger could not go into the town without seeing it, and not one man could be found who had paid for a drink there. The agent left town a disgusted man.

Two professors of Urbana University discovered last week, in a mound in Champaign county, Ohio, eight human skeletons, twelve feet underground, inclosed in a wooden tomb. One was a child's skeleton, with a string of shells around the neck. While the professors were burrowing one side of the shaft gave way, and a scientist was buried, bruised and nearly suffocated. As soon as he was dug out he called for a spade and went at it again.

Missouri takes the palm for numerous "anti" societies. In one of the counties in that State an Anti-Horse-Thief Society has been formed. Its only object is to protect the community from horse thieves, to promote the arrest and prosecution of criminals, and to see that justice is done and that no pardons are signed after sentence is passed. The means it adopts for carrying out the latter clause of its constitution is not influence with the Governor.

The Washington mills in Lawrence, Mass., will reduce the price of board in the corporation boarding houses to $2.20 per week for females and $3 per week for males. The Everett and the Pemberton mills will reduce the board of female operatives to $2.25. The Pacific allows a charge of $2.50 for females and leaves the price of men's board to be determined between the operatives and the boarding-house keepers. In Lowell the corporation boarding house rate is uniform at $2.20 for females and $2.90 for males.

An English paper celebrates a gentleman who distinguished himself at a recent entertainment in that country by concocting the following set rhymes for the word "Arragon:"

'Tis said there lived in olden days
A gentleman of Arragon,
And as a mark his wife he'd praise
As just a perfect paragon.
To savor the fare she would supply
The right amount of tarragon;
And so when she was out he'd cry;
(Her name was Sal,)
"Where's Sarah gone?"

Which makes a very fair pendant for Canning's rhyme to "porringer:"

The Duke of York a daughter had,
Likewise a silver porringer;
He gave the vessel to a [illegible],
And gave the Prince of Orange her.

The Pottsville Bank Failure.

One of the worst bank failures which has ever occurred in this country is that of the Miners' Trust Company at Pottsville, Pa., whose liabilities are $1,[illegible]141, while the assets are only $186,747, and not all of them available. The depositors propose to find out who is responsible for this wholesale squandering of their money, and they have appointed a committee to make a thorough investigation and criminally prosecute every one who has made any improper use of the funds.

The Maine Election.

The election in Maine last week over that of 1872, shows a falling off in the Republican majority of about 7,000. Yet the Republicans claim with their usual candor that they have held their own. Blaine telegraped:

"We have triumphed by an immense majority, something we have not achieved since 1868."

As Blaine has been looking to his confiding fellow citizens which for vindication on the charges which he did not care to have investigated by the House of Representatives, it is not surprising that he takes a rose-colored view of the situation. Nor is it surprising that the detailed returns sent in from Maine, instead of being compared with those of the last Presidential year, should be set over against the figures of 1875. Last year the Republican majority was rediculously small—less than four thousand—and thus the knight errant of political chivalry is enabled to figure gains in every part of the State, and so prove to the satisfaction of himself and immediate friends, including Jay Gould and Bob Ingersol, that his gauntleted palm was never soiled by the contaminating coin of the briber.

Let not anybody who wants to form a correct estimate of the significance of the Maine election be carried away by Brother Blaine's enthusiasm. There is no overwhelming victory in Maine. The returns so far received, indicate that Connor's majority will be between ten and twelve thousand, and even the latter figure will show a falling off of more than thirty per cent. from the Republican majority in September, 1872, the only election which can legitimately be adduced for purposes of comparison with that of Monday last.

Brother Blaine may shout Victory, as loud and as long as his breath permits; but he cannot shout away the fact that five or six thousand Republican voters in Maine have become disgusted with his own jobbery and with the wholesale corruption of the party he represents, and have resolved to train hereafter in honester company.

We think that our cool-headed and perceptive neighbor, the Times, recognizes the significance of the decline of Republican strength in Maine, for it tried yesterday to account for the reduced majority by asserting that while a good many Republicans had moved out of the State during the past four years, a good many Democrats had moved in.—New York Sun.

Another riot has occured in South Carolina. The Washington Star, an Independent Republican paper, gives the following description: The affair was the result of a settled determination of a gang of colored rowdies calling themselves republicans to wreak vengence upon men of their color who have presumed to publicly affiliate with the democratic party. The trouble began by a comparatively small body of rioters, and speedily assumed formidable dimentions. Idle and excitable colored men and boys from all quarters hurried to the scene of disturbance, swelling the crowd and increasing the tumult, and the main thoroughfare of Charleston was for more than two hours in full possession of a fierce and howling mob of negroes cursing the whites and savagely attacking and beating every white man who chanced to be on the streets. Captain Hendricks, with a squad of thirty of the city police, finally succeeded by persistent efforts in dispersing the rioters, but not until a long list of bloody casualities had occurred, some of them serious and perhaps fatal in character. By noon today it was impossible to purchase a revolver in the city, the stock being completely exhausted. Buckner, one of the whites wounded Wednesday night, died yesterday afternoon.

We heard Wm. B. Allison speak last Friday afternoon, in the Court House yard. He is a Republican and represents the State of Iowa, in the U. S. Senate. Holding the high and elevated position that he does, we would naturally suppose such a person ought to be very particular to speak the truth, especially when making a public speech. Now, Mr. A. in his remarks alluded to the amendment in the constitution which forbids strictly the payment of any rebel debt caused, directly or indirectly by the late rebellion, and while dwelling on that subject, made every effort to carry to his hearers that said amendment did not cover all the indebtedness inflicted in the South, in consequence of the recent war there. If any intelligent person will read that clause in the magna charter of our liberties, he will readily preceive that it includes everything in the shape of debts incurred by the late insurgent states in their passage at arms with the U. S., a few years ago. We regard such garbling of a downright fact as the meanest kind of cob-web subterfuge. Should the Democrats be inducted into power in the November election, not even one farthing would be paid of anything, the South may happen to owe, because of their four year of mad warefare. Again Mr. Allison said, that the Democracy was anxious to bring about the resumption of specie payments sooner than '79. He certainly must know better then to make such an untruthful assertion. The Democrats in Congress and out of Congress and all over the land, iterated and reiterated during the current year, that as a great national party, they are in favor of a "resumption" just as soon as it can be done without bankrupting the country, and also ruining hundreds of thousands of our best business men. We repeat, the people know it!

Mr. Bixler says his residence of six years at Washington has enabled him to watch the movements of the so-called ex-confederates. How does he like the strut of Guerrilla Mosby, who has more appointments from his command in clerical position in that city than any other man in the country. The brute who shot down Union Soldiers in sight of Washington, not in honorable warefares, but as a bush-whacker. To see him cheek by jowl with Grant and Boss Shepherd must have been a pleasant sight, for he votes the Republican ticket If ten thousand of these rebels would vote the Republican ticket they would be white as wool If this learned lawyer, without an hour's practice, knew the temper of the people here he would find that an appeal to passion instead of reason has but little effect with the fair and candid.

Charles F. Adams accepts the Democratic nomination for Governor of Massachusetts. He is a former Republican who has declared for Tilden, Hendricks and Reform. His nomination means reform.

COMSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from active practice having had placed in his hands by and East India Missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy, for the speedy and permanent cure of consumption, bronchitis, catarrh, asthma, and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for nervous debility and all nervous complaints, after having thoroughly tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases feels it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a conscientious desire to relieve human suffering he will send free of charge to all who desire it this receipt with full directions for preparing and successfully using. Sent by return mail by addressing with stamp naming this paper.

The young folks, of the city, he.d a pleasant sociable party, Tuesday evening, at the residence of Mr. Wm. Sheffer. They tipped the fantastic toe to the tune of the violin, and various other amusements so much enjoyed by those who are yet tender in years.

We don't know all the bearings which prompted a few democrats in Steuben County to meet and "whereas" several tim es, the other day, but it does seem to us that a few of them are determined to rule or ruin. Its not a paying business, as they will evidently find out.

A large number of our citizens attended the rally at Butler last Saturday.—The Silver and Marshal Bands were also present and furnished good music. We must not forget to mention the politeness and affability of the conductor A. F. McFann, Esq., who was so attentive and courteous to the passengers.

Rev. Mr. Work tied the knot, last Monday, that holds in wedlock F. M. Dannells, of this city, and Anna M. Masterson, of Angola, henceforth and forever. It was a live affair, there being twenty guests present. They were accompained to the train by fifty couple of whom made to the happy pair some beautiful and valuable presents.

Rose offered to give twelve dollars for a twenty-five dollar bounty order, and Sheriff Miller offered to pay the amount in full, in cash, if it was not in the county treasury. Rose has fought on the side of the Republicans and Miller was the Democratic Sheriff at the time. But Mr. Miller says she got the money soon after nothwithstanding the assertion of Rose in his letter to the contrary.

Our friends should make every arrangements to have large crowds to greet Prof. Fairbanks at the points given in another column. Dan Voorhees was to have met Carl Schurz in joint discussion on the 11th at Crown Point, Ind. He failed to come to time.—Press.

Does our neighbor mean to give out the inference that Mr. Voorhees failed to come to time? We trust our neighbor would not be so bare faced as that. Mr. Schurz failed to come to time, and not Mr. Voorhees, as the above would indicate. Will Baxter make this correction?

Mr. Rose in his soldierly letter of '62, said that the attorney who secured the claim charged five dollars. Who was that attorney? This poor widow woman, weeping by her lonely hearthstone for the loss of a noble husband and son, afterward received the full amount of the order, so that if there was an attorney in the case, he was ashamed to show his hand. Was it an attempt upon the part of Rose to make his usurious offer appear less in the eyes of a defenceless woman?

That "Democrat" last week, says that Mr. Rose has been qualifying himself for the last fifteen years for the position he seeks. How well has he succeeded? We have seen fellows for hours trying to climb a greased pole. Would that qualify them to become respectable pork merchants? If trying to devour widows' houses, as the bible calls it, by offering the poor mother of deceased Union Soldier twelve dollars for twenty-five is a qualification then Mr. Rose has graduated.

Query—An ex-soldier of the 88th Ind. wants to know why Judge [then Major] Tousley fell off his horse at Perrysville, Ky., on the 8th of Oct., 1862, as the 88th was going over the hi.l under fire from the enemy's artillery!

Weamer perpetrated the above. And now, an ex-soldier wants to know why Rose wanted to buy an order, issued to a Union Soldier then dead, of his mother, and was willing to show his great love for the soldier, by paying her about half the amount it called for knowing it was as good as the wheat? Answer.

The very large intelligent audience which assembled at Ensley's Hall last Friday evening, after the Republican rally, was certainly a response to the genius and ability of the speaker of the most complimentary kind. Prof. Fairbanks made a fine address, answered a few of the misrepresentations of Senator Allison, such as charge that the Democratic party was in favor of resuming specie payments before 1879. It was a dirty falshood, but the Professor answered it in a gentlemanly, polite way All who have heard him are delighted with his fair treatment of every question of the day.

Judge Tousley is an Independent candidate for Judge in the Noble County district. We hope he will be elected, as no party Judge is ever fit for the high functions of courts.—Goshen Democrat.

If the people want an able man for Judge, rather than one who has never conducted an important suit in our courts, but who has been "fitting" himself for the last fifteen years, having an eye to that position, commencing with that sharp legal acumen which prompted him to offer a poor war widow TWLEVE dollars for a twenty-five dollar order accruing to a poor soldier, whose bones were then bleaching on an ensanguined battle field; if the people, we say, want an able man, not one of this description, they will vote to a man for Tousley.

Do not forget that the Waterloo fair will be held in Oct. commencing on the 10th. It comes at that time of year when the great laboring period of the farmer has about ended, at a time when he can enjoy a commingling with his neighbors and at the same time see the many attractions of the fair Every person has a certain amount of pride, and that pride will dictate, in those who are enterprising and generous, that they bring the best from their store and compete with a hundred others in the excellence of production. This lends an additional interest, as all who participate will readily acknowledge. There ought to be a good fair this year, notwithstanding the hard times. With fair weather it should be the best yet held

The Rally at Butler.

Butler takes the palm so far for the largest rally and enthusiasm of the campaign. The town was densly crowded on Saturday last, there being three times the number of people present, compared with the rally of the Republicans here last Friday. Gov. Blair made a good, fair speech, and spoke to the reason and good sense of the people. At night Col. I. B. McDonald, of Columbia City, entertained a very large crowd, and every thing passed off in excellent good order. The Democracy of Wilmington, unders such managers as Ochs, Madden, Maxwell, Blair, Boyles and others, are going forth in solid phalanx to battle for the right, and they feel encouraged over the prospect. Let every Democrat buckle on his armor, and join in the glorious struggle for reform.

At Last—For the first time in the history of Newville a large, beautiful pole was raised there last Monday night 100 feet high and straight as a line. It betokens a healthy condition of things over there. Why even McGonigal helped with his soft white hands, and struggled manfully at the ropes, though we did hear he squealed a little at first. He was no doubt prompted to join in his old first-love, for Mac used to make it red hot when he was at the helm of a Democratic paper. The meeting in the evening was very large, and Prof. Fairbanks entertained them until about ten o'clock. Everything looks splendid on the St. Joe. We believe the party is united on all the living issues of the campaign in this county, and that will be a big gain. A united effort, then, will bring victory, and effort should be made immediately.

The Rose letter which we published last week, astonished some of the yeomanry of the Republican party. They feel that a man who would speculate on a poor widow woman, the wife and mother of deceased Union Soldiers, having lost her husband and son in the army, would hardly be a fit person for a judge. Those who profess a great love for the soldier, cannot conveniently ignore this fact. It may have been magnanimous for Rose to have offered twelve dollars for a twenty-five dollar order, as good as the wheat, but it is not that kind of magnaminty the people like. There is no denial of the genuineness of the letter, and in accepting that fact you must accept the usurious proclivities of the man. How would our people like to be submitted to the clutches of a man who would take half your store if he could get it. Ponder well and see if you can vote for such an one.

If the gentleman in question has thrust his hands too deeply into some township or county treasury, or cheated widows and orphans or taken anybody's colt without a consideration, we hope that he may be investigated thoroughly and at once.

The above is made to appear to emenate from Weamer's pen, but is in fact composed by Mr. Peterson. It has reference to a law firm that is not up before the people for office, and we cant conceive why the insinuations therein contained were given publicly unless they were dictated by that treachery and low cunning which has never yet received any admiration from our people. Observe that word "if." If so and so is so and so, then so and so should be done. Now, isn't that cowardly, and low, and contemptible.—Come out of your gopher holes and show your hands, and then let the people judge. We like honorable, gentlemanly opponents, not dirty blackguards who seem to have no capacity but to vomittheir filth and slime out upon a community that has not deserved this infliction. True, you may not rise up out of this most nasty of nature's excresence, yet make an effort and struggle up while you are floundering about And, now while you are insinuating just look at home a moment and see to your own foul nest. Defend and justify the acts of your candidate for the County Treasurer, and the incompetency and usurious proposition of your candicate for judge.

The Republican candidate for Prosecutor writes from Washington that he accepts. He says, "six years residence at the National Capitol," only six years remember, in a government position as a clerk, not as a lawyer, "confims me" he says, "in the belief that the elevation of the Democratic party would be the surrender of every principle of justice and equality. This is the sentiment of the man who aspires to hold a position as an advocate of justice who has never practiced an hour in any court, who has not even pursued a regular course of study of law. He flings for the bloody shirt and asks the people to support him, not because he is a lawyer, not because he has been a resident here for the last six years, but because he believes that the party that kept him in position for that time ought to be continued. What is his ability, what is his experince and what are his claims, are questions which are entirely ignored. Against him is a man who has been here for years, has practiced law in our courts for ten or more years past, and has conducted cases in the various courts

Trustees Appointment.

Notice is hereby given that J. E. A REPUBLICAN CANDIDATE WANTS TO COMPROMISE.

Saxton on the Ragged Edge.

We heard the statement of a plain, honest, outraged farmer, last Monday, in a matter directly connected with the candidate for Treasurer, on the Republican ticket, and that statement runs thus:

Mr. Christopher Aikens residing near Orangville, in Newville township, this county, authorized a Mr. Willis Andrews, to pay his tax at the Treasurer's office in Auburn, giving him the money to cover the same. Mr. Andrews called for the amount of tax against Mr. Aikens, paid it, and took the Treasurer's receipt therefor. After that when the time came to collect delinquent taxes, Mr. T. J. Saxton, now the Republican candidate for Treasurer, and then the Deputy Treasurer, presented himself before Mr. Aikens, at his farm, and at the same time presented an account for delinquent tax to the amount of one dollar and eighty cents. Mr. A inquired what that was for, and Saxton said, in making out a receipt for his taxes which was paid by Mr. Andrews, he made a mistake of FOURTEEN cents, and that fourteen cents, now, with the costs &c., amounted to ONE DOLLAR AND EIGHTY CENTS. Mr Aikens was astonished, and properly refused to pay it. Finally Mr. Saxton said he would receipt the amount for $1.50, and Mr. Aikens, thou.h a poor, hard-working farmer, deving and toiling for a livlihood, paid it out of his scanty store. But the worst is to come. After his nomination Mr. Saxton commissioned Mr. Andrews to pay back the $1.50 to Mr. Aikens, but A. would have nothing to do with it. Finally Mr. Saxton appeared in person upon the scene, and unhesitatingly proposed to pay it back to Mr. Aikens after the election whether elected or not, but that Mr. Aikens should keep the matter quiet as it would hurt him in the campaign if it became known. This is the plain unvarnished statement of Mr. Aikens, who has always been a Republican, and therefore cannot be prompted by political considerations, to tell other than truth

Farmers, tax payers, voters, what do you think of such a spectacle, first, extorting through the excuse of one of his own blunders, and then trying to compromise by paying it after the election. If we want an honest man in any office in the county it is that of county Treasurer. He handles our money and makest out our tax accounts. Do we want a blunderer and a man who will extort in that position. There are several other cases going to show up the honesty and ability of this man Saxton, which we will give in due time. We want honest men in office and we would vote a thousand times for an honest Republican to once for a dishonest Democrat.

Acceptance of Mr. St.Clair.

WATERLOO, IND., Sept. 15, 1876.

D. Y. Husselman, Esq.,

I hereby accept the action of the County Central Committee in placing my name on the Democratic ticket as a candidate for Sheriff.

Very Respectfully,

J. C. StCLAIR.

Mr. St.Clair is a reliable, worthy gentleman, against whom nothing can be said. He was before the Democratic Convention two years ago as a candidate for Treasurer, and made a very strong race. He has always been recognized as an honest, fair-minded gentleman, and has long been identified with the industrial interests of the county.—None more worthy could be placed in this position, and as the candidacy was tendered him without even his knowledge, it cannot be said that he supplicated and begged that he might be favored. Good men of all parties can vote for him with the assurance that their interests will be ably and honestly represented.

Joint Discussion.

It is agreed between the undersigned on behalf of their respective parties, that a joint discussion of the political issues of the day shall be had, between Hon. John H. Baker and Hon. Freeman Kelley, in the several counties of the 13th congressional district as follows:

In Steuben County, Sept. 25th; DeKalb, Sept. 26th; Noble, Sept. 27th; LaGrange, Sept. 28th; Elkhart, Sept. 29th; Kosciusko, Sept. 30th; Marshall, Oct. 2nd.

The discussion in the several counties shall be opened alternately by the speakers, the first speaker occupying one hour, and the second one hour and fifteen minutes, and the first speaker closing in fifteen minutes.

E. W. H. Ellis, H. J. Beyerle; on behalf of Hon. J. H. Baker. C. L. Murray J. D. Osborn; on behalf of Hon. Freeman Kelley.

In accordance with the above the joint discussion will come off at this place, at half past seven o'clock in the evening Sept. 26th.

A Republican Fizzle.

The grand Republican rally advertised to come off here last Friday, was the most conspicious failure we have seen this year. Though the attendance when Voorhees and Williams were here was not as large as we would liked to have seen it, yet it was several times ahead of this Allison rally in every particular. We don't wonder at it much, for Mr. Allison, Senator from Iowa, is a light weight in that body. We did not hear the speech, but learn from those who know, that it was a garbled, incorrect and unfair argument from beginning to end, as much as a failure in point of enthusiasm as the rally itself. Capt. Sargent called for three cheers, but nary cheer came swelling up out of the throats of that non-enthused crowd. The fact is their hearts are not in this work of apologising for Belknap, and Robeson, and Babcock, and Schenck and Orth, and assisting by their presence in perpetuating tuis horrible corruption that Schurtz so graphically describes thus: "The administration has this particular merit, it is so grossly corrupt, as to satisfy any mind even the most stuped, that reform is necessary."

BUTLER, IND., Sept. 18, '76.

The political outlook at Butler is encouraging and hopeful. The Democrats are active and enthusiastic. The Republicans have been so used to having things so much their own way that they look upon the efforts of the Democrats with much jealousy. The Hon. J. H. Baker was here last Wednesday evening, Sep. 14, and made a desperate effort to arouse new life and energy into the sickly condition of his constituents, but with little effect. Considerable effort had been made to get out a large delegation from vicinity and town, but that too proved a failure. The M. E. Church was opened for the occasion and the speech listened to by very few Republicans—the bulk of those present being Democrats. Mr. Baker commenced his speech in that solemn style so characteristic of his sepulchral tone. He was sanctimonious, and tried to look the issues squarely in the face, but political sermons are stale to Republican ears, and the speaker feeling that his high tone and religious awe, forced upon him by the highly attenuated public conscience was not meat for his would-be admirers, and he soon fell from his high estate. Mr. Baker had a little to say about the honest and stainless Hayes who had soldiered in the war and shed his blood upon the battle fields of the sunny south, while S. J. Tilden was speculating in Wall Street; and he might have added, and while J. H. Baker was in the Colorado mountains where neither draft or bullet could touch his loyal gown. He feared Mr. Tilden because he was a Wall Street man. He admired Hayes because he never done anything of a public character worthy of mention. Yet he thought those who come to hear him abuse Tilden would be mistaken, as he had nothing to say of the charges made against him. He felt sure that the Independent movement was in the interests of the Democratic party. He thought so because Cooper's son-in-law was Chairman of the National Dem. Committee, and was the confidential adviser of Peter the great. He feared the Independents were a deluded people, no wonder Kilpatrick said they were poor and money would put them where they might do the most good.—Baker is wedded to a sort of quirkish silver-greenback-financial system, that is well suited to his political needs, since he may turn the machine to run silver in silver localities, and in greenback districts the crank only needs be turned the other way. Baker was not cut out for a Hamilton whom he lauds as the great American financier or he would never quote him in connection with his own unfeasable political claptrap scheme. Mr. Baker's hearers were about going to sleep under such soothing balm of spurious rhetoric, when all a sudden sounded the key note of Republican enthusiasm—the bloody shirt. The abuse of southern Congressmen and northern Democrats aroused the most terified mind from its sluggishness and crowned the speaker with a cheap Republican glory of valor, fame and christain merit. He feared the Democrats would pay all the rebel claims, and he was sure that the confederate congress was bound to favor the south. It grieved him very much that so many rebel Generals were in Congress, but he forgot to tell the people how they came to be members. But, alas; the greatest grief to him was on account of their Democratic ideas—all is well when a rebel General happens to be a Republican, no sorrow then, all is glory, "and we meet to part no more." The greater part of the speech was addressed to the passions of the people. But, then, we must excuse Baker for he did no fighting during the war, and you know he must do his share. He is now fighting all the bloody battles over. The war is not yet ended. Yours, &c.,

A Soldiers Re-Union.

We have been advertising for several weeks past a soldiers re-union, to take place here on September 28th. Now let us look at the arrangement closely, and endeavor to ascertain its object. In the first place it is just before the election, and as Kilpatrick says, "The old war spirit" must be aroused. In the next place, they claim it to be a soldier's re-union, and yet have ignored the Democratic soldiers of this county in toto. Not a single Democratic soldier is named on their programme, and have refused to allow a Democratic soldier to speak on that occasion. Capt. Hartman, Lieut. McBride, Gen. Blair, Capt. Willis, Lieut. Pinchin and Lieut. Leighty are conspicuously mentioned, and these are all who have anything to do with the management on that day. Has one Democrat been named? Next we find that Gen. Logan, Gen. Cox, Gen. Haskell and Gen. Thompson have been invited to be present, and none others are announced. Is there one Democrat among them? Not one. And this is what is called a soldiers re-union in this county. Out upon such infernal hypocracy. This is the manliness, the fairness exhibited by the Republicans in this State. Oh, yes, we'll have a soldiers re-union, we'll have our own party to run it, and our own partizans to make the address, and then give it the name of a soldiers re-union! Fellow soldiers you who fought side by side, recognizing no party, acknowledging no leader but your own officers, will you truckle to such a mean, dirty contemptible dodge, disgrace those noble ties that held you together as brothers, when leaden hail and shrieking shell filled the air about you? Is not your Democratic comrad just as dear to you as any other? No sir, it is not a soldiers re-union, but an effort to get out a crowd to hear these men inflame the passions and work on the old war spirit, without which, Kilpatrick says "we cannot carry the State."

Get up a soldiers re-union of the genuine kind, when Democrats and Republicans put their shoulders together for success, and all will gladly help to make it a happy, interesting occasion. We like these soldiers re-unions, when not under the auspices of a party, and will do all in our power to bring them about but when a part are ignored and a particular class excluded we shall oppose them, regardless of the party which incites them. We oppose this one because we believe there is a political dodge underlying the whole movement. We oppose it because it is apparent that all classes of brave union soldiers are not recognized, and all such ought to be opposed by every honest, fairminded, generous citizen of the land.

Weamer gives an item from the New York "Times" about "cork screws, &c" allowed by Mr. Williams. Why certainly cork-screws are just as necessary in the capitol as anywhere else. One dozen cork-screws, in thirty rooms of the capitol, is certainly not extravagance.—But go now to the last house and see the number they used and see if the ex-confederates have not been economical.—Why not give a showing of what the last House done. You dare not do it.—So Mr. Williams was correct when he said he introduced a most rigid economy in the expenses of the House. But, we beg leave to call attention to the disrespectful terms which our neighbor uses toward Mr. Williams. In all we have had to say of Mr. Harrison we have not characterized him by such a term as "old fraud" because we believe him a gentleman. Mr. Williams is an old man, much beloved by his neighbors of both sides, and to use such terms only shows how desperate the game is. Mr. Weamer copies from the New York "Times" which said in 1871:

"Vote for Samuel J. Tilden. The voters of the Eighteenth Assembly district ought to esteem it an honor and a privilege to elect Tilden to the legislature. He has shown himself a gallant, conscientious, efficient foe to corruption. We appeal to every Republican to work and vote for him, and do so the more cheerfully—as we make this appeal—because he is an honest Democrat."

Now, we know the "Times" contained the above verbatim, because we read it with our own eyes in a bound copy of that paper, now in the Congressional Library. As the "Times" now talks the other way it is not regarded as very good authority. It either misrepresents now or did then and in either case it is not reliable.

OLD BEN'S TRUST.

Do you think I'm afraid o' dyin'
Becos I would rather live,
An' hang on to my mis'able chances,
Just what they are likely to give
In the way of good eatin' and drinkin',
With the 'pepsy a houndin' me so,
And havin' to den up in winter,
Like a bear, with the airliest snow?

No, sir, I tell you that dyin'
Is leavin' the things that we know,
And sailin' out into strange waters,
All dark, above an' below!
I know nothin' for New Jerusalem;
I know 'twouldn't seem like hum,
'Cos where they have things so splendid,
They don't expect poor folks to come.

But, oh, if the singin' in heaven
Was the hum of the wind in the pines,
Or the noise of the brook and the river,
Where the brook and the river jines;
If the birds was to sing hallelujar,
As they do in the bushes all day,
And the little brown chippies would chatter,
And the locusses chirrup away;

If them streets was kivered with mosses,
And shaded with trees overhead,
With leaves droppin' down in a shower,
Painted purple, and yellow, and red;
If over that wonderful river
I could go all alone to float,
In and out, among the lilies,
With only just Maje in my boat;

If I could hear Maje before me,
A barkin' along the trail,
I should know there was somethin' to foller,
That wouldn't be likely to fail;
And I'd lay down my head, contented
To let the moss over me grow,
As it does on the trees in the forest,
And say I was willin' to go.

If the Lord has allers been with me,
And he held me fast by the hand,
When the fog kivered up the valleys,
And I'd lost the lay of the land,
And 'twas safe to trust Him so fur,
I'll trust Him the very last mile;
He knows where to look when He wants me,
Without hallin' Him all of the while.

CHAPTER I.

"TRUE OF HEART."

A small, old-fashioned cottage where a woman sits working in the porch.

A tiny cottage, in a garden stocked only with fruit and vegetables, save for the hardy creepers clinging to the porch. But then their blossoms gleam as white and pure as any rare exotics, and the dark leaves move softly in the fairy light, as the breeze nestles there, after its flight across the heath from that far line of brilliancy which, though but a ribbon's width, is the broad sea flashing in the sun. A slight, pale woman, wearing a widow's cap upon her smooth brown hair, but with such a look of love and longing on her face that she too has a beauty which it is good to look upon. Small and isolated as the cottage may be, it is a home of love and peace, and plain and quiet as the countrywoman looks, she has a wealth of warm affection in her heart.

As she sits there alone, Mary Sullivan is dreaming the old dreams which have cheered her ten years of widowhood—bright but never impossible dreams of the future of her only son—and she is glancing backward, too, over her own life, wondering a little, just a little, if many women of her age have seen no more of the world than she, who has not spent one night of all her life—nor ever wished to do so—beyond this village where her husband has been schoolmaster. Is it to be always so? A steadfast light comes into her eyes, and her quiet lips break into a smile, made beautiful by proud and loving trust—"That shall be left to Davy," she says, uttering softly the one name which now means all the world to her. "His choice will be my choice."

From the porch were Mary sits she can catch a glimpse, through the trees, of the road along which the stage-coach daily passes. This spot she is watching eagerly, and when the four horses come within sight at last, she drops her knitting and rises. Nervously drawing her hand across her strained, glad eyes, she turns and enters the cottage, as if she dare not wait those few minutes which will bring the coach into sight again close to the garden gate.

Tea is laid for two in the pleasant little kitchen, and the table—though it bears upon its snowy cloth no luxuries beyond home-made cakes and fresh-laid eggs—has quite a festive look. The mother stands and gazes round her with a smile. Is there nothing more she can bring for Davy? Her hands are clasped together, and her breath is quickening, for she knows that any moment now her boy may rush in, past that line of sunshine at the open door. But she does not know how intently she is listening for his footsteps upon the gravel, nor how her face brightens when he comes in at last.

"Mother!"

"Oh, Davy, Davy!"

The greeting bursts from the hearts of both, in that first moment; then the boy's lips are clinging to his mother's, and her arms hold him in that entire love which a widowed mother so often lavishes upon an only son.

The meal, which she has prepared with loving hands, is over; and the mother and her boy sit together in their favorite corner of the porch, while the sun sets far away across the sea.

"Four whole weeks of idleness, and of home and you, mother," David says. "It seems too good to be true."

"But you like school, Davy?" Mrs. Sullivan asks wistfully. "You are happy there?"

"Happy? oh, yes; and getting on capitally. Of course I try to do that, mother, as grandfather urged it so when he condescended to put me in this school. Perhaps he will help me a little even when the five years are over. I will soon rise, if he gives me a start, after this promised school term."

"And if he does not, this education is a great help, Davy. You will be 17 when you leave the college, and clever, and able to do anything."

"Anything—everything, mother," asserts the boy, softly drawing her arm about his neck. "I shall be a man, and you shall never want anything again. You shall have a large house and garden, and I shall come home to you every evening from my office—where I shall earn the money, you know. It must be near London, because men don't get rich except in London, I expect. Should you like it, mother?"

"You have made up your mind to be rich, Davy?"

"Only," the boy answers, his eyes upon his mother's face, "only just rich enough to make you comfortable and happy, mother; that you may never have to work—as you work now, or deny yourself—as you deny yourself now. You have so little, mother, to make your life easy and bright."

"Little!" she cries through her happy tears. "Little! when I have you, Davy!"

"We both have all we need, dear mother," the boy says, laying his curly head upon her shoulder. "I would not change homes with the richest boy in all our college (though he would laugh at the notion); but still, I mean to give you more. I am making the most of my time."

"What do the masters say of you, Davy?"

"That I am the best arithmetician in the school," the boy says, laughing; "and best (for my age) in one or two other things. But, mother, I beat every fellow—older or younger—hollow at gymnastics."

"What are they?" asks Mary, wondering. But though David explains at length, her idea of the science is only a little less vague when he finishes than it had been when he began.

"We have a splendid gymnasium at school, and you should see me. There's not a fellow who can come anywhere near me. And I have a prize to show you, mother—not for that," he adds, with a laugh at her surprise, "but for accounts. I won it to please grandfather, because, after all, he was very good to put me to school, though he will not personally notice either of us. It is almost like giving me a fortune, isn't it? and therefore better than if he asked me to his house, although that would show he had forgiven my father for—settling here."

"Almost a fortune—yes," she answers, gravely stroking his brown curls. "But try to think less of being rich than of being good and true-hearted, my own child."

"I do, mother," he says earnestly, "only I talk more of the one. And when I think things over, mother, I feel sure that a man's occupation need make no difference. My father had nothing harder to battle with than the ignorance of a lot of boys who, after all, loved him, and tried to please him; but I may be just as good a man battling with the world—which seems so far from us, and so unreal to us yet—as he was in this dear little quiet nook. Don't you feel this, mother?"

Yes, she feels it. Small as her knowledge is, she knows of One who walked unspotted through the world; and poor as she may be, she is rich in her great trust in Him.

The sunset light is dying now, and the mother and son sit watching it, in a silence which is sweet with love and sympathy—and when those, fair, pink clouds fade and vanish from above the sea, they rise and go into the cottage together.

CHAPTER II.

"FOR HER DEAR SAKE."

The first vacation of David's has passed like a dream to his mother, and now that the last day has arrived, she feels as if only a week had sped, though she had so regretfully and hungrily counted (each morning and each night) both the days that have been spent and spent and those that are to come.

Another long absence follows; another bright home-coming (in the frosty Christmas darkness now); another absence; and so on, and on, and on, until David comes home from school for the last time of all.

He meets his mother just within the porch, where the flowers bloom that summer as they have bloomed through every summer of his life, and he has no cloud upon his face. But, later on, his mother's anxious question is answered a little sadly.

"Yes, mother; I heard from the lawyer yesterday. Grandfather's will does not mention either of us. He has given me all the help he meant to give. Well, he has been very good, and now I am ready to make my own start in the world. But I must go at once. One delicious day with you here, then for London! Don't look so sad, my mother; this shall not be a long separation; not even so long as the old school terms, for I will soon come back to fetch you."

So after this one day he goes, laughing over his scanty purse, because his hands are strong, he says, and his fortune, hope and courage. But when he looks back, it is only through a mist of tears that he can see the little cottage where he leaves his mother in her loneliness.

After David's departure the days pass for Mrs. Sullivan just as the old school-days have done, except that now she has a daily excitement in his letters. Never can she settle to anything until the postman has come up the garden path, and given into her trembling hand the letter David never fails to send; the letter (full of love and bravery and hope) which does his mother's heart such good.

At last one letter comes in which he tells her he has found employment in an accountant's office; employment which is very easy to him, and which he likes, though the salary he is to receive is smaller than he had anticipated when he so hopefully began his search.

"But I will work so well," he writes, "that the firm will raise my salary soon, and then I will come for you. Ah! mother, I can indeed work hard and long and steadily for that good end."

So, in the cottage, Mary works hard too, confident in the realization of his plan, and living with him, through her long day-dreams, in a London which exists in her imagination only—a wide, calm city where all the young men have David's face and David's nature, and guide skillfully the machinery of the world.

But the time goes on, and David only earns what he has earned at first. "And so," he writes, a little sadly now, "the home with you is still out of my reach, for poverty here, mother, would be to you a hundred times worse than poverty at home."

When he has been absent for a year he comes home to spend his birthday with his mother; a summer day which they have spent together for all the eighteen years of David's life. Then he goes back to his work, still hopeful of the rise which his earnest and untiring servitude is to win.

Six months pass, and then, one Sunday night, David walks unexpectedly into the cottage kitchen, where his mother sits beside the fire, softly singing to herself a hymn which she has heard in church that day. When she starts up—her face, in that moment of surprise, white as death—David sees how little able she is to bear any shock where he is concerned. But her delight, one minute afterward, makes up for all, and that Sunday night is one which both will love to remember.

"Can you not stay one day?" the mother pleads. "Must you really go back to-morrow, Davy?"

"To-day you mean, mother. Look, we have chatted till after midnight, already. Never mind, we have four whole hours more, thanks to the new railway. Don't go to bed, mother; I cannot spare you for that time."

She has never thought of leaving him; so beside the cheerful fire they sit and talk; first of the lives which they have separately led, and then of that life which they are presently to lead together—for David has come home on purpose to bring joyful tidings. The long-talked-of home will be ready soon, for he is earning a high salary now, and all the old bright plans are to be carried out.

"But, Davy," Mrs. Sullivan says, when she rises to at last to prepare the early breakfast, "how very hard you must be working only to be spared for one day, after a whole twelve months of service!"

"I could have had one holiday between," he answers, "but I would not take it. It was wiser not, mother, as this is an expensive journey, even now that we have the railway."

"And you have been sending me your money, David."

"But I am earning so much now," the young man says, with a bright excitement in his eyes.

"And are you happy, David?"

"Very happy, mother—thinking how soon everything will be as I planned it long ago."

"But for yourself alone, are you happy, dear?" she asks wistfully.

"I!" Oh yes, mother, quite happy."

Another good-by—"But the last," David says, as again and again he kisses his mother's shaking lips.

CHAPTER III.

"AH, POOR HUMANITY!"

David had said that he would spend his birthday at home—that June day which has always been the one holiday of the year to the widowed mother—but on the morning before arrives a letter which tells her that he is obliged to delay his coming. London is very full, he says, and he is very busy; so he cannot get that day's holiday.

In every line of this letter the mother can read his disappointment, as well as the sorrow it gives him to disappoint her; and tears come and blot out the loving words, as well as the proud descriptions of the home which is all ready for her now, out in one of the pleasant northern suburbs. They blot out even that simple request at the end—"Think of me more than ever to-morrow, mother, and pray for me just at nightfall; at that very hour when we have been used to sit together in the porch on other happy birthday nights."

There is the present of money which most letters bring her now, and it is while she holds this money in her hand that she forms a sudden resolution, which comes to her at that moment as so natural a one that she wonders where it has been hidden before.

She is on her way from the village postoffice when the plan suggests itself, and when she reaches home (her steps quicken in the new excitement) she sits down in her old seat on the porch and makes it all clear to herself. David is working very hard, and is to be lonely on his birthday. How can she better use his gift to her than by giving him a pleasure he cannot expect, and so prevent his being solitary on that day which they have never yet spent apart? As he cannot come to her, she will go to him. Ah! how his face will brighten when he sees his mother come in! How he will start up with outstretched arms to clasp her! That moment will repay her for any trouble she may have in reaching him.

When once the resolution is formed it holds her tenaciously, and she begins her preparations at once, glad and excited as a child. She packs her basket, putting in a chicken and butter and eggs and cream, because David has said that he never enjoys these things in London as he does at home; and she smiles as she ties a dainty white cloth over them all; for she is picturing her boy's delight when he shall unpack these luxuries which she has brought him from his own village. All that night she lies awake, yet rises brisk and active, almost wondering if she can be the Mary Sullivan who has never entered a railway carriage in her life—he, a traveler, starting alone to a far-off city of which which she knows nothing.

Taking her basket on her arm, she walks to the Rectory to leave the key of her cottage with her clergyman, and to obtain from him instructions for her journey. He gives them clearly and circumstantially; and, walking with her to the station, sees her off, with the precious basket in her care and that look of steadfast happiness in her eyes.

It is a long journey, but the anticipation of David's delight at seeing her shortens and beautifies the way, so that she starts with surprise when a fellow-passenger tells her she is at Paddington. Timidly she stands back from the crowd, holding her basket tight upon her arm, and watching the passers-by with wistful, patient eyes. What a great place this station is! and every one so busy and engrossed!

"If you please, I want to reach Farringdon street. Would you kindly tell me what to do?"—she has at last accosted a porter, as he passes with a hamper on his shoulder.

"Cross to Metropolitan."

Cross to Metropolitan! The words are foreign words to her. What can they mean? Is there a river then between her and David?

Another porter, coming slowly up as the crowd disperses, sees the puzzled look upon the woman's face, and how she shrinks apart in her neat country dress, and holds her basket with such care and pride.

"Where do you want to go?" he enquires kindly.

"To Farringdon street. I am to cross something, but I could not understand. I'm sorry to be so troublesome."

"You'd far better have a cab," the man says, in a tone of involuntary kindliness. "Do you mind the expense?"

"I have six shillings in change," she answers, looking gratefully into his face. "Will that do?"

"Half of it."

He takes her to one of the waiting cabs and makes a bargain with the man in her presence; then he closes the door upon her and smiles as she drives away.

And this is London—this line of streets, and crowd of people, and deafening sound of wheels! Poor Davy! How he must long for the quiet, shady lanes and the fresh breeze coming inland from the sea!

The cab stops, and Mary Sullivan stands with beating heart at the door of a tall, narrow house in Farringdon street and rings the bell faintly. She waits what she thinks a long, long time before a young woman appears in answer to her modest summons.

"Will you tell me, if you please, in which room I shall find my son?"

"What's your son's name?" the girl asks, with a long stare.

"David Sullivan."

"Oh, Mr. Sullivan," she says, a little more pleasantly. "He's out. Would you like to step into the passage and rest?"

"Thank you," David's mother says, gently, as she meets this unlooked-for blow, "I would much rather go to him."

"I don't know where he is, though. He's nearly always out. He's at an office all day. Then he's forever going out into the country somewhere north, where he's got a house he's been furnishing. I don't know where else he goes, but he's always away at night."

"He will be at—that house you speak of, I suppose?" questions Mary, her voice trembling in its eagerness as her thoughts dwell on this home which David has been preparing for her. "I wish you could tell me where it is."

"But I don't know," the girl answers, more shortly, "and I should think you'd better stay here till he comes back."

"I would rather go to him. Do you think any one in the house could kindly tell me where he is?"

A young foreigner is coming down the stairs as Mary speaks, and she looks shyly and wistfully at him. So the girl asks the question: Does he happen to know where Mr. Sullivan is?

"Monsieur Salli—Sullivan?" the young man questions, laughing a little as he glances into the face of the country-bred, yet delicate-looking woman who stands holding her basket so closely to her side. "Yes, I know; why?"

"I am his mother," Mary says, her voice bright with pride.

"Had you better not wait here until he comes?"

"I would far rather go to him, if you would help me."

"You are quite sure?" he asks again, with the laughing glance.

"Quite sure, sir."

"Then I will direct you, for I am going that way myself. You had better, at any rate, leave your basket here."

So she gives it to the young woman, with a shy request that it may be taken care of, then follows her guide out into the street. It seems to Mary that they have walked for miles down noisy and bewildering streets, when they turn and enter a wide and open doorway. With a sign to his companion to follow, the stranger walks on along a carpeted passage, only pausing a moment to speak to a man who is standing there, just as if he might be waiting for them. Mary followed her guide on and on, wondering how this lighted way could lead to any home which David had chosen for her.

Yet all the while her heart is fluttering joyfully, because the meeting must be now so near. Once more the stranger stops to speak to some one who stands at an inner door, then he leads her through it, on amid a crowd of seated figures.

"If you sit here," he says, with a smile, pointing down to a vacant seat which they have reached, "you will soon see your son. Watch the wide entrance opposite you there, and you will see him in a few minutes."

Mary thanks him with a simple earnestness, and takes the seat and waits; her eyes fixed, with a smile of expectation in them, upon the opening opposite.

What a gay, grand place this is, with lights like suns and stars upon the ceiling, so far up, so very, very far up! Why, the church at home is not nearly so high as this room. But why is it lighted yet? The June sunshine is lying brightly now upon the sea at home, and it must be light as day in the cottage rooms. What thousands of faces are gathered here—all looking one way, too, all looking at that door which she has been bidden to watch. Are they waiting for David, too.

Suddenly a band begins to play; and—puzzled more and more—Mary turns her eyes from the spot she is watching so intently. David has never told her about this music, and these lights, and this great lofty room, and the watching crowd. What does it mean? And why is Davy coming here?

A prompt, tumultuous sound of clapping in the crowd; and Mary turns her puzzled eyes back again to the doorway she had been bidden to watch. No one is there, save the few idle figures which have stood there all the time. But now, in the cleared space in the center of the building, a man (who must have passed through while she was gazing at the band, and whose face is turned from her) is climbing a single rope suspended from the roof.

Wonderingly, Mary watches the light and active figure—tightly clad in white and crimson—springing upward with the speed and the agility of a squirrel. Why should he do this daring, foolish thing? Is a man's life so valueless that he should risk it thus to provoke a moment's passing wonder? Is death so trivial a thing that he should brave it recklessly thus, to win a moment's applause? Ah! to think of this man's life and then of Davy's!

Another minute, and the man she watches springs to a double rope which hangs from the lofty ceiling, and, sitting there at ease, looks down upon the crowd. Then Mary's eyes look full into his face.

* * * * * * *

It is a special performance at the circus on this June night, being the farewell of the famous gymnast Monsieur Sulli, who, after his brief and brilliant career, is retiring from the profession in which he shines without a rival, intending to settle down—so it is rumored, ironically and discontentedly—to office work with an accountant, and to live in a small house out in a north suburb, with an old mother from the country. So ridiculous, in the very zenith of his fame.

On this farewell night he is to perform (for the last time) his greatest feat—a feat which no one but himself has ever attempted. From the flying trapeze where he now stands, swinging himself carelessly to and fro, he will spring to a stationary one forty feet distant; and, passing through this, will catch it by one foot only, and hang suspended so, one hundred feet above the arena.

A dangerous exploit, of course; but performed with wondrous nerve and skill. Surely it will be a pity if, having made his reputation, Monsieur Sulli shall still persist in his determination to retire from the ring.

A grand success! The shout of applause, which shakes the great building from floor to ceiling, testifies to this beyond a question. Decidedly a grand success! Though in one seat among the crowd a solitary woman, who is a stranger there, sits, white, and still, and dead.—Belgravia.

The Outlook for Fall Trade.

The New York Commercial Bulletin gathers from the best informed sources some views upon the character and extent of the prospective trade during the fall months. In the dry goods business the outlook is more encouraging than at any time since the panic of 1873, and there is every appearance of an entrance into an era of prosperity. While certain industrial interests are still depressed, the general condition of the country warrants the belief that a slow, gradual, but certain improvement in business may be confidently looked for. The demand for domestic toward the close of August produced an upward tendency in the market, and there is no doubt that the packing trade in autumn goods is thus far considerably in excess of that of the two previous years in quantity, as well as in money value.

Cotton being subject to a direct speculative manipulation, the cotton trade is in a somewhat uncertain condition. The growing crop is now passing through its most precarious season, the market is quick to respond to reports for good or evil, and few operators are able to express any positive convictions. Yet, from all that can be learned, the volume of business compares favorably with that of last year.

Petroleum has made a sharper advance since midsummer than the most sanguine operator could have hoped for, and the entire trade looks to the future with much cheerfulness. Most refiners refuse to accept orders, in view of having about all they can do to meet their contracts for two or three weeks to come.

In hardware there is little doing, but the prospect is better than it was a month ago, a noticeable feature being the neglect of what may be called fancy stock, and a close selection of standard articles of all classes.

The grocery trade, especially in teas and sugars, is very hopeful, and within the last month there has been a marked improvement, and a reaction from the depression of values before existing.

The dairy product and country produce generally shows an era of low prices, but opinions differ among dealers as to what may come.

The other branches of trade have also a fair outlook, and the business situation, as it stands to-day, is a slow and steady growth in most departments, and a marked improvement on former seasons.

The Wheat Harvest.

According to the advices compiled by the New York Produce Exchange Weekly, there will prove to be an average yield of wheat in the British Isles and France, while the Prussian crop is estimated at four-fifths of an average, and the German crop is generally disappointing. The British crop will exceed that of last year, while those of France and Germany, especially the latter, will fall below it. In those countries the yield of other cereals seems to correspond proportionately closely with wheat.

In the United States the winter wheat crop appears to be about an average in quantity and quality, exceeding in both respects that of last year. The spring wheat crop is estimatd at about two-thirds that of 1875. In the latter there is less waste, however, but in all quarters a higher inspection will doubtless prevail, which may tend to support prices. The crop of last year in the whole country was about 270,000,000 bushels, probably, and the acreage of the crop of 1875-76 was placed by the Department of Agriculture at a higher figure than that of its immediate predecessor.

Hay Fever.

The second annual report of the United States Hay Fever Association shows that no remedy for hay fever has yet been discovered, and that substantial relief from the disease can be obtained only by residence in an exempt district during the period of its continuance. This is usually from the middle of August until the first frost. A list of more than ninety places or regions in North America which are more or less exempt is appended to the report. Among the measures for relief recommended to those who from various causes are unable to leave home in order to seek exempt districts, is the use of quinine, to raise the tone of the system. It should be taken, one or two grains with each meal, for a week or ten days before the recurrence of the attack.

His Mistake.

After two men had shaken hands yesterday, one of them remarked:

"Well; I heard that your case of assault and battery fell through."

"So it did," was the reply. "The jury brought in a verdict of not guilty, and the scoundrel got clear."

"I thought you had a sure thing on him."

"So I would have had but for my own foolishness. Do you believe that I was just fool enough to own up that I struck first? But for that little technical error the jury would have convicted him, and he'd been fined at least $20."

The South has really more furnaces in blast in proportion to her number of inhabitants than the North has, and very few are losing money. It is asserted that the only mill in the United States running exclusively on railroad iron which declared a legitimate dividend for 1875 was the one in Chattanooga.

FLEETING JOYS.

[illegible]
[illegible]
Notice how he lines our cheeks,
Mark what glee he makes us gray with;
Pleasure comes to soothe our hearts;
Often, like the rose, 'tis quickly;
Soon its radiance departs—
Happy moments vanish quickly!

Supposing you, by fate's decree,
Love a girl and long to greet her,
Don't the minutes seem to be
Leaden-winged until you meet her?
When the hour arrives at last,
And all care away you banish,
Then the tyrant steals fast—
Happy moments quickly vanish!

Here upon this earthly ball
Joy awhile will make us gayer,
But when sorrow gives a call
Oftentimes she proves a "stayer."
Hope, thou swiftly glidest on—
Fragrant are the flowers thou pickest
Soon, alas, their bloom is gone—
Happy moments fly the quickest!

Never mind, we needn't groan;
Tear-drops, showerlike, refresh us;
After all, we're bound to own
Joy is like a sweetheart—precious.
Cast away [illegible] sighs,
Though our cares beset us thickly,
Happy moments let us prize,
Even though they vanish quickly!

"I will at once tell you why I don't," was the soft reply. "I should kinder hate to take a melon home and sit down and eat up all before my wife and children. Seems to me it would be kinder hoggish not to give them all a piece around, and so I will buy one and eat it here." "And I hope the seeds will choke you!" shouted the dealer. "But they won't. Something New in Mosquitoes.

Close observers will remark that this season presents two separate and distinct races of mosquitoes—the regular old breed that sing and buzz in your ears and scare you almost into spasms, and the new one, speckled and spotted in appearance. This new tribe possesses even more deviltry than the old, for they are of the regular sneaking order, and never tell you when they intend to strike. They will step up, steal a bite, and quietly leave. It is no use for you to slap at them. If you do, you will in all probability slap yourself, while the ring-streaked and striped little cuss will wink and point his hind legs at you in such a scornful manner that you are almost aggravated beyond endurance. The appearance of this last pest, however, is indicative of the end of summer. He is known as the fall mosquito, and can easily be detected by his crawling propensities. Summer mosquitoes never crawl; they just light and go to business on the spot.

FRIGHTFUL EXPLOSION.

What Six Quarts of Nitro-Glycerine Accomplished.

[From the New York Herald.]

A heartrending accident occurred yesterday morning at the United States Government excavation works at Hell Gate, which are under the direction of Maj. Gen. Newton, in charge of the Federal engineering improvements in the port and harbor of New York. By this sad and disastrous, as well as unaccountable, accident, three men lost their lives, who were blown to pieces instantly by the explosive force of nitro-glycerine, and seven others have been quite seriously injured, some of whom will probably remain disfigured for life. The explosion burst on the ears of the unfortunate victims at 9:30 o'clock, and as blasts are frequent in that neighborhood did not attract any attention for some moments, those in the vicinity believing that the noise came from one of the usual blasts that are occurring at the Hell Gate works.

CAUSE OF THE CATASTROPHE.

John Doyle, aged 27 years, who leaves a wife and two children, was a watchman at the works, and had also been a messenger for Gen. Newton to and from the works, carrying messages and packages, sometimes of nitro-glycerine from Governor's Island and the manufactory on Black Tom Island, on the Jersey Flats, near Communipaw, to the Hell Gate excavation. Yesterday morning about 9:10 o'clock he came on board of the Government diamond drill scow, which lies off the blasting ship at Astoria. Doyle, who reported to the assistant engineer and superintendent of the flashing operations, J. H. Streidinger, had with him six tin cans full of nitro-glycerine, and in each can was contained about a quart of nitro-glycerine, weighing two pounds and a half—in all about fifteen pounds of the deadly liquid. By some mishap or trip-up, or by some trivial mistake which involved concussion, as it will not explode otherwise, the six quarts of glycerine were suddenly exploded, and in an instant, and simultaneous with the report, the air was darkened with bleeding fragments of human bodies and splinters of timber. A wooden shanty, ten feet square in area by ten feet in height, was blown afar off beyond the Gate itself, the deck of the scow was covered with debris, and about a dozen men who were on the deck of the scow were hurled right and left as if they were so many straws. The Superintendent, Streidinger, who has a little office aft and elevated above the deck of the scow, was shaken so hard that he had to lean over his desk to steady himself on his feet, while he received a shower of mucilage and ink from the bottles that bounded from his desk. The clerk of Streidinger, a young man, who had an office to himself a little forward of his superior's, was also shaken, and a small row-boat, lying under the overhang of the scow, was blown out of the water and into small pieces. All around the scow the effect upon everything within reach of the explosion was awful. A large hole was blown in the deck of the massive, heavy scow, which is constructed of layer upon layer of yellow pine. The captain of the tugboat Westphalia, which was in the vicinity at the time of the explosion, was badly stunned, as were two of his crew, and it is said that an unknown man, whose body has not been found, was blown from the Government tug into the river.

The small shanty or cabin at the forward end of the scow was used for for divers to dress in, and also to hold explosive materials temporarily or while in transitu to the magazine. Not a trace of this shanty was left.

THE KILLED.

Henry Luerssen, aged 33 years, a native of Hanover, Germany. Parts of his body were picked out of the water, the entrails and brains having been taken out quite neatly by the terrible explosion. The entire front of the face was torn off, and both legs as well as an arm were completely severed from the body.

John Hickman, aged 27 years. Hickman's body was frightfully mutilated. His legs and arms were all broken, his feet falling off, and his bones protruding through the skin in different places. The head was also torn and jagged.

John Doyle, of No. 197 Sackett street, Brooklyn. Doyle was a fine, healthy-looking man. A plank or joist or some large piece of wood must have been driven with terrific force between the thighs of this poor victim, as the under part of his abdomen was all gashed and torn, and his trunk hanging to his lower limbs by shreds and patches of flesh.

THE WOUNDED.

Capt. James Davis, Jacob Peterson, Charles Schmidt, Frank Pike, Henry Halsey, John Dobson and George Schael received serious injuries. The first named is not expected to live.

Smothered in a Sleeping-Car.

A train on the St. Louis, Kansas City and Northern railroad recently ran off the track near Salisbury, Mo., with fatal results. The cars were precipitated down a high embankment, and four passengers lost their lives. Considerable water rushed into the cars, and two little girls were drowned before they could be rescued. The death of the other two passengers—Mr. Charles Taussig, the Treasurer of the road, and of Mr. Richard Ellet, a merchant of Yazoo, Miss.—occurred in a very singular manner. Both gentlemen occupied top berths, and when the cars turned over the berths shut up just as they are in the day time, as close as the lid in a trunk. Taussig and Ellet were thus closed in, and when found they had actually smothered to death. Mr. Taussig had not a mark or a bruise on any part of his body. Mr. Ellet's face was swollen, evidently by his efforts to get out of his horrible trap. As the sleeping-car conductor yelled out "Who is missing?" Mr. Ellet was heard to utter out, in response, "Come to No. 2," the berth he was in; but just at that time he found a paralyzed man lying down in the water, and supposing that the voice issued from him, the man was rescued from his perilous position. Owing to this mistaken belief Ellet was unfortunately left to die in his locked-up berth before he was found. Mr. Ellet was a nephew of Gen. Ellet, of Mississippi, and was a fine-looking man. He had just taken his family out to Colorado, where he left them, and was returning home via St. Louis. The other passengers sustained very slight injuries, being mostly bruises sustained in trying to climb out of the cars before help arrived.

An Aged Bridal Party.

On Thursday evening an unusually interesting marriage ceremony took place at the residence of Mr. Daniel L. Sawyer, in Haverhill, Mass., the Rev. A. A. Williams officiating. The bridegroom was Eben H. Little, Esq., 82 years old, a native of Hempstead, N. H., a successful Boston merchant. The bride was Miss Jerusha Palmer, 84 years old, a wealthy maiden lady, formerly residing on Beacon street, Boston, but late of Somerville. The groomsman was Master Anson Ayer, 14 years old, and the bridesmaid Miss Nellie M. Sawyer, a miss of 13. The wedding party consisted of about thirty persons, relatives and friends, including ages from the infant of 18 months, with its suggestive prattle, to those of threescore years. The parties to the union are hale and hearty, and with no abatement of natural fervor save that which attends advancing years. Mr. Little has been married once before, and several years ago passed the period of his golden wedding. To the bride the relations were new. The early hours of the honeymoon are to-day being spent in an excursion down the river in the Queen of the Merrimac, the party being joined by the Odd Fellows and Daughters of Rebekah, to whom they will present a practical illustration of how the odd are sometimes made even. The romance of the affair is that Mr. Little, "longing for a kindred spirit," and yearning for a heart that could commune with his own, made proposals to Miss Palmer several months ago, which were then not looked upon with favor. Within the past ten days, however, an answer was received assenting to the proposed union. The maiden became his affianced, and the necessary preparations for the nuptial ceremonies hastened, so that the event took place last evening. The venerable pair are to make their abode in this city.—Boston Globe.

Death of a Veteran Printer.

Last Wednesday Charles McDevitt, an honored member of the typographical fraternity, died, and yesterday he was buried. His life was of peculiar interest. The Herald reporter, on his way to the funeral, met the veteran journalist of the State, Mr. Thurlow Weed, going to pay the last tribute of respect to an old and dear friend. Mr. Weed said: "I have known Charley McDevitt for fifty-five or sixty years. The first tract issued by the American Tract Society, about the year 1816, was set up by Mr. McDevitt, and he and I worked it off together in Daniel Fanshawe's office, at No. 11 Cliff street, in this city. He joined the New York Typographical Society soon after I did. I joined it in 1816. At the time of his death he was the oldest member of that society that had not missed a meeting for more than fifty years. He was ever active in hunting up and providing for sick members and extending aid to those in distress. I left the city in 1818, and excepting occasionally since then I have not been acquainted with his work for fifty years. I always attended the meetings of the society when I was in town. In 1819 I went to Albany as a journeyman printer, and during the next year started a paper for myself in the adjoining counties. In 1830 I went back to Albany and started the Albany Evening Journal. Mr. McDevitt then went on the New York Mirror. He remained with it after it was changed to an evening paper, and at the close of its existence went on the New York Ledger, where he remained until he was taken sick last December. Until last Wednesday he and William E. Dean, now living in Tenth street, and I were the oldest members of the Typographical Society."—New York Herald.

Fifteen Hundred Feet Under Ground.

It takes only five minutes. You step on the stage and the hand that guides the Titan at the surface touches the rein of his black monster and you are plunged into the gloom. The cage stops and you are more than a quarter of a mile below the busy city; from the dusty highway you have stepped into the world's grandest treasure house; you have passed from the temperate to the tropical zone in a minute—you are in the Bonanza.

It is no little thing to work a mine 1,500 feet below the surface. True, there are broad avenues; broad timbers which, like Atlas, seem competent to support a world; there are engines at work and cars running; but every glimpse of the men reveals the exertion necessary to keep up this conflict with the spirits that guard the buried treasure below. The men are stripped to the waist, those brawny delvers, with perspiration bursting from every pore.

It looks pleasant down there in the mimic streets and under the lantern's glare; but before those streets were opened there was in the stifling air a work performed that cannot be calculated. Picks were swung, drills were struck, powder was burned, men fainted and fell in their places, but the work went on. So it will proceed in the future, until, probably, after another sixteen years, they will be working 3,000 feet below the surface.—Virginia (Nev.) Sentinel.

Health of New York City.

The statistics of the Board of Health show that, though there has been a marked increase in the population of this city during the past ten years, there has been no corresponding increase in the death rate. By comparing the mortality of children under five years of age from diarrheal diseases, it was seen that in 1872, the last year in which there was a prolonged heated term, there were over 200 more deaths in this class in the month of July than were reported for the same month in the present year.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

The Reason.

A young clergyman, modest almost to bashfulness, was once asked by a country apothecary, of a contrary character, in a public and crowded assembly, and in a tone of voice sufficient to catch the attention of the whole company, "How happened it that the patriarchs lived to such extreme old age?" To which question the clergyman replied, "Perhaps they took no physic."

THE CUSTER MASSACRE.

Story of an Eye-Witness—Fifteen Hundred Savages Pour in a Murderous Fire Upon the Little Band—One-Half the Troops Unhorsed at the First Volley from the Indians—Six Soldier-Prisoners Burned at the Stake in Sitting Bull's Camp.

The St. Paul Pioneer-Press and Tribune publishes a full statement made by an old trapper named Ridgely, who lives near Anoka, Minn., and has been in the Yellowstone country two years. Ridgely was a prisoner in Sitting Bull's camp at the time of the Custer massacre, and saw every movement of the troops. He states that about the last of March or April, in company with four trappers, they were attacked by Indians while trapping in the Black Hills, himself and another trapper captured, and all their furs taken from them. Being bound by buffalo sinews, they were taken directly to the camp of Sitting Bull, when he asked them in good English where they were from. Ridgely replied, "Fort Garry." Sitting Bull, believing them to be British subjects, ordered them released, and gave them the freedom of the camp, stating that he would return them to their friends ere long. The three remained in Sitting Bull's camp until the day of the Custer massacre, and Mr. Ridgely says they were treated with uniform kindness.

Ridgely states that Sitting Bull organized his forces, not for the sake of fighting the whites, but to drive the miners from the hills. They had no expectation of meeting soldiers until after the arrival of troops in the Yellowstone country, and mounted couriers from Sitting Bull's camp had for eight days watched every move of the military previous to Custer's attack. Ridgely says the Indians observed every movement of Custer's force, its division into small detachments being noted with manifestations of extreme delight. Ambuscades were at once prepared by the Indians, and Ridgely states that while the Indians stood ready for the attack many of them clambored on the side hills overlooking Custer's line of march down the Rosebud. The Indian camp was divided by a bluff or ridge, the point of which ran toward the Rosebud and in the direction of one of the available fords on the river. The Indians had crossed the river to camp by this ford, and Custer had followed their trail down to the water's edge. From this point of observation there were but twenty-five tepees visible to Custer, but they were seventy-five double tepees behind the bluff, not to be seen by the soldiers. Custer attacked the smaller village, and was immediately met by a force of 1,500 or 2,000 Indians in regular order of battle, and every movement was made in military precision. Ridgely says he stood on the side of a hill where he had a complete view of the battle, which was not more than a mile and a half distant. Custer began the fight in a ravine near the ford, and fully one-half his command seemed to be unhorsed at the first fire. Then the soldiers retreated toward the hill in the rear, and were shot down on the way with astonishing rapidity, the commanding officer falling from his horse in the middle of the engagement, which commenced at 11 a. m., and did not last more than forty-five minutes.

After the massacre of Custer's force, the Indians returned to camp with six soldiers as prisoners, and delirious with joy over their success. These six prisoners were tied to stakes at a wood-pile in the village, and all burned to death. While the flames were torturing them to death, Indian boys fired red-hot arrows into their quivering flesh until they were dead.

The prisoners were kept burning over an hour, but Ridgely was not permitted to speak to them, so he was unable to state who they were. One was noticeable, he says, from his small size and gray hair and whiskers.

Sitting Bull was met after the fight, and he exultingly remarked that he had killed many soldiers and one damned General, but he did not know who he was.

The squaws then armed themselves with knives and visited the battle-field, and robbed and mutilated the bodies of the dead soldiers.

While the six soldiers were being burned, the Indians turned their attention to the force (evidently Reno's) attacking the lower end of the village. Ridgely says Custer's command had been slaughtered before a shot was fired by Reno's force attacking the lower end of the camp, about 2 p.m. The Indians returned in the evening and said the men had fought like the devil, but Ridgely says they did not make a statement of their own losses. They said the soldiers had been driven back twice, and then they piled up stones, and the attack was unsuccessful.

Reno, he states, killed more Indians than Custer, who fell in the midst of the fight, and two Captains, believed to be Yates and Keogh, he says, were the last to die. Ridgely says the night after the Custer massacre the Indians were wild with delight. Many were drunk on whisky stolen from the whites, and the squaws performed the duty of guards for the prisoners. The guards becoming drowsy, Ridgely and his two companions escaped from camp, securing ponies, and began their long journey toward home. The party subsisted on game, and laid in the woods four days to avoid the Indians. On the way his horse stumbled, breaking Ridgely's arm as he was thrown to the ground. The party avoided friend or foe until they reached Fort Abercrombie, where one of the party died from erysipelas. His other companion joined friends in the northern part of the State, and Ridgely came to this city, passing north of Bismarck and other points, and is now on his way to Fort Snelling, where he will apply for a position as scout, his broken arm preventing other service.

He describes Sitting Bull as a half-breed, large-size; and very intelligent. His right foot is turned out, the result of an injury, and it materially affects his gait.

Five weeks before the Custer fight three Red river carts arrived at camp loaded with powder and lead, and Ridgely says nearly all the ammunition and provisions were procured from Canadian and Red river traders.

Before crossing the Missouri river, in his escape, he constantly met small war parties headed toward Sitting Bull's camp.

Not a Poor Man's Land.

A private letter from a citizen of Solano county, California, to a friend in Illinois, contains the following: "You ask me about the propriety of laboring men moving to California. As a common-place remark, I will say that it is a great big country—lots of territory—the choice pieces of which are in the hands of farmers or speculators. As a result, farming does not pay at the present time. It is almost wholly a cereal country, and the raising of wheat does not pay. Millions of bushels are on hand now, for which there is no market. We grow plenty of fruit, but that is perishable and can't be exported. Laborers' wages here on farms range from $30 to $40 per month, with board; but a man must be a skilled teamster or plowman to command $40. They plow with gangs—three or four plows fastened together—using six or eight horses in the team. One who can manage one of these teams can command $30 and $40 per month. Common hands, owing to the Chinese, who are very apt at all light work where no animals are to be handled, can only realize $20 to $25 per month. I would not advise any poor man at the East to leave $20 or $25 per month to come to California. We are situated thus: The Greeks, Italians, Portuguese and Chinese do our fishing, the Portuguese and Chinese our gardening, Irish girls and Chinese our housework and washing, the Mexicans our shepherding, the Jews our storekeeping, the Grangers our big farming, and the Americans our railroading, boating, speculating, banking, etc., and, together with the Irish, talk politics and hold the offices."

Antarctic Exploration.

The appearances of land near the South Pole mapped by the American exploring expedition under Capt. Wilkes, many years ago, prove in repeated instances to have been delusions. This has been recently demonstrated, as to several points, by the Challenger expedition, lately returned to England. Antarctic exploration is once more exciting interest in Europe scientific circles, from the fact that it is exremely desirable to observe the transit of Venus in 1882 from a point as near as possible to the South Pole. The most southerly point ever reached was latitude seventy-eight degrees and four minutes south, by Capt. Ross, of the British navy, about thirty-five years ago. Capt. Davis, who was a member of his expedition, lectured recently at South Kensington on Antarctic discovery, and expressed much doubt whether any one would ever get nearer the South Pole than Ross did.

Pacific Coast Ship-Building.

Ship-building is going on with unabated activity on the Pacific coast, quite a number being already on the stocks. In 1875 a fleet of sixty vessels was launched aggregating 9,070 tons. The great majority of those already out are engaged in trade with Mexico, Central America, the Pacific islands, the fisheries and domestic Pacific ports. The more important features are the speed, strength and endurance shown by nearly all the vessels built on this coast.

Dividing California.

Another State is talked of. It is proposed that California shall be cut in two along the line of Santa Cruz county, with fourteen southern counties for a new commonwealth, which will have about 150,000 inhabitants, 30,000 voters, and taxable property estimated at $100,000,000.

The Enemy of Disease, the Foe of Pain to Man and Beast,
Is the Grand Old
MUSTANG LINIMENT,
WHICH HAS STOOD THE TEST OF 40 YEARS. THERE IS NO SORE IT WILL NOT HEAL, NO LAMENESS IT WILL NOT CURE, NO ACHE, NO PAIN, THAT AFFLICTS THE HUMAN BODY, OR THE BODY OF A HORSE OR OTHER DOMESTIC ANIMAL, THAT DOES NOT YIELD TO ITS MAGIC TOUCH. A bottle costing 25c., 50c. or $1.00, has often saved the life of a human being, and restored to life and usefulness many a valuable horse.

All Goods Retailed at Wholesale Prices

This is the Only Secret of Our Immense Trade.

we purchase at first hands and sell direct to the consumer, so there is no middlemen to eat up profits. Some goods—take teas for instance—pass through four different hands before they reach the consumers, and each one has to have his profit, so that 40 to 50 per cent. is added to price. The importer has his profit of 10 per cent., the jobbing merchant his profit of 10 per cent., the speculator and whole sale merchants, 10 to 20 per cent. and the retailer all he can get. So Sugars, Coffees, Spices, Prunes, Fruits, Tobaccos, Liquors, or anything we deal in. Our customers get the benefit of all these intermediate profits. No middlemen with us. We are having a great run on Prunes. The Finest

PRUNES ONLY 8c A POUND.

They hardly ever sell lower than 12½c. and when you consider that Dried Apples are 12c, we al know a pound of Prunes will go farther and are considered much richer eating.

TEAS REDUCED

oney saved is two pence got.'' Ten cents reduction on teas. The continued dullness in trade, coupled with the large number of failures in the tea trade, has completely demoralized it. Teas we used to sell at $1,40, and lately $1,10 per pound, we now sell at $1 per pound. The best uncolored Hyson, Imperial or Gunpowder, the very best qualities, now $1 per pound. now 80c, was 90c, the best Oolong now 50c, was 95c. Other grades as low 25c per pound, up to and 70c per pound.

In witness whereof I hereunto set my hand, [SEAL.] and affix the seal of the DeKalb Circuit Court, this 4th day of September, A. D. 1876.

G. H. K. MOSS, Clerk,
DeKalb Circuit Court.

The qualified voters of DeKalb County, Indiana, will meet on Tuesday the 10th day of October, 1876, at the usual places of holding elections, in the several Townships and Precincts of said County, for the purpose of electing persons to fill the offices designated in said order.

WILLIAM L. MEESE,
Sheriff, DeKalb County, Indiana.

Judge Holman and General Browne, candidates for Congress in the Fifth Districts, are having joint discussions, Though Gen. Browne is a genial fellow, it would be an outrage to defeat such a man as Holman, one who has stood up and fought valiently upon the side of the people, against extravagance and corruption and has interposed, objection time and again thus saving hundreds of thousands of dollars, as has often been admitted by Republican members even to our own Major Sallor, and Mr Baker.

That distinguished Republican statesmen, Ben. Butler, has been nominated again as a Rewresentative in Congress from the Old Bay State, of where Puritan principles Plymouth Rock bears eternal witness. Though a modest man Ben has accepted the nomination, and waving the bloody shirt, has pronounced his political creed amid the applauses of the Republicans assembed at Lowell. We trust that Ben. Butler will be supported by the full strength of his party, for we regard him as one of the honestest men in it. Whatever else may be said against Ben., he is not a fraud. He does'nt pretend to be anything better than he is, and the respectable Republicans of his district will, no doubt, hustle each other in their eagerness to cast their ballots for him.

The Democratic Pyramid.

Thus far Democrats have no reason to be discouraged by the showing of the elections of this presidential year. The following is the Democratic pyramid for 1876, as far as it has got:

OREGON.
ALABAMA.
ARKANSAS.
KENTUCKY.
CONNECTICUT

The Radical concern stands about thus to date:

New Hampshire.
Rhode Island.
Vermont.

The following are the majorities and electoral votes of the States above enumerated:

REPUBLICAN.	Maj.	Electors.
New Hampshire........	2,500	5
Rhode Island............	5,000	4
Vermont	26,000	5
	33,500	14

DEMOCRATIC.	Maj	Electors.
Oregon................	1,000	3
Connecticut..........	7,000	6
Alabama..............	40,000	10
Kentucky.............	75,000	12
Arkansas	40,000	6
	163,000	37

Thus it appears that, while the Republicans have this year secured three states with 14 electoral votes and aggregated Republican majorities of 33,500, the Democrats have carried FIVE STATES casting THIRTY-SEVEN ELECTORIAL VOTES and piling up Democratic majorities aggregating ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY-THREE THOUSAND. This will do very well—[Buffalo Courier.

Another Lie Nailed.

The following editorial squib appeared in she Journal of yesterday:

"We have good authority for stating that in private conversation yesterday or the day before, Gov. Hendricks admitted that the probabilities at present were strongly in favor of the election of Geh. Harrison as Governor. He also confessed that Jimmy Williams was a very sorry and painful candidate, totally unfit for the duties of Governor of the state of Indiana."

In consequence of the above, a Sentinel reporter called upon the Governor at the executive rooms yesterday when the following conversation occurred:

Reporter:—What truth is there, Governor, in the statement made in this morning's Journal in respect to your opinion of the political prospect and of our candidate for governor?

Gov. Hendricks:—There is not a word true. No such conversation as is therein reported occurred or could have occurred, for I entertain no such views or oppinions either in regard to the election or to our candidate. On the contrary, I have the utmost confidence in our carrying the state, and entertain for Mr. Williams the highest respect.

This needs little comment. It shows the desperate condition of the Republican party, for the Journal would hardly have published such a falshood out of whole cloth save in the least resort, to encourage a forlorn hope. But it is all in vain. Carrying the state for Gen. Harrison is not "as easy as lying."—Indianapolis Sentinel.

The party that talks of "reform within the party" has completed its list of orators for Indiana. Here they are:

Alonzo B Cornell,
O. P. Morton,
W. W. Belknap,
George S Boutwell,
G. E. Spencer,
Powell Clayton,
Oliver Babcock,
Ross Shepherd,
Tom. Murphy,
Ben Butler,
R. C. Schenck.

Good heavens, read this list! Why, more than half of these orators and expounders of Grantism are under indictment for criminal offenses. And yet the Radical press insists upon saying that Hayesism would be different from Grantism. Read the list again.

Ben. Harrison the disinfectant of Orth, was recently in the smoking car coming up to Indianapolis. He was in a jocular humor comparing his chances with those of "Blue Jeans Jimmy" Williams. "If I am among Germans," said Harrison, "I can speak a little German, and there I have the advantage of Jimmy. If I see a Frenchman, I can talk a little French, and there I have the advantage of Jimmy. I can talk money to moneyed men, and there I have the advantage of him. But after all, Jimmy Williams is a honest, straight-forward fellow." "Yes," said an old farmer, with a wide-awake hat on a wide-awake head who sat near, "and there Jimmy has the advanjage of you."

Doctors Disagree.

The Hayes Doctors do not agree as to the character of the Republican Administration, Schurz admitting its corruption, and Morton maintaining its purity. Hear the twain:

Morton, in his Indianapolis speech, August 11th said:

"So far from official morals deteriorating, the public service becoming debauched, and the country standing on the brink of ruin, I pronounce this and all kindred statements, which make up the body and trimmings of Democratic platforms and speeches, to be unmitigated bosh and demagoguery, and that the very opposite is the truth."

Carl Schurz, in his late Cleveland speech, said:

"The administration has this peculiar necessity; it is so grossly corrupt as to satisfy any mind, even the most stupid that reform is necessary."

He followed that up in his Cincinnati speech of August 31st, by saying, in reference to Grant's Administration:

"It has demonstrated the vicious tendencies of our present civil service system so strongly that even the dullest mind must preceive them. We have clearly seen how that system will endanger the integrity of good men by its temptations, and stimulate bad men only to become worse. We have been forcibly made aware of the necessity not only of a change, but of a thorough and lasting change, and that such a thorough change cannot be put off much longer without danger."

Opposed to that Morton says:

"The truth is, that although defalcations and malfeasances sometimes occur and always will, there is more official integrity, the revenues are more faithfully collected, and the public service better performed than at any former period."

Here are opinions as opposite as can be on the same subject. One, held by Schurz, that Grant's Administration is grossly corrupt; the other, held by Morton, that Grant's Administration is as pure as any in our history. And both Morton and Schurz are stumping for Hayes! It is very evident, however, that Schurz can't bring his consequence up to the lying point like Morton, and it is more than likely he will be withdrawn from the stump.'

The Judge's Speech.

The glee club having sung a selection entitled "Tilden, Hendricks and Reform," Judge Hoadly commented upon that, preliminary to his speech. He said: The platform is permeated through and through with reform, and the head of the ticket is a reformer of the most practical kind, whild our candidate for vice president is equally worthy of the first place on the ticket, [Cheers.] giving promise of returning to the practices of our fathers in this centennial year. The Republican party on the contrary, in their platform; talk about the economy of Providence—they used to talk about the bounties of Providence. [Laughter and applause] And they have placed upon their ticket, as a signal illustration of that economy, Hayes and Wheeler. Wheeler, whose only national work is an attempt, by an act of Congress, to obstruct the navigation of the Ohio river [Cheers] Speaking of rivers reminds me that as we came to this place We crossed a little river, and I asked a friend the name of it, and the answer he gave me struck me as very significant—(the Blue river), because the blue sky was encompassing this glorious meeting, and the procession was arrayed in blue colors, and with Old Blue Jeans at the head. [Cheers.] And then there was blue in the faces and hearts of the other side, and blue deavils to chase them out of office. [Loud laughter and applause.] Upon the subject of his politics, referred to by the governor in introducing him, Judge Hoadly said: It is a fact as the governor has said, many years have passed since I have voted the Democratic ticket. Twenty-four years ago I voted for Franklin Pierce. Since that time, believing, as I did, that the cause of human liberty was at stake in the country, I have not voted with the Democratic party. But when the cause of liberty was gained, when the 15th amendment was adopted, when black and white were given equal privileges at the ballot-box, and the party under whose auspices this work was accomplished had degenerated, as it has, it becomes my duty to leave it and return to the Democratic party in this centennial year. [Cheers.] I voted for Abraham Lincoln twice and for U. S. Grant twice, so you will see I have not voted for an unsuccessful presidential ticket since 1856, and I shall not vote one this year. [Great cheering.

Gen. McCandless, the gallant soldier of the Keystone State, will address the people at half past seven o'clock p. m. on Thursday Sept. 28, at this place. We hope to see every person out, because we know the general is a good speaker.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

THE various banknote companies in the East are making desperate efforts to retain the printing of internal revenue stamps, which the Treasury Department has decided to have done at the Printing Bureau.

THE Philadelphia Centennial buildings were seriously injured, a few days ago, by a violent wind and rain storm that swept over the city. A portion of the roofs of the Main Exhibition building and Machinery Hall were blown away, and injury was done to many exhibits.... They had a Centennial celebration in New York city on the 16th inst., which was the hundredth anniversary of the battle of Harlem Plains. The celebration was participated in by the famous Seventh Regiment and other military organizations. The oration was delivered by a grandson of John Jay, of Revolutionary fame. Many distinguished citizens of other States were present.

TWENTY-FIVE or thirty fishing-boats were caught in a gale off Erie, Pa., a few days ago, and a number of them wrecked. Nine or ten of the unfortunate fishermen lost their lives.... Edmund Stoner Janes, a Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church in America, died a few days ago in New York city, which has been his place of residence for many years. He was born in Sheffield, Mass., 1807, and at the age of 23 became connected with the Philadelphia Conference as a minister. Ten years later he was appointed Financial Secretary of the American Bible Society, and in 1844 was elected Bishop. He was a man of large ability, and his life was one of earnest labor and distinguished usefulness in the denomination.

CENTENNIAL notes: The daily attendance is steadily on the increase, and the number present on the opening day is now approximated every day, and the prospect is that still greater crowds will come as the close of the exhibition approaches, and people realize that they must be prompt in their coming.—The grand jury having made a special presentment regarding the frame buildings erected contrary to law in the neighborhood of the main exhibition building, declaring them nuisances, the Mayor of Philadelphia has caused them to be demolished....The street parade of Odd Fellows last week was a splendid demonstration. It is estimated that 15,000 men were in line, and the streets along the line of the procession were thronged with spectators.

A SECOND match between the American and Irish rifle teams was shot at the Creedmoor range, New York, last week, and again victory rested with the Americans, though by a very small majority, as the score will show:

Americans.		Irish.

THE WEST.

THE first section of thirty miles of the Covington, Columbus and Black Hills railroad has been completed and opened to traffic to Ponca, Neb. The road is three and one-half foot gauge, was projected, built and equipped to the present terminus since the first of March this year, and is the first link of the projected route via the Black Hills and the National Park to Portland, Oregon. Arrangements have been made to complete 150 miles this year, and reach the Black Hills in 1877....A dispatch from Fort Laramie says: "Gen. Crook's command left Hart river, Dakota, on the 7th of September for the Black Hills. Gen. Crook has orders to bring his entire command to this post as quickly as possible. Gen. Sheridan will meet him here, and reorganize for another campaign. They will have had nearly two months' constant marching. Besides the great distance from their supply-camp to Hart river, where they turned homeward, they were hunting and following trails, and were obliged to find grass for the animals, as the Indians burned the grass after them. The fact that the grass was burned is sufficient cause of failure to overtake the enemy. The troops have had hard work and no glory."

ADVICES from the West give particulars of a sharp fight between Gen. Crook's troops and a section of Sitting Bull's band. On the 8th of September a small detachment, which was on route to the Black Hills, struck an Indian camp on the line of march, and captured some hundreds of ponies and a quantity of provisions. The savages dashed out of their tents at the first charge, and escaped to the hills, but were quickly rallied and reinforced, and turned upon the attacking party. The latter prudently sent at once for support from the main body, gallantly maintaining the fight against great odds for some hours, till Crook himself and a strong force appeared on the scene and rescued the little band, which was commanded by Col. Miles, from a position that might have been critical. The Sioux fought obstinately for some time after the arrival of Crook, but they suffered heavily and were eventually dispersed. Among the spoil captured from them were articles that had belonged to Custer's men, so that there is no doubt that this party were concerned in the massacre. A large number of savages were killed. Our troops lost two killed and several wounded. Twenty-two prisoners, mostly women and children, were captured. The famous chief American Horse was mortally wounded, and died two days after. Before dying he said that the Indians were scattering, and expressed surprise at the temerity displayed by the soldiers in following them into that dangerous region. It was a bold adventure, the chief said, and might have resulted like Custer's attempt had it been made three weeks earlier. He said, also, that the Sioux were pretty well tired of the war, and were discouraged by the immense columns of soldiers thrown into their country. If they were to be disarmed at the agencies, he thought they would fight to the last. Neither Crazy Horse nor Sitting Bull, nor the other wild chiefs, would give in, but the tribes for the most part would. He appeared satisfied that the lives of his squaws and children were spared. Gen. Crook appears to be convinced now that a considerable part of Sitting Bull's forces have got off to the north beyond reach, while another division will be found where Terry's command on the Yellowstone may readily strike them. ....A Cheyenne dispatch says "the Wheeler brothers, who have been working their famous claim No. 2, below Gayville, on Deadwood creek, arrived at Fort Laramie last week with a paid escort of twenty men. They bring as the proceeds of their work for seven months over $300,000—1,900 pounds of dust."

THE small end of Crook's campaign against the hostile Sioux has been reached. His returning column arrived at Custer City on the 15th of September, greatly to the delight of the Black Hills people, who had begun to feel the need of military society. There will be no more expeditions this year in search of Indians hundreds of miles away....Two of Sitting Bull's Generals, with 150 of their people, bucks, squaws, and papooses, and 100 horses, have surrendered to the commanding officers at Standing Rock Agency. Thirty of the men were engaged in the Custer massacre.

THE Lumbermen's National Association has just held its annual meeting at Eau Claire, Wis. The attendance, though not large, was respectable. The President, Hon. J. G. Thorp, in his opening address, briefly reviewed the past and present condition of the lumber trade, and reached the conclusion that the bottom had been reached, and that better times were at hand.

THE second trial of John D. Lee, the Mountain Meadow butcher, has been concluded at Beaver, Utah, and resulted in a verdict of murder in the first degree. Judge Boreman, in the course of his charge to the jury, said: "The prisoner, J. D. Lee, stands before you charged with being a participant in one of the most atrocious massacres of human beings—of men, women and children, in the Mountain Meadows, in 1857—that was ever known in any civilized part of the world. The evidence shows that the persons killed were emigrants. For several days a combination of Indians and white men had been planning an attack upon their encampment. The Indians and white men vied with each other in the fiendish work, destroying over 120 men, women and children. It has been alleged that he shot one woman with a gun, one with a pistol, and cut the throat of another, and told an Indian not to spare a young woman whose life the savage asked him to spare."

FOUR of the bandits who some time ago murdered the cashier of a bank, at Northfield, Minn., and attempted to rob the institution, were captured near Madelia, Watonwan county, Minn., on the 21st of September—the statement heretofore printed that they had escaped proving incorrect. A telegram from Madelia gives the following particulars of the arrest: "The robbers went to a house early this morning, about seven miles north of here, bought some bread and butter, and started west on foot. News was sent in as fast as horse could travel. Forty or fifty men were after them as soon as they could get horses and arms. They drove them into a slough about eight miles north of here. They then had them out on the prairie, and opened fire on them. The robbers returned the fire, but kept working toward the river, and at last got there and hid in the bushes. By this time our men were all together, and surrounded the bush the robbers were in. Firing became general, our men advancing all the time. At last the robbers saw there was no hope, and gave up. One was killed, and the other three are wounded. One has only a wound in the arm. One that is supposed to be Cole Younger is wounded badly in the head and back. The other has a bad wound in the jaw and shoulder. It is thought that one, if not two, will die of their wounds. One of them has an old wound in his arm, supposed to be the one wounded at Northfield."

THE SOUTH.

THE steamship Rebecca Clyde, from Wilmington, N. C., for Baltimore, was recently wrecked at Portsmouth, off Pamlico Sound. Capt. Childs, two mates, two engineers, three seamen, the steward, two coalheavers, and a passenger named Wheldon were lost.

THE editorial rooms of the New Orleans Bee were the other day the scene of a lively scrimmage. Alfred Bourges entered the sanctum and assaulted Mr. Lirnet, one of the editors, who had refused to retract certain charges against him. Mr. Roman, the city editor, entered the room during the attack, and shot at Bourges, the ball passing through his coat-sleeve. The latter thereupon beat a retreat, leaving the editorial forces victors. Casualties—one scalp-wound, one perforated coat-sleeve, one broken cane.

WASHINGTON.

SINCE the passage of the act authorizing the redemption of the fractional currency in subsidiary coins there has been issued in silver coins $18,285,865. Of this amount there was issued to redeem fractional currency $10,910,242, and in exchange for legal-tender notes and checks, $7,375,643. The amount issued at Cincinnati was $1,356,871; at Chicago, $1,552,738; at St. Louis, $884,559.

GENERAL.

JOHN WALTER, the proprietor of the London Times, and inventor of the Walter press, is on a visit to this country.

THE market reports from New York city announce a nearly unprecedented activity in the dry goods trade, from which a very hopeful horoscope of the future business prospects of the country is cast....The National Agricultural Congress held its annual session in Philadelphia last week. A number of interesting papers upon agricultural and industrial topics were read. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, William C. Flagg, Illinois; Secretary, Horace J. Smith, Pennsylvania; Treasurer, Ezra Whitman, Baltimore, and a long list of Vice Presidents. Chicago was selected as the place for the next meeting.

POLITICAL.

OFFICIAL returns of the Maine election from the whole State except one town and six plantations give the total vote of 135,961; Conner, 75,710; Talbot, 60,251; scattering, 529; Conner's majority over Talbot, 15,450.

IT is decided by the Attorney General of the United States that a candidate for Presidential Elector cannot hold the office of United States Commissioner, and that the same rule applies to attorneys specially employed by the Government to assist in the conduct of cases.

THE Iowa State Greenback Convention was held at Des Moines last week. The following nominations were made: For Secretary of State, A. McCrady, of Sioux City; Auditor, Leonard Brown, of Polk; Treasurer, George C. Fry, of Jefferson; Register of the Land Office, George M. Walker; Superintendent of Public Instruction, the Rev. J. A. Nash, of Polk; Judges of the Supreme Court, W. H. McHenry and S. H. Berham. The resolutions favor the adoption of the platform of the Indianapolis Convention; recognize the rights of capital, but condemn special legislation in its favor; demand the reduction of official salaries proportionate to the reduction of profits in labor; demand the remonetization of silver; demand equalization of soldiers' bounties; approve and indorse the nominations of Cooper and Cary.

FOREIGN.

THE London Times of Sept. 16, in an article on Turkey's basis of peace, declares that Europe cannot permit Turkey to occupy the Servian fortresses, which she held until 1857. The European powers will be the best judges as to what military force Prince Milan should maintain after they complete their plans. For the sake of peace the Porte should waive the empty form of Prince Milan doing homage to the Sultan. The only safe condition of those proposed by Turkey is the construction of a railway across Servia....A Vienna telegram asserts that Germany will not move in aid of Russia's demands upon Turkey, and in the event of a war will remain absolutely neutral.

THE terms on which Turkey expresses her willingness to negotiate a peace with Servia include the payment of a large war indemnity, or, in lieu thereof, an increased annual tribute; the reoccupation of the fortresses held by the Porte previous to 1857; the destruction of those built by the Servians since that year; the investiture of Prince Milan at Constantinople; the reduction of the Servian army to 10,000 men and three batteries of artillery; and the construction of a railway across the Servian principality.

AN immense meeting on the Eastern question, at which the Lord Mayor presided, was held in London on the 19th of September. An address to the Queen was voted deploring the outrages of the Turks, and praying England no longer to support Turkey from considerations of political expediency. An amendment expressing confidence in the Government was rejected by an overwhelming majority. A motion in favor of the immediate convocation of Parliament was carried.... Turkey has ordered a cessation of hostilities for ten days.

THE report of Mr. Baring, Secretary of the British Legation at Constantinople, on the subject of the Turkish atrocities in Bulgaria, fully corroborates the official accounts previously given of the fearful butcheries which have shocked the entire civilized world. Mr. Baring was assigned by the British Government to the duty of investigating the subject of the Bulgarian massacres, and the arraignment of the Turkish authorities for their encouragement and sanction of the horrible deeds of the Bashi-Bazouks will have the effect of increasing the already intense popular resentment and indignation of the people of Great Britain.... A treaty of peace has been entered into by the Liberian Government with the natives of Cape Palmas, with whom a desultory warfare has been waged for some time past.

A CABLE dispatch reports Lord Beaconsfield (the late Mr. Disraeli) as having delivered a speech at Aylesbury in defense of his course in dealing with the Eastern question. He stigmatized as "worse than the Bulgarian atrocities the conduct of any man who would avail himself of the popular enthusiasm for the attainment of his individual ends by a course which he may know to be injurious to the interests of his country and to the welfare of mankind." This, of course, was meant to apply to Gladstone.

Killed by Cannibals.

The schooner Dancing Wave arrived at Sydney from the Solomon Group, July 4, with the news of a massacre that had been perpetrated by the South Sea natives, Capt. Harrison and all hands, excepting one on board the Dancing Wave, having been murdered. On the 22d of April last the Dancing Wave called at Florida Island to obtain native labor for Somerset. Natives were engaged and brought on board, and there were also others who had received tomahawks and other articles from the Captain in barter. Without warning, the natives rose upon the crew, attacking them with tomahawks. Capt. Harrison was almost instantly killed, together with some of his crew, while the chief officer and steward, after being wounded, reached the cabin, where they shot themselves. A seaman named Broad (or Board) jumped overboard and got to Sayau, forty miles off, in a boat, when the vessel was recovered by the crew of the bark Sydney, and it was then found that the natives had plundered her. It is said that the natives took two heads and one body ashore. Broad, before escaping, shot several of his assailants, and several natives from another island, engaged on board, were also killed.

Subsequent to the receipt of this intelligence Commodore Hoskins received a communication from Consul Layard, at Noumea, dated June 17, to the effect that he had just heard from Capt. Lind, owner of the Laura Lind, that he fell in with the Rev. Mr. Inglis, in the missionary vessel Dayspring, who reported that an English vessel from Queensland had run ashore at Tanna, at a place called Vagoos; that the crew fired at the natives, who attached them in return, burned the vessel, them killed and ate the crew. Capt. Lind had been in Port Resolution, and he says that all the natives who came in agreed as to the destruction of the vessel and her crew.—Melbourne (Australia) Argus.

Result of European Harvests.

Returns show a preponderating decrease in wheat and rye, the two cereals which come chiefly in competition with our own grain, and the results on which alone, therefore, we have presented. In the most important countries, however, —France, Central and Southern Russia and Austro-Hungary—there is an average crop; but the increase in the central and southern provinces of Russia is set off by an amost total failure of wheat in the northern section. The most conspicuous decrease is shown in the case of Prussia and other German States, the falling off applying alike to wheat and rye. As a rule, the failure appears to have occurred in countries lying to the north of the fiftieth parallel of latitude, while everything south of that line comes up to an average standard. We cannot but express a slight suspicion that these returns are, in some degree, affected with that unconscious disposition that clings to all producers to underestimate the quantity of their product. The bearing of the percentages upon the total yield, at the most recent dates, is as follows:

	Acres under Wheat.	Acres under Rye.	Population.
Norway	11,858	32,851	1,742,000
Prussia	4,196,110	10,070,664	24,643,000

The Summer in Spain.

A London Times correspondent in Spain writes an amazing account of the terrible heat which afflicted that country during the past summer. The unusually high temperature scorched and melted all interest in everything else. Revolutions were comparatively cold, and politics made no figure at all. The people turned the twenty-four hours of the day inside out, and all business necessary to be done was done at night. The day was utterly dead, and the sun shone on very few animate forms. Near Cadiz, the location of the correspondent, the temperature rose to 166 degrees in the sun, and field laborers refused to attempt to work under it at 7½d per day of twelve hours. The chronicler relates that while he was writing, at 11:30 p. m., the two candles on his table had bent and twined like snakes from the heat, and were burning—flame downward, and wasting on his table. Under such conditions the sunshiny day was dodged, and the night was converted into business purposes. Only enough work was done to sustain life for the time being, and to do this the whole country was illuminated with artificial light. The people all abandoned the daytime by the instinct of self-preservation and swarmed under the umbrella of darkness for safety.

A Memorable Summer in France.

The summer of 1876 will be long remembered in France for its extraordinary number of deaths. Men of mark are falling around us day by day. We had no spring, winter lingering on to the end of May; then a period of heavy rains, then a few weeks of unparalleled heat, so far as the memory of living men can go. The thermometer has not been so high as on your side of the Atlantic, but the heat has yet been overpowering. For two weeks the sunstrokes numbered fifty-eight daily, and the hospitals were full of people stricken down by congestion. The sanitary reports show that the public health has severely suffered.—Paris Letter.

Silver.

The one silver coin that is most in demand in our cities is the half dime, the coinage of which was discontinued by order of Congress in 1873. We could more easily dispense with the silver dime, because two half dimes will at any time make a dime, but it is not so easy to make two half dimes out of a whole one. In China they chop up the silver pieces and make change, but it cannot be done readily here. On nearly all our city railroads the fare is one-half a dime, and the nickel coins are a nuisance; in San Francisco they repudiate them altogether. We are all ready to join in the cry, "Let us have peace!" but let us have half dimes also.

THE DANGERS OF THE POLE.

Some Discomforting Arctic Speculations.

[From the New York Times.]

The English press has just begun to discuss the question, who is the proprietor of the North pole? The discussion may be a very proper thing, but the English are certainly somewhat late in entering into it months after sending an expedition in search of the pole. If the North pole belongs to the British nation there was no necessity for sending a naval force to take possession of it, and, on the other hand, if it belongs to some other nation, Great Britain is incurring an enormous expense merely in order to hunt up a German, Danish or American pole. This question of proprietorship ought to have been settled long ago, and the cost of the present British polar expedition avoided. There is no doubt that every nation ought to look after its own pole, and that a gratuitous search after a pole to which no one has any clear title is not a business-like procedure.

There seems to be a very fair prospect that the British naval expedition which recently wintered in Smith's Sound, will succeed in reaching the pole during the summer. If it accomplishes this task and returns to England, there will no longer be any room for discussion in regard to the ownership of the pole. England will promptly claim that she has pre-empted the North pole, and will attach it as a province to the Dominion of Canada. It may not prove a very valuable possession, but it will afford the English Cabinet an opportunity to appoint Mr. Whalley, or some equally oppressive statesman, to a Governor Generalship, and to thus get him peaceably out of the country. We ourselves might reap some little benefit from the formal organization of the British province of the North pole, since we could send Sergt. Bates or Rev. Mr. Talmadge as Consul-General to that cool and quiet locality. All this, however, depends not only upon the successful reaching of the pole by the British expedition, but upon its safe return. The former event is rather probable than otherwise, but it can be easily shown that there is very little probability of the expedition's return.

There is, of course, one great difficulty in the way of a naval officer who tries to sail his vessel to the pole. We do not now refer to such obstacles as ice and polar bears, but to the fact that the pole is situated in no less than 360 separate degrees longitude. Now, your scientific navigator, on being ordered to carry his ship to a point situated at the crossing of any single degree of latitude with any single degree of longitude, will take his chronometer, his sextant, and a good slate and pencil, and will soon find his way to the designated place, provided it is not an inland town. But what can the best of navigators do when ordered to sail to the 90th degree of north latitude, and 360 distinct and separate degrees of east or west longitude—the choice of the particular species of longitude being, perhaps, left with him? This is a problem concerning which the best treatise on navigation is silent, and the effect of such an order as the one supposed would probably be to convince the most accomplished navigator that the admiralty authorities were a collection of rare and curious idiots.

But let us suppose that the commander of the British expedition leaves his ships at some reasonable degree of latitude, and setting out overland on sledges contrives to reach the North pole without confusing his mind with nautical observations. When he arrives at his destination he will find one particular spot of the earth's surface which will be the actual extremity of the axis of the earth. Being a British mariner, he will, of course, plant himself on that precise spot, holding the union jack in his hand, and ranging his men about in order to salute the emblem of his country in a proper manner. Mark the inevitable result. The unfortunate commander will instantly begin to revolve on his own axis with the same speed with which the earth revolves. The axis of the earth will, of course, correspond with his personal spine, and the latter will become, so to speak, a mere prolongation of the former. He will have his regular day and night, and his inclination to the plane of the eliptic will give him proper seasons. The spectacle of a captain in the royal navy revolving at tremendous speed on his private axis, with, perhaps, the sun rising behind his eastern whiskers, or gilding the top of his western ear as it sinks below the horizon of his waistband, can hardly fail to appal the minds of his officers and crew, and to keep them rooted to the spot until they are frozen with horror and the prevailing area of low temperature.

Of course, giddiness would almost immediately seize upon the revolving captain, and settle forever the question of his return to England. The assembled ring of mariners would, however, fare no better. Those on one side of the pole would see those opposite to them revolving from east to west, waxing and waning in the shadow of their unhappy commander's legs, and at times totally eclipsed by his coat-tails. If they survived this awful sight, and rushed headlong for the pole, bent upon an immediate return to England, they could not tell what course to steer. A divergence of a quarter of an inch from the true route to London might carry them to Oshkosh or Kamtschatka; and the hope of picking out the meridian of Greenwich from the other 359 tangled degrees of longitude would be simply hopeless.

It is true that scientific persons assert that none of these terrible calamities are possible, and that a party of explorers at the north pole would undergo no more inconvenience from the revolution of the earth than they would were they at the equator. This is all very well, but it should be noticed that while the scientific persons are perpetually egging on the simple mariner to go and find the pole, they never offer to accompany him. The only explanation of this fact is that they are reluctant to try the experiment of revolving on their own axis. They may seek to conceal this humiliating truth by whole slates full of figures, and the most impressive display of familiarity with the procession of the equinoxes and other aristocratic astronomical phenomena. Common sense teaches us that if a man perpetually whirls on his own axis at the rate of speed maintained by the earth, he would undergo a terrible attack of vertigo, and until some scientific person goes to the pole and returns in good condition, we should decline to accept the airy assertion that sailors can visit that locality without danger, or, indeed, with the slightest reasonable hope of ever coming back again.

THE PRESIDENT INTERVIEWED.

His Views of the Campaign—Contemplated Trip Abroad—He Will Settle Down in Washington on His Return—Why Jewell Was Removed.

[From an interview in the New York Herald.]

The President, who was on the piazza listening to the music of the sad sea waves, here called me to join him, and an easy, chatty conversation ensued, of which I will only give such portions as are of a public character.

Correspondent—What do you think of the result in Vermont, Mr. President?

The President—I think it's satisfactory.

Correspondent—"Satisfactory" is not a very enthusiastic word, so that the Democrats may still take heart.

The President (after a pause)—If we carry Ohio and Indiana next month, then I think the Democrats have not the ghost of a chance to carry the country in November.

Correspondent—But how if the Democrats carry Ohio and Indiana in October?

The President—Then, I take it, Tilden is as good as elected. But I do not think that their carrying Ohio is at all probable.

Correspondent—How if the Republicans carry Ohio and the Democrats Indiana—what is the lookout then?

The President (after cogitating a while) —Then the chances are pretty even for both parties.

Correspondent—You are going to make a trip around the world after you get out of office, Mr. President, are you not?

The President—I shall go to Europe, but I shall have no set programme and go just where I like. When I go to a place I shall stay there just as long as I like, and take my time leisurely.

Correspondent—You will be very handsomely received, Mr. President.

The President—I shall be very glad to travel quietly.

This the President said with a deprecatory manner, as though he wanted already to waive off the Lord Mayor's address, the freedom of cities and other botherations of the distinguished traveler, and go about in true Dom Pedro style.

Correspondent—I suppose you have a great desire to go abroad?

The President—The desire is not so great as it has been in years gone by. I have never been abroad.

Correspondent—And after you have finished your travels abroad where do you intend to settle in this country?

[The President—If I had my free choice I suppose I would say in Washington. I have lived longer in Washington, and been more identified with it, than with any other city. I have lived there since 1865—eleven years. (In a tone of meditation.) In 1868 I gave up a position for life for the Presidency.]

The tone and manner in which this was said left no room for doubt that the comparative advantages of a brief tenure of the Presidential office, and of a life occupancy of the Generalship of the army have been seriously pondered by the President of late.

Correspondent—It has been stated in some quarters that you would settle in New York, and in others that you would make Galena your home?

The President—I have never felt identified with Galena—I only lived there a year. As to New York, my means would not allow me to live there, even if I preferred it.

Correspondent—Is not Washington, in your experience, at least as expensive as New York, Mr. President?

The President—Oh, no! The rent of a first-rate house in New York, in the best locality, would be as much as I could live for in Washington. In Washington the only item of great expensiveness consists of entertainments, and these a man can limit according to his means and pleasure. I suppose I shall settle in Washington. I feel at home there. I feel more identified with it than any other city.

Correspondent—Mr. President, I have never yet seen in any paper a satisfactory explanation of Gov. Jewell's removal.

The President (laughing and twinkling at me out of the corners of his shrewd eyes)—There are a great many things of which no exact explanation could be given. I don't know that I could give precisely an explanation of his removal. (Off-handedly.) You select a Cabinet. Well, after a while you find that you do not like a member's way of doing business; why should you not get rid of him? Not that he does anything wrong, but simply that you don't like his way of doing the business intrusted to him; that's all. (Laughing still more and twinkling still more sharply out of the corners of his deep eyes in a persuasive tone.) I got very tired of Mr. Jewell generally at the Cabinet meetings. I have nothing in the world against Gov. Jewell, but I got very tired of him. That's all.

Correspondent—Did you see that recent skit in a New York paper saying that if you strip Gov. Jewell of his kid gloves and patent leather boots, etc., he is about as nude a body as you can find?

The President (shaking with hearty laughter)—Well, if I described my feeling about him for an hour I wouldn't do it any better. Gov. Jewell did nothing wrong—I didn't like his way of doing things; that was all.

(Ye knights of the kid glove and the patent leather boot in President Grant's Cabinet, take warning!)

Vaccination.

Vaccination is encountering much opposition in the north of England. A sale of goods seized by the police in discharge of a penalty for refusing to vaccinate a child took place early in August at Denton. The anti-vaccinators appeared in force and held an open-air mass meeting previous to the sale. A Methodist minister condemned compulsory vaccination and asked the crowd to subscribe and buy in the property—a silver watch, two pictures and a table. A hat was passed around, and the contumacious citizen lost nothing through resistance to the law.

Commercial Values Changing.

In several classes of goods an important upward tendency in prices has become apparent, more especially within the past month. In the cotton goods trade, the change of tone is conspicuous. On bleached goods a general advance of 2½ to 5 per cent. has been established, and the market still shows firmness. On printing cloths a rise of 25 per cent. has occurred, and on prints an advance of 7½ to 10 per cent. These improvements are due entirely to the changed relations between production and consumption. In woolen fabrics there are no such definite symptoms of improvement, although the market is steadier than at any period since the panic, the difficulty being that we have an undoubted excess of woolen machinery, and especially of the class that produces second and third rate goods, and that, although a large percentage of the looms are now idle, yet they are liable to resume work the moment any signs of recovery appear. There are isolated branches, notably the flannel trade, which show firmness in prices. In silk textures an advance of 5 to 15 per cent. has been well established, while on other articles of this class, such as sewings and twists, the rise has ranged from 10 to 25 per cent. The wool market, after settling to an extremely low range of values in sympathy with the depressed condition of the woolen trade, has established an advance of 4 to 5 cents per pound, or at the rate of 10 to 12½ per cent. upon the leading classes of wool.

* * * * * * * *

Hides, after being long stagnant, have, within the last two weeks, developed an activity which has established an advance of 1 to 2 cents per pound. The most remarkable change has occurred in petroleum. Since the middle of June, the price of refined oil has advanced from 14½ to 25 cents. This change amounts to an increase of $24,000,000 in the value of our exportable surplus of this article. Coffee and sugars also show considerable firmness.—New York Bulletin.

Death of the Oldest Son of Hon. Wm. H. Seward.

Maj. Augustus H. Seward died this morning at the residence of his brother, Frederick W. Seward, in Montrose, Westchester county. Maj. Seward came from his post in St. Paul, Minn., three months since, to consult occulists in this city for a disease which proved to be paralysis of the eye. While under treatment his strength gradually failed until a few days since, when his friends became seriously alarmed. On Saturday Dr. Hammond pronounced his recovery impossible. On Saturday evening, when his cousin, Clarence A. Seward, left Montrose, he was suffering severely, but no fatal result was immediately apprehended.

The deceased was the eldest son of the late Gov. Seward. He received his military education at West Point, where he graduated creditably, and received an appointment as Second Lieutenant in the army. During his twenty-eight years' service in the army, his character and bearing as an officer and a gentleman won for him the confidence of the Government, the regard of all with whom he was associated, and the esteem of all who knew him.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

No More Torture.

An important notification has been issued by the Prime Minister of Japan which will have the effect of abolishing torture in criminal proceedings. By the old law no criminal could be punished without first having confessed the crime imputed to him, and the confession in obstinate cases had to be extorted by torture, with the inevitable result that persons falsely accused often confessed to crimes of which they were innocent. The notification rather adroitly evades the fact that the use of torture has been one of the instruments in criminal procedure, by proclaiming that "verdicts in criminal cases shall be given on the evidence adduced."

British Emigration.

The last report from the English Board of Trade shows that the total emigration from the United Kingdom during the last year, including British subjects, foreigners and others whose nationalities cannot be distinguished, amounted to 173,800 persons. of these, 105,046 went to the United States, 17,378 to British North America, 35,525 to Australasia, and 15,860 to other places. An analysis of nationalities shows that of the total number above mentioned, 140,676 were persons of British origin, 84,540 of whom were English, 14,686 Scotch, and 41,449 Irish.

SOUTHERN AFFAIRS FROM A NEW STANDPOINT.

Interesting Correspondence Between a New Hampshire Clergyman and a Colored Brother in Virginia—What an Ex-Slave and Colored Preacher Has to Say to a Northern Republican.

[From the Richmond Whig.]

REV. SILAS CURTIS, OF CONCORD, N. H., TO HIS COLORED REV. BROTHER IN RICHMOND, VA.

CONCORD, N. H., July 26.

DEAR BROTHER DUNJEE: On the 12th instant I sent you a check for $50, and have received no receipt or anything from you since.

To-day I received a letter from Harper's Ferry in which is the following sentence: "The report is current here that Bro. Dunjee has gone over to the rebels, and is going to stump for Tilden and Hendricks. I am afraid it is so."

My Dear Bro. Dunjee, is there any truth in that report? Have you even had a thought of doing such a thing? If you have, I pray you pause before you take a single step in that direction. Such a course would be a cause of great grief to all your true friends, and all the true lovers of freedom and piety. In doing this you will bring a wound and reproach upon your mission work among freedmen, and ruin your own usefulness as a minister of Christ. How will all those feel who have contributed for your support in our mission work, for Richmond meeting house, etc., etc., if you now desert your brethren and go over to the old rebs, the haters of the colored man and the cause of freedom, and give your influence to strengthen the hands of such men as Jeff Davis, and those who have murdered thousands and thousands of your colored brethren at the South within a few years past to prevent them from voting for the cause of their own God-given rights? Oh, this cannot be. I will not believe it can be so till I hear more from you. Do write me by return mail and send receipt for the $50, and tell me if there is any foundation for the report to which I have alluded; and be entreated to go no further in that direction, if you have taken one step, until you consult with your true friends, Brothers Morrell, Stewart, Burgess, Anthony, Chase, etc., etc.

Do not fail to let me hear from you at once, and give the facts on this subject.

Yours truly,
SILAS CURTIS.

P. S.—Tilden and Hendricks are identified with the old rebel party, and will be supported by ex-rebels of the Jeff Davis stripe, and those who sympathized with them during the war and since, and I would just as soon vote for Jeff Davis for President as I would for Sam Tilden, the former associate of Boss Tweed, of New York, and always a rebel sympathizer.

THE REPLY OF REV. JOHN W. DUNJEE, OF RICHMOND, VA., TO HIS REV. BROTHER IN CONCORD, N. H.—WHO ARE THE REAL FRIENDS OF THE COLORED MAN IN THE SOUTH—THE CONVINCING TESTIMONY OF AN EX-SLAVE.

RICHMOND, Aug. 21, 1876.

DEAR BROTHER CURTIS: Yours of July 20th is before me, asking me about rumors which you have heard in regard to my going over to the "rebels." First, I would state that I have tried to fulfill my whole duty in my work here, and have not at any time neglected my mission duties. No man is more interested in all that pertains to the best welfare of the colored people and their highest development. So, I have tried to conduct myself and teach my people that it is their Christian duty to make friends with the white people of the South, among whom they live. This can be done without sacrificing any principal of manhood; in fact, the Southern people do not ask the colored people to compromise a single right. But we who live here see the great importance of a full and manly reconciliation between the two races.

This can be done by dividing the colored vote between the two parties. As soon as it is thus divided they will cease to an object of ostracism and bone of contention. Both parties will then treat them with due respect. Take Virginia, and the white people of this State are as friendly to the colored people as they are anywhere in America; the most friendly feelings exist between the two races. What we who are interested in the great cause of humanity are endeavoring to do is to break down all color lines and altogether forget slavery, the war and the past, and go on to higher attainments and a broader Christian manhood. I believe the white people of the South are true in the professions they are now making. They do no desire any more slavery; they will stand by all the results of the war; they are in the Union to go out no more forever. They are laboring nobly in our State for public education without regard to color. I have every right in Richmond that I would have in Boston. They are doing all for the colored people in a benevolent way they can do. You know the late war laid its withering hand upon the South, and there are many poor people, both white and black; notwithstanding, there are many of the white gentlemen who have contributed largely to mission work for our people in Richmond and other places in the South. There are 31,000 colored people in this city who are depending on the whites for the bread they eat. Many poor people of color would starve to death here but for the kindness of the whites in giving them shelter and food. You can have no idea of the true condition of things here. Now, in face of all these facts, I do not think the white people of the South are very dangerous rebels. Just a word about some of our troubles. You have heard much talk about "carpet-baggers." You have no idea the amount of trouble these men have given us. Men who were of the worst characters in the North, who were from the lowest haunts of New York and Boston, men as bad as crime could make them, who were negro-haters at the North, have come South and taken advantage of the ignorance of the colored people, and have been elevated to places of high trust in our State Governments, for the sole purpose on their part to plunder the public. This same class of men have arrayed the colored people against the whites for political purposes, and, when trouble comes, desert them. All the mobs which we have had in the South have been gotten up by bad men. I know we have some lawless white men here, but the good people of the South must not be blamed for their acts. You have them at the North with you.

This wild and fruitless contest has been going on for years, and who are the sufferers. The colored men, being the weaker party, always lose ground, and must at last go to the wall if the fight is kept up. I know you in New Hampshire may not see this matter as I do, but I tell you that the negro of the South must go under if the policy of the last few years is to be continued. Now, if the Home Missions Board discharges me for these sentiments I regret it, but cannot yield my honest convictions. I am sorry I cannot make them see the rightfulness of my position. You ask me what the persons who have contributed from time to time for my support would think. To this I would say, if they understood my true position, they would, I think, make those contributions more readily than ever. The negro is now passing through the most critical period of his history, and his destiny for good or evil will be sealed by his action. If he arrays himself against the white people, he must, sooner or later, be ground to powder. There is no natural antagonism between the two races in the South; the whites and blacks were born and brought up together, and live and die together. The late trouble at Hamburg, S. C., and other troubles we have had in the South since the war, have not been the result of ill-feeling on the part of our home people, but are the result of the action of bad men who have come South and kept up, from year to year, the most bitter political contest, and have used every effort to keep the white and colored people from making friends. One of their principal means is the wholesale use of bad whisky—also appealing to the very worst passions of the ignorant. No stone is left unturned on their part to exasperate and excite the feelings of our poor people, which might at any time be kindled to a flame which might result in bloodshed. I only wonder we have not had ten riots where we have had one. Now, I say that every good man in the South, white and black, ought to join hands and rid our section from this terrible state of things. I hope you will not misunderstand me; these charges are not against the good people of the North. We will give the most hearty welcome to any good man in the North who may come among us for that purpose. I think that if you were to live here a few years you would take the same stand we have. We have some men from the North who are highly respected, but all of these take the same stand, and are not the men objected to. The colored men, if they are to be citizens of this country, must differ just as white men do on all the great questions of the day, such as finance, tariff, taxation, and questions of law, trade, etc. Until we arrive at this point we will be mere machines, and not men in the true sense of the term. In conclusion, I would call your attention to the report of the Hon. B. B. Douglas, of Virginia, on the Freedman's bank fraud, and the speech of Hon. W. S. Stinger, of Pennsylvania, on the subject. I would also call your attention to the large amount of money stolen from the widows and orphans of the colored soldiers and sailors. The district ring and many other things might be mentioned, but time and space will not allow it. The colored voter of the South, as ruled by the Radicals, has no liberty in the use of his ballot; which liberty we claim and must have, or continue slaves. He should be taught independence and self-reliance. Please answer me a few questions.

Who should be the best judge of the true condition of the Southern people? I, who was born and brought up in the South, as I have been, and served twenty-seven years of my life a slave (when a boy I played with white boys, and know there is no natural bad feeling between the two races), or yourself? What can you in New Hampshire and Maine know of our condition down here? When you call our people "rebels" you do them a great wrong. I believe the people of the South are as loyal to the Union as those of the North. I ask you, as a Christian, do you think it right to be constantly abusing the Southern people? They have come back to the Union and fully accepted all of the amendments to the constitution, with all the results of the war. The only reason why they have made such an effort to get hold of their own State Governments is to protect themselves from the wicked plunderings and robbery of carpet-baggers; and every good man, white and black, ought to join hands to emancipate our section from this fearful state of things. Remember, that our homes in the South are as dear to us as yours in New Hampshire. Now, how would you like your State to be infested with a gang of these political thieves, from another far country, plundering the public treasury and leaving a tax on the people too heavy for them to bear, exciting riots, causing bloodshed? I ask you, would you help them to continue the work of destruction against your own people? I tell you this is our condition, and the colored people are the main agency by which they are enabled to do their work; and in my judgment, nothing but a division of the colored vote can bring peace and prosperity which we so much need, and I feel that no pulpit work or mission effort will enable me to do as much for my race as this work. I have given this matter eleven years thought, and for years I have taken great pains to inform myself as to the true feeling of the people of the South, and these are my conclusions: First, that the whites desire live with the colored people in peace and quietness, and are doing all they can to gain that object. They do not want all of the colored people to vote the Democratic ticket, but believe it would be best to divide their vote between the two parties. This point would have been gained years ago but for the terror of the Radical party and its loyal leagues. There has been no intimidation in the South worse than that practiced by the carpet bagger party of the South. I do not charge the colored people with this cruelty. They are not to blame; they are only tools in the hands of these bad men. I have known some colored men to be whipped, some turned out of their churches and all kinds of intolerant abuse have been heaped upon those colored men who dared vote the Democratic ticket. In some parts of the South the life of a colored man (Democrat) is not very safe. I submit these facts to you as the honest convictions of my heart, and must say I can not accept your advice, because in so doing I would not do justice to myself and race.

Yours, with great respect.
JOHN W. DUNJEE.

A BRAVE SOLDIER'S VIEWS.

Gen. Bartlett for Tilden.

[From the Boston Post.]

Among the people of Berkshire county there is perhaps no one whose sentiments on political topics are entitled to greater weight than are those of Gen. Bartlett. His gallant services during the war and his wide reputation as an able, conscientious and upright citizen since the surrender at Appomattox have secured for him a warm place in the hearts of his countrymen. Gen. Bartlett has been well-known hitherto as belonging to that large class of independent voters, and that these people may know the sentiments of so distinguished a member of their ranks, I am kindly permitted to make public the substance of a brief interview which I had with the General to-day.

"I have no hesitation in saying that I am earnestly and heartily in favor of the election of Tilden and Hendricks," said Gen. Bartlett, in answer to a question as to his position in the present campaign. "I think that the early prosperity and welfare of the country are entirely dependent on their success."

"Do you think you express the sentiments of the class of voters to which you belong?" I asked.

"Whether they are the sentiments of a majority of the independent voters of the country I am not able to say," replied Gen. Bartlett, "but they seem to be entirely consistent with what I regard as the platform of the Independent Reformers, namely, the Fifth Avenue Address. I entirely agree with Parke Godwin in his interpretation of that address. Mr. Hayes may be a very respectable gentleman, but, in my opinion, he is nevertheless the man described in the address as 'the man who ought not to be nominated,' while Gov. Tilden appears to me to be exactly the kind of a man which the address described as the man who ought to be nominated. As Governor of New York he has shown that he possesses both the ability and the courage to institute and carry out the reforms which are so much needed in the administration of the national Government, and which the people so earnestly desire. To quote the address: 'His capacity and courage for the work of reform are matters of record rather than of promise.'"

"Then you have no faith in the promises made by Gov. Hayes in his letter of acceptance?"

"Gov. Hayes may mean well enough, but look at the men who are supporting him! Does anybody suppose that on the event of his election Gov. Hayes is going to say to Mr. Blaine, Mr. Chandler, Mr. Morton, Mr. Conkling, Gen. Butler, and the rest of them, 'You are the men who have brought the country into disgrace,' and then turn his back upon them? Such a supposition is absurd upon the face of it. Look at Gen. Kilpatrick's letter to Gov. Hayes. That shows the kind of men who are supporting the Republican candidates. I regard that letter as simply infamous, and if it can be shown that Gov. Hayes received the letter without denouncing its author openly at once, it ought to defeat him by itself."

"Being a soldier, yourself, General, what is your opinion of Gen. Dix's circular calling for the organization of the 'Boys in Blue' to aid in the election of Gov. Hayes?"

"That circular," replied the General, forcibly, "is simply infamous, and it will hurt Gov. Hayes and his cause far more than it can help him. I am confident that the soldiers who carried a musket in the army will not be influenced by any such appeals. The war is over, and what the country wants is peace and good feeling throughout all sections. I notice, by the way," continued Gen. Bartlett, "that some of my Independent friends, including Carl Schurz, who joined the Liberal party in 1872 and cordially supported Mr. Greeley, now attempt to explain their opposition to Mr. Tilden by stating that they fear the influence of the 'ex-Confederates' in case Mr. Tilden is elected. Now the absurdity of this excuse appears when it is suggested that they did not entertain those fears in 1872, when they obtained in a tenfold proportion to what they do now."

In further conversation, Gen. Bartlett expressed himself disappointed at the attitude taken by such men as Hon. Carl Schurz and Bristow in the present campaign. He did not see how it was possible for them to overlook the influences which were at work for Gov. Hayes, and having observed them, they could scarcely fail to see what the result of such influences would be on Gov. Hayes' administration. In conclusion, the General spoke in terms of highest praise of Gov. Tilden's reform record, and of his noble and statesmanlike qualities. He was satisfied in his own mind that Gov. Tilden was an earnest sympathizer with the cause of the Union during the war, and the attempts of the Republicans to prove that he was anything else only showed in what desperate straits they were placed. He suspected that the Republicans were conscious of the inferiority of Gov. Hayes as a reform candidate, and they were trying to dodge that paramount issue by appealing to the old war feeling.

Gen. Bartlett's long silence on the political questions of the day, it should be stated, are entirely due to his ill-health. The terrible wounds he received in the war, which left him with but one leg, shattered his health greatly, and latterly, by over-exertion in business, he has brought himself down to a sick bed. He is now able to take a short ride during each day, and he is allowed to converse a few moments with visitors, but beyond this he has to be kept very quiet. Gen. Bartlett hopes to be able to write a letter more fully defining his position shortly, but excepting this he will not be able to take any part in the campaign. His physicians have peremptorily ordered him to avoid all political excitement as the one condition of his early recovery, and he will of course abide by their decision.

THE HAYES PLATFORM.

An Administration which Gov. Hayes Approves and is Expected to Imitate.

[From the New York Sun.]

"The National Administration merits commendation for its honorable work in the management of domestic and foreign affairs, and President Grant deserves the continued and hearty gratitude of the American people for his patriotism and his immense services in war and in peace."

The above is the most significant plank in the Republican platform adopted by the convention which nominated Rutherford B. Hayes for President. Among the most characteristic and important features of Grant's administration, which is so highly commended, are the following:

Gift-Taking.—Gen. Grant began his administration of the Presidential office by appointing as members of his Cabinet, and to other offices, men who had made him valuable gifts. He has continued the practice of accepting presents from people wanting favors from him, until his greediness in this regard has become a common subject of ridicule.

Pensioning Relatives on the Treasury.—It is notorious that Grant has burdened the Government with the support of all his worthless relatives, as well as the most of those who are connected with his family by marriage, by appointing them to offices that they were usually incompetent to fill. His son Fred has been given rapid and undeserved promotion for loitering in Washington, and on his graduation from West Point was sent on a European tour at the expense of the United States, in violation of army regulations.

Jobbery.—Grant's administration has been especially distinguished by the number and audacity of jobbing rings which have flourished under it. The most of these have received protection and encouragement from the President; some of them have been largely managed from the White House.

The San Domingo Job.—This was a favorite scheme with Grant, who made a secret treaty to lobby with Congress for its accomplishment. It was a conspiracy concocted by Grant, Babcock, several adventurers, and Baez, the usurping ruler of San Domingo, for the traitorous sale of the country by the latter, against the will of the people. This, it was supposed, would give value to certain concessions held by the San Domingo ring, and make the conspirators rich. Grant illegally used the United States navy to protect Baez from the fury of the Dominicans while his bargain was pending. The expense of the United States attending the prosecution of the job could not have been less than $2,000,000, all thrown away without authority of law. Senator Sumner opposed this atrocious scheme, and Grant gratified his revenge for this by humiliating Mr. Sumner in the Senate.

Attempted Kidnapping.—During the winter of 1871 the conduct of the President in relation to the San Domingo job was undergoing investigation by Congress. In accordance with instructions from the White House the Secret Service of the Treasury was used in an attempt to kidnap and abduct, upon a fabricated charge of murder, Mr. Raymond H. Perry, of Rhode Island, an important Government witness. The officers of the Secret Service were informed that the contemplated abduction was necessary to "vindicate the integrity of the President."

Black Friday.—In 1869 a conspiracy was concocted by Jay Gould, Jim Fisk, A. R. Corbin, a brother-in-law of the President, and others, to effect a colossal speculation by running up the price of gold to an extravagant point. In order to obtain early secret information of the intentions of Government in regard to sales of gold the conspirators procured the appointment of Gen. Butterfield, an old friend of Corbin's, to the office of Sub-Treasurer in New York. Then the assistance of President Grant was sought and obtained. Grant gave orders to the Secretary of the Treasury to stop the sales of Government gold, and the conspirators went to work in Wall street, running up the price from 136 to 163, or thereabouts. Becoming alarmed, Grant hastily rescinded his order, and the speculation broke down Sept. 24, when one of the most frightful financial panics ever known occurred, resulting in the ruin of many business men. Fisk and Gould narrowly escaped lynching by the infuriated brokers for their participation in the plot, and the day of that panic has ever since been known as "Black Friday." Mrs. Grant made $25,000 out of this job; but Porter and Babcock, the confidential Secretaries of the President, lost $45,000.

Violations of the Constitution.—It has been the custom of President Grant to treat with utter disregard the requirements of the constitution and the laws when they interfered with the execution of his designs.

Usurping State Governments.—Twice President Grant, in utter defiance of the principles of Republican Government, has, without authority of law, used the United States army to overthrow the legally elected State government of Louisiana, in order to oblige his brother-in-law, the notorious Casey, who wished to be elected United States Senator. He wanted to do the same thing in Arkansas, but was overruled by Congress, notwithstanding his personal efforts to influence the members.

The District of Columbia Ring.—The history of this infamous association of swindlers is familiar to the whole country. A ring formed for purposes of plunder has had absolute control of the District of Columbia for years, and by means of false measurements and fraudulent vouchers supplied by Babcock, while confidential Secretary of the President, and by other devices, has succeeded in plundering the Treasury of millions of dollars which the tax-payers of the different States will have to make good. Boss Shepherd, the leader of this ring, is one of the most intimate personal friends of Grant, who has aided him to the utmost extent of his ability, in his designs against the public funds. Grant is believed to be a secret partner in the ring real estate pool.

Conspiring with Professional Burglars.—In consequence of the ruinous effects of Boss Shepherd's extravagance upon the interests of property holders in Washington who were outside of the ring, the leading citizens petitioned Congress to investigate the doings of the Shepherd government. One of the most prominent of these citizens was Mr. Columbus Alexander, and in order to punish him for interfering with the ring schemes, Dick Harrington, then Assistant District Attorney, through the United States secret service, hired professional burglars to break open his own safe, and then swear that Mr. Alexander employed them to commit the crime. The conspiracy failed, and when Harrington was on trial for his share in it, President Grant, in order to influence the jury, invited him from the criminal dock to a particularly select reception at the White House. Gen. Babcock, Grant's confidential secretary, is now under indictment for being concerned in the same conspiracy.

The Whisky Rings.—Since Grant has been in office various whisky rings, in consideration of contributing liberally to Republican election funds, and for other considerations which Gen. Babcock could best explain, have been permitted to defraud the revenue by selling untaxed whisky. It is a moderate estimate to say that more than One Hundred Million Dollars have thus been diverted from the treasury by the whisky rings, all of which must be replaced by taxing the people. Mr. Bristow was driven out of Grant's Cabinet for endeavoring to break up these rings, and punish the thieves who composed them.

Enormous Defalcations.—The business of the various executive departments under Grant's administration has been so loosely conducted, and the appointments to office have been so badly made, that the books of the treasury on June 19, 1876, showed defalcations on the part of Grant's officeholders which had accumulated since he was inaugurated President, amounting in the aggregate to Five Million Five Hundred Thousand Five Hundred and Ninety-five Dollars. The tax-payers must make this good.

Robbing the Freedmen.—The failure of the Freedmen's Savings Bank, with an indebtedness to depositors of over $3,000,000, has defrauded over 70,000 poor freedmen of their little earnings, which they had been induced to intrust with the rotten concern under the false pretence that it was a Government institution. This wholesale robbery of poor negroes was mainly committed by the most intimate personal friends of the President, and he could have prevented it if he had wished to, for the irregularities in the management of the bank were fully exposed in the Sun four years before the swindling institution closed its doors. The Seneca Sandstone Company, in which Grant was financially interested, participated in this robbery of the negro depositors in the Freedman's bank.

The Sioux War.—The hostilities conducted against the Sioux, which have resulted in an expenditure of millions of dollars, in the Custer massacre, and in a threatened outbreak of all the wild Indians in the Northwest, was entirely unnecessary. It was caused by a violation, from avaricious motives, of a treaty made in 1868. The violation of a solemn agreement with the Indians was made in order to afford some personal friends of Grant an opportunity to seize and speculate upon mineral tracts and town sites in the Black Hills country, and for no other reason. It was simply a national infamy, accomplished for private gain. It is believed that young John Delano and Fred Grant were two of the most active members of the Black Hills ring.

Increased Taxation.—The expenses of the United Government under Grant have been extravagant beyond comparison for a time of peace. For six years of his administration, ending June 30, 1875, the public expenditures amounted to more than four thousand million dollars, all of which has been exacted from an overtaxed people, and a large portion of which has been stolen by Republican thieves in office, and their accomplices. The late Democratic House of Representatives succeeded in getting a reduction of about $30,000,000 in the appropriation bills; but they were fought at every step by Grant and the Republican Senate, who desires to have more money voted than ever before.

Ruining the Navy.—The recent Congressional investigation of the management of the Navy Department by Secor Robeson shows that under the present administration two hundred million dollars have been expended, but that, according to the testimony of Admiral Porter, we have not a single first-class vessel, and that, "as a whole, the navy is worth nothing." It was also proved that the most scandalous fraud, corruption and larceny had characterized the administration of naval affairs from the day that Robeson entered the office. This dishonest and incompetent Secretary will, undoubtedly, be impeached when Congress meets again; but he is a great favorite with Grant, and he is sustained by all the Republican leaders. Secor Robeson is an enthusiastic supporter of Hayes.

Creating an Oligarchy of Officeholders.—When President Grant entered office in 1869, the officeholders on the civil list of the United States numbered 54,267. In 1875 they aggregated 94,119, being an increase of about forty thousand in six years only of Grant's administration. Many of these render no service to the country, but are merely political pensioners on the Treasury, who, in return for the money they draw, are expected to work for the perpetuation in power of the corrupt Republican organization. It is this immense army of placemen who seek to usurp the control of our Government, leaving the people no voice in the conduct of affairs. It is the officeholders who constitute and manage all Republican nominating conventions; it is the officeholders who conduct political canvasses, and are relied upon to manipulate and, if necessary, to falsify election returns. Mr. Hayes, in opposition to the old Democratic principle of rotation in office, which has always been held to be the only effectual barrier to the creation of an office-holding aristocracy, proposes to give a life tenure of office to these men, and thus render them entirely independent of public opinion. This will account for the enthusiasm they manifest for his election. All of these officeholders, on the occasion of every important election, are compelled to contribute money for political purposes, and thus enormous corruption funds are raised to use against the people who wish to reform the Government.

Grant's Reconstruction Policy.—This has consisted of depriving the people of the right of self-government, interfering with troops to carry elections for the Republican party, and nullifying the will of the people as expressed at the polls when the verdict was unfavorable to the rule of ignorance and corruption. The public debt of nearly all the reconstructed States was comparatively small at the end of the war; under negro and carpet-bag rule it was rolled up to an aggregate of over One Hundred and Ninety-four Million Dollars, while the taxation for local purposes has often amounted practically to confiscation. An immense number of farms, as well as large tracts of unimproved lands, have been seized and sold by the Sheriffs to satisfy the insatiate greed of the plunderers who have represented Grant's administration in the South, and who have succeeded in impoverishing the owners of vast portions of the most productive territory in America, thus ruining the best market for Northern manufactures that there is in the world. The present policy of Grant and the men who are managing the campaign for Hayes is to rekindle the sectional animosities which are dying out both North and South; to incite race disturbances, disorganize labor, and put those of the Southern people who have redeemed themselves from the rule of the carpet-baggers back into a territorial condition, where they will be helpless to protect themselves from utter ruin. Of course the success of this policy would be disastrous to the financial interests of the whole country; but the officeholders who control the Republican party, and who would control Hayes should he be elected, care nothing for that. It is their own interests they are looking after, and as a prominent Republican Senator has expressed it, they believe that there are "five years more of good stealing" yet in the South.

These are a few of the most conspicuous features of that policy which the Cincinnati Convention has officially approved. To a continuance of these methods of administration Gov. Hayes is virtually pledged. Those who like this style of government cannot do better than to vote for Hayes and Wheeler.

HAYES AT HOME.

The Standing of Rutherford B. Hayes Among Those who Know Him Best.

To the Editor of the New York World:

SIR: The Republican candidate for President, Rutherford B. Hayes, was a resident of the city of Cincinnati, O., for about twenty years preceding his removal to Fremont, O., after his defeat for Congress by Gen. Banning in 1872. His profession was that of a lawyer, practicing in the city and county courts. He was once elected City Solicitor, twice elected Governor, a position under the constitution of Ohio requiring no talent beyond that possessed by a mere, figure-head, once elected to Congress, and once defeated for Congress in a district that had given a Republican majority at every Congressional election for ten years, except one, when Gen. Cary succeeded, as a Republican, receiving Democratic votes in defeating the regular nominee, the good Deacon Richard Smith, of the Cincinnati Gazette.

His business associates, therefore, for more than twenty years were the lawyers of the Hamilton county bar. They know his capacity for business, his ability and his integrity better than any any other class of persons do in the United States. His standing among them may be inferred from the support they gave him, and here it may be worthy of notice that partisanism during this period of time was at a discount and merit appreciated at several elections in said city for judicial positions, where the influence of the bar was most exerted; as is shown by the elections of Judge Hoadley, a Republican; Judge Taft, a Republican; Judge Coffin, a Republican; Judge Tapia, a Democrat, and Judge Tilden, a Republican, or nonpartisan, to the Superior Court bench without opposition.

Now, what is Mr. Hayes' standing among his legal friends and associates? Not a single attorney who voted the Democratic ticket during the residence of Rutherford B. Hayes in Cincinnati, or who had voted the Democratic ticket since his removal to Fremont, will support him for President of the United States, but on the contrary, every one of them is now supporting Tilden and Hendricks.

Judge Hoadley, who has not voted the Democratic ticket for more than twenty years, and who was one of the Judges of the Superior Court of Cincinnati during all the time that Rutherford B. Hayes practiced at the Cincinnati bar, will not support him for President, but, on the contrary, is now a very prominent political speaker, supporting with all his great power as an orator and later Tilden and Hendricks. Judge Stallo, formerly one of the Judges of the Court of Common Pleas, who has no voted a Democratic ticket for more than twenty-five years, will not support his associate Rutherford B. Hayes for President, but on the contrary has already delivered a most effective speech for Tilden and Hendricks. E. W. Kitridge, a lawyer with a most extensive practice during all the time that Rutherford B. Hayes was at the Cincinnati bar and since, and who never cast a Democratic ballot in his life, will not support him for President, but on the contrary is now engaged in canvassing his county for Tilden and Hendricks. William S. Groesbeck and Charles Reemelin, old lawyers of the Cincinnati bar, who have sometimes voted the Republican and sometimes the Democratic ticket, but who voted for Hayes for Governor as against Gov. Allen on the financial issues of the Ohio campaign in 1875, are now supporting Tilden and Hendricks. Fred Hassaurek, the distinguished and talented editor, formerly an associate of Rutherford B. Hayes at the bar, and heretofore a Republican, is a warm supporter of Tilden and Hendricks. Emil Hoffman, a younger lawyer, and Chief Deputy Clerk of the Court of Common Pleas, who has always voted the Republican ticket, is now supporting Tilden and Hendricks. Jacob Wolf, an old lawyer, who has voted the Republican ticket for fifteen years, now supports Tilden and Hendricks. Judge Oliver, who was one of the Judges of the Court of Common Pleas during and after the war, and who at that time and for several years supported the Republican party, but more recently a Democrat, supports Tilden and Hendricks. Judge Mallon, one of the Judges of the Court of Common Pleas, immediately preceding and for the first year of the war, and a practising attorney since, who was a war Democrat and frequently voted the Republican ticket, supports Tilden and Hendricks. C. W. Merrill, a Republican lawyer who joined the Liberal Republicans in 1872, but who again supported the Republican State ticket in 1875, now supports Tilden and Hendricks. Captain Irwin B. Wright, E. S. Throop, late Adjutant Sixth Ohio; James Maloney, Assistant Prosecuting Attorney; Andrew Knell, Geo. H. Harries, H. D. Peck, Judson Harmon, Moses Wilson, John Healy, Ransford Smith and H. F. Brashears, Republican lawyers who joined the Liberal Republican movement in 1872, and have since acted with the Democratic party, now support Tilden and Hendricks. In addition to the above there are several Republican lawyers who have not yet declared for Hayes and may join the Democratic party at the ensuing election. Such is the estimate placed upon the Republican candidate for President by those who know him best. He never distinguished himself at the bar, but always ranked as a very ordinary attorney, never excelling a second-rate lawyer. He was always a candidate for office, and allied himself with the Sands-Eggleston faction in the Republican party to secure his nominations. The city of Cincinnati will vote against him for President.

CINCINNATI, Aug. 24, 1876.

Fashions in Men's Dress.

The prevailing style for general wear is a morning coat and waistcoat from a neat-figured or small diagonal worsted cloth, with trousers from a check or striped pattern, according to taste. Coat to button three buttons, of medium length, moderately cut away from the lower button. Pockets in the plaits behind and no flaps. Waistcoat single-breasted, with a small step collar buttoning high to correspond with the coat. Trousers cut easy and straight to the leg, falling well over the boot.

Plaids are still very fashionable for undress, traveling, and business suits; the principal colors used are brown combined with red and purple. The leading style of coat for suits of this description is a single-breasted and button sack, the buttons far apart and worn buttoned. Pockets under flaps in front, with an outside breast pocket. Vest single-breasted without a collar. The double-breasted frock coat continues in favor for better wear, and is either made up plain or with silk breast facings and braided. Plain and neat diagonals are preferred to faced cloths. Double-breasted white waistcoats are worn with the frock; trousers from a stylish plaid or smart stripe, the striped patterns being considered the more dressy.—New York Evening Post.

Playing Ghost.

A few nights ago a party of Vicksburg young ladies induced one of their male acquaintances to cover himself with a sheet and sally forth to play the ghost on another party of young ladies, which was expected to come along the street. The ghost went out, but before coming up with the girls met a young man, who, being curious to know if a ghost would stand fire, whipped out his pistol and began to shoot. The ghost didn't stand it two seconds.

Hotel Prices Must Come Down.

It is an open secret that the watering place season has been unprofitable to hotel keepers and unsatisfactory to the guests. At a time of all others when high prices were least appropriate, they have been maintained, and the result is exactly what was predicted and expected. The days of excelsior figures are gone, and no man can tell when they will return.

A Niger in the Woodpile.

A few of our citizens will doubtless remember an article Weamer wrote, calling Mr. Williams, our candidate for Governor an old fraud. It was about some allowances which were made for cork-screws, hair brushes, &c. Most of the article was copied from the New York "Times," and as we know that that paper has done nothing but falsify since the campaign opened, we thought we would look up the matter. The following communication from Washington will explain itself:

Tom. C. Mays,
Editor Courier,
Auburn, Indiana.

I notice an article copied from the N. Y. "Times" in the "Republican" in reference to the purchase of a lot of articles, which was reported as having been approved by Hon. J. D. Williams, as Chairman of Committee on Accounts.—Now, the facts in the case are these.—The purchase of these articles, which I give in statement below, was made by Edward McPherson, the former Clerk of the House of Reps., Nov. 27th, 1875 and the goods delivered to him as such clerk. But the bills were not presented for payment until the present Clerk, Hon. Geo. M. Adams was sworn into office. When the bills were presented for payment having been approved by the former Clerk, the goods having been purchased and received by said officer, with his approval of same. It was the duty of Chairman of Committee on Accounts to approve of same and a failure to do so would have left the parties who furnished the goods without their money and would have been a repudiation of a debt honestly contracted, by these merchants.

I certify that the foregoing bills for goods furnished the House of Rept. are correct and that they were bought by Ed. McPherson, Clerk of the House of Reps. U. S. before the convening of the present Congress Dec. 6th, 1876.

E. T. Keightly.
Asst. Chief Clerk of the House of Reps.

The goods were contracted for by the Republican Clerk of the former House the accounts certified to by him and the goods delivered, and the Committee on Accounts, both Republicans and Democrats, after investigating the matter, could do naught else but allow them.—Mr. Keightly gives the facts above without comment, showing that it is a fair statement and that Clerk McPherson contracted for these articles as the agent of the government.

Fifty-seven thousand dollars is what "Blue Jeans" saved the people—that stern old economist whom the Republicans hereabouts are calling a fraud.—That's the kind of men we want around our state legislature. No one need suppose such a man will ever charge up his cow feed to the taxpayers of the state like Morton. Fifty-seven thousand dollars for one man isn't bad—in a "confederate" congress, too. That is why $30,000,000 were earned to the people altogether by this congress.

THAT LIBEL SUIT.

Under this caption Mrs. Weamer's Republican contains the following:

> We did not charge that the Democratic candidate for Prosecutor took $186.51 as fees in the Blair bond case, and that his services were not worth that much, nor did we charge that Butler township paid him $150 in the cash of Butler township vs. H. H. Houser, and that his services were not worth over fifty dollars. We did not charge that he took $150 as fees from Sarah Garver, an orphan, and that a jury of twelve men compelled him to disgorge $25 of it. Nor did we charge that he collected $200 for the widow Garver, and retained $150 of it as fees. We do not charge that he took young Flenner's colt as fees in a basterdy case and then advised his cliant to run away. We do not charge that he went to Michigan during the war to avoid the draft. But in conclusion we say that if he, the Democratic candidate for Prosecutor, wrote the above complaint it ought to be handed down to prosperity as a sample of what a young, energetic, and talented lawyer, can accomplish in the way of special pleading in a practice of ten years

Such is the statement of shyster Peterson or at least Mrs. Weamer organ says it is from Peterson. Let us exanine it item by item.

We did not charge that the Democratic candidate for Prosecutor took $186.51 as fees in the Blair bond case.

No, Peterson don't charge it, for it is a lie. Here was an allowances made for expenses incurred by myself to go to Minnesota, to take the deposition of George Kuhlman. The allowance made was for money expended by me in taking said deposition. The allowance was made on the 19th day of June 1874.

The actual expenses incurred in taking this deposition were $80. There is a statemens of allowance made me in the Blair case. The fee charged and allowed is as follows, and we give it just as it appears on record in the Auditors office:

June 19, 1874, to D. D. Moody, for cash paid and services rendered in Blair case	$ 80.00
December 4, 1873, to D D. Moody, dr., to services rendered and expenses incurred in case of DeKalb county vs. Blair et.al	25.00
June 11, 1875, DeKalb county to D. D. Moody, dr., to services up to date	50.00

To expenses as follows:

To trip to Fort Wayne, Mar. 16,'73	2.20
" " " " Albion and Kendrllville	6.22
" " " "	10.00
" " Albion June 2, '74	7.00
" one telegram A. A Chapin	99
" trip to Albion at trial	5.10
	$81.51

RECAPITULATION.

Expenses incurred by Moody all told as shown by record	$111.51
Fees allowed for services	75.00
	$186.51

So much for lie No. 1.

Now take item number two:

"Nor did we charge that Butler-tp., paid him $150 in the case of Butler-tp., vs. H. H. Houser, and that his services were not worth over $50."

What are the facts in that case. Mr. Houser was a defaulter to Butler-tp., for over $2800. I brought suit against Mr. Houser, and his bondsmen and recovered and received every cent of it, and turned it all over to the Trustee of Butler-tp. My fee for the services rendered was $150. That fee was presented to the Trustee and it was allowed in full by the Board of Commissioners, and not one of those Commissioners even intimated to me that the fee was not reasonable and just. They know all the facts; they know the value of the services and they made the allowance in my absence. But shyster Peterson, who is wiser than the Commissioners, says the services are not worth over fifty dollars. We leave it to the people to say whether the Board of Commissioners are better judges of the whole matter or the aforesaid shyster, who never brought a suit on a bond in his life, and who knows no more about the character of the services rendered than he does about honesty. And here we leave lie number two.

Take the third item:

"We did not charge that he took $150 as fees from Sarah Garver, an orphan, and that a jury of twelve men compelled him to disgorge $25. Nor did we charge that he collected $200 for the widow Garver, and retained $50 as fees."

What are the facts in this case. I brought two civil cases for the Garver's, and one criminial, making three cases in all.

The criminial case was in court about six months, one of the civil cases was in court nine months, and the other case one term.

Before the Garvers came to me to get me to try the case, their friend went to shyster Peterson, to get him to begin the cases for the Garver's. Peterson asked if they had any money. The friend said no. Peterson said Smith is rich, he has friends, and he would not take the case for less than five hundred dollars. The friend then came to me and said they had no money, but if I would take the case I should have a liberal fee, that I should have one half of the amount I recovered. I undertook the case without money and without price, and received for the Garver's $800. L. M. Nine, of Fort Wayne, said that the fee ought to have been $400. Judge Morris said the same, and Judge Best it was reasonably worth $300, and three hundred was all I received. J. E. Rose, your candidate for Judge, received $500 from the other side; Judge Morris received $400, L. M. Nine received $250, and McBride and Morlan received $35.

Thus there were $300 fees paid on one side, and there was $1185 fees paid on the other.

Peterson the dirty shyster was sour and sore because he did not and could not get that five hundred dollars which he asked of the widow. Neither could he induce the little girl to leave the country in the interests of Smith, and thus secure a fee.

Why, this same shyster, Peterson, made a contract with the widow Cool, by which he carged her $1,000 for services that were only less contemptible than himself, and she discharged him before he entered the services for incompetency. And yet the miserable little donkey, who is the supple tool and cringing fawning sycophant of the ring master of the small fry politicians, this contemptible ignoramus, who never tried a half dozen cases in court in his life, and is universally considered the weakest vessel at the bar, assumes to set the value of services he knows nothing of.

I collected and returned to the Garver's $500, money that was absolutely earned by hard work in and out of court from the defendant who was charged with rape, and this I did against such giants at the bar as Morris and Ninde, who were on the other side, and who were assisted by Rose, Hartman, McBride and Morlan.

When Peterson wins such a victory as that, he may begin to talk about the value of services.

Then look at item three:

"We do not charge that he took young Flenners' colt as fees in a basterdy case, &c."

I simply say in reply to this dishonest insinuation of shyster Peterson, that Jacob Flenner, the father of young Flenner came to me after night and desired me to go and defend his son who was then under arrest and awaiting his trial before Justice Widney. I went at once to the Justice's and defended young Flenner as best I could. The court found against the young man, and placed his bond at —— dollars for his appearance in the Circuit Court.

The constable, or some of the friends of Flenner, went to see if bail could be procured and thus saved the young man the mortification of going to jail. While the bail was thus being looked after the young man thinking leg bail the safest availed himself of this opportunity when the officer of the court was not watching him, and escaped and went to his home in the country.

Sometime afterward the father of the young man came to me and said his son desired I should come and see him. I thereupon hired a team and went to see him and talked the matter all over with the young man and his father.

The young man and the father both represented to me, and truthfully, too, that the young man had no money to pay for a defense or to pay any part of a judgement if the young woman should recover one against him, but that he had a colt which he would give to me if I would enter upon his defense and do for him all I could to get him out of the trouble. I told them that if they desired me to undertake the defense they might deliver the colt to young Grube. Shortly after this conversation Mr. C. Grube went to the gentleman's house and asked the old man about the colt that belonged to Moody!

The old man went to the barn, haltered the colt and gave it to Grube and told him that it belonged to Moody.—Grube took the colt about one mile from where the Flenner's lived, where the colt is to-day. I sold the colt to Grube soon after for $45.00 and from that day to this the young man has never said a word about the matter to me, that the case was certified to the circuit court of DeKalb Co., and first appeared on the docket July 27th, 1870, and was continued from term to term until 1873, at which term, on my motion, the cause was left off the docket. The case is still pending, and the child is still living in this county, and Flenner is liable to be arrested at any time, and I, by my contract bound to defend him as best I can, of which I am ready and willing to do at any time. I spent both time and money in trying to settle the case with the mother of the child but never was able to do so. I further say that the insinuation of Shyster Peterson "that Moody took young Flenner's colt as fees in a bastardy case and then advised him to run away is absolutely false.'

Now take article No. 4: "We do not charge that he went to Michigan during the war to avoid the draft."

Well, why don't you so charge and add one more lie to the calander, then you will have rivaled the editor of the "Republican" in lying. Why don't you say so Peterson and then you will have lied as Weamer lied when he published in Mrs. Weamer's paper that D. D. Moody told Dr. Elson that he went to Michigan to escape the draft.

In confirmation that the masculine part of us lied when he published the last above statement I refer the reader to the statement of Dr. Elson in another column of this paper prepared and there inscribed at the request of the Doctor.

Thus one by one the lies and slanders of this foul slanderer Perterson are nailed to the counter and when this cringing sycophant comes into print again through Mrs. Weamer's organ for the purpose of injuring the man who took him when a stranger in the land into his office, furnished him a library to read, wood to burn, clients to counsel, reputation to stand on, and finally surrendered to him valuable notes then due against him given for these favors. Let him explain what he has done with that $20 note John Jennings gave him for services rendered by me more than a year ago; let him explain how much he received of his client for certifying under oath that a deed was made on the 17th day of October 1873, that day being Friday, when he knew at the time, and afterwards said, he would swear the deed was made on the 19th day of October 1873 which was Sunday, and which act cost his client $800. Study and ponder well and then see if you had not better practice honesty and fair dealing yourself instead of attempting to slander the man who knows so much of your own meanness, and so little of your goodness that he approached the task of answering your lies as he would approach a slimy snake willing to get rid of the task as soon as possible. And Now, Mr. Peterson, I must take respectful leave of you with no excited anger on my part, whatever have been your motives, and these I refer to our common Judge above, to whom we are both responsible, and my advice to you is hereafter, mind your own business and leave other people to take care of theirs. Limit your labors in the future to your profession and within that liberal profession you will find ample scope for the exercise of all your abilities.

Do this and you will be a better and wiser man than you have heretofore shown yourself, and remember that in the language of the poet: "Slander meets no regard from noble minds; only the base believe, what the base only utter.

D. D. Moody.

The most miserable beings in the world are those suffering from Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint. More than seventy-five per cent. of the people in the United States are afflicted with these two diseases and their effect such as sour stomach, sick headache, habitual Costiveness, palpitation of the Heart, heart-burn, water-brash, gnawing and burning pains at the pit of the stomach, yellow skin, coated tongue and disagreeable taste in the mouth, coming up of food after eating, low spirits, &c.—Go to the drug store of F. E. Davenport and get a 75c bottle, or a sample bottle for 10c. Try it. Two doses will relieve you.

Administrators Sale.

Noetce is hereby given that the undersigned, as administrator of the estate of Cyrus Green, deceased, will on Thursday Oct. 19, 1876, offer for sale at public auction, at the late residence of said decedent, in Sedan, Richland-tp., De-Kalb county, Indiana, the personal property belonging to said estate, consisting of a stock of Groceries, one mare and colt, 1 cow, 2 two year old steers and a large number of other articles too numerous to mention.

TERMS—A credit of nine months will be given on all sums of three dollars and over; the purchaser giving his note waiving valuation and appraisement laws, with interest at 6 per cent. until due; and 10 per cent. thereafter until paid with approved security.

Still They Come.

To show that we are not trying to misrepresent Mr. Saxton we give the following:

Orangeville, Ind. Sept. 26, '76.
Editor Courier.

I have read your statement in the Courier in regard to the matter of delinquent taxes which Mr. Saxton presented to me for payment, and the facts connected therewith, and I know them to be correct, except that I have no farm, the tax being on my lots in this place.

Christopher Akins.

Our only mistake occurs in our stateing that he had a farm when he has not which makes it all the worse for Mr. Saxton. He is a poor man not worth $100 more than the law allows, and yet this officer demands ONE DOLAAR & EIGHTY CENTS, for a delinquency of FOURTEEN cents, and then afterwards offers to fix it up, so that it will not hurt him in the campaign.

ANOTHER PILL FOR SAXTON.

Frank Wise, of Spencerville, sent money with Dan Oberholtzer to pay his tax at the Treasurer's office at Auburn. When Mr. O. asked Saxton for Mr. W's tax account, the Deputy Treasurer looked and looked, and then said there was no tax against him. Mr. McDermott, then present, said there must be as he knew the gentleman. Again did Saxton search the records, and said there was nothing on the books against Mr. Wise. Mr. O. came home and reported to Mr. Wise to that effect. After awhile, around came Saxton with an account of $4.88 against Mr. Wise as delinquent tax. He refused to pay it and finally Mr. Saxton took $2.06 the amount of the original tax and left. Farmers, laborers, tax-payers, what do you think of such a man for Treasurer. But here is another case still worse.

PILL NO. TWO.

Mr. Devilbis, of Spencerville, authorized Mr. Wise to pay his tax at Auburn. Mr. Wise done so and got the Treasurer's receipt for the entire amount in full Soon after Mr. D. received a notice that he was delinquent in taxes. He thereupon got his receipt, went to Auburn and presenting it proved that he was not delinquent. The functionary of that office, took the receipt read it, took a pen, crossed off the words "in full," handed it back and told the man he must pay the amount claimed to be due, about thirty dollars. This is the plain story as we heard it the other day.—Farmers, tax-payers, your receipts ain't worth a darn, if an officer can do this. Do you want such a man for Treasurer?

PILL NO. THREE.

Few people in the county but what know Maj. Sprott, and while he is an unflinching Democrat, none will impeach his integrity. Here is, what he says:

> This certifies that T. J. Saxton and wife are justly indebted to me in the sum of three hundred and ninety-four dollars, being in great part for cash by me advanced for the tuition and clothing, and all for the benefit of the wife of said Saxton during her minority (I being her guardian). The above balance includes interest for one year on the same. The above said Saxton refuses to pay or consent that his wife shall pay the same out of her own estate. An itemized bill of the whole matter was delivered to said Saxton and wife about one year ago.
> Sept, 27, '76. S. W. Sprott.

Farmers, Tax-payers, do you want a man for Treasurer who wrongs an old man like Maj. Sprott out of a cent, who embarrasses his own wife by refusing to pay a just account engendered in her education and support. We will have some more cases to present, and Saxton must not expect to escape with a sickly explanation. He may want to hold back to the last and then come out with a fixed up job, but it wont do. We must have honest men in office.

The Two Candidates for Governor.

The voters of Indiana, 400,000 strong, will soon be called upon to elect a Governor for the State. The Republicans present General Benjamin Harrison, and the Democrats James D. Williams. Let us compare them:

Mr Williams' early life commenced very much like that of Abraham Lincoln as one of the yeomanry, farmer, who by dint of hard strokes, and few advantages of education, rose in the repect and esteem of his people. Harrison was in early life surrounded by luxuries and wealth, never done a day's labor in his life, and became in the end but an ordinary lawyer, after having devoted his entire life to that profession. While Williams was chosen of his people to represent them time and again in the Legislature, Harrison sat loiling about his law office, following out his aristocratic instincts, leading a life of ease and comfort. Williams wearing his suit of blue jeans, without shame or fear, Harrison dressed like a dandy in broadcloth, with fine kid gloves to prevent his soft white hands from tanning. Williams the representative of the mass of the people, Harrison the exponent of a shoddy aristocracy. Williams an experienced Legislator, Harrison a novice in the affairs of State Williams known far and wide, like Abraham Lincoln, as "Honest Old Blue Jeans," Harrison as the wily, unscrupulous lawyer. Williams would be a representative of a large majority of the people, Harrison a devotee to the aristocratic notions and instincts of a priviledged few. Williams by his practical common sense and great executive ability would discharge his duties with an eye single to the interests of the people, Harrison would make the position of Governor a place to show off his mannerisms and look down upon the people as his servants. Williams goes forth among the people with unimpeachable integrity, a large legislative experience, and a broad deep sense of duty, Harrison appears in pedantic efforts to dazzel the people, ignores the living issues, and flings the bloody shirt Williams aspires to the position from a unanimous choice of the people, Harrison is selected by the political jobbery of twelve men. Williams economical, warm-hearted and in sympathy with the common people, Harrison is extravagant, imbued with high notions and has no sympathy for the poor man. Williams as a member of the House was respected by even his Republican associates, Harrison is ignorant in legislation and unknown among the great men of the day. Williams as Governor, would be looked upon as an honest, able, practical officer, Harrison would appear as the dandified, egotistic pampered representative of the people. Farmers, tax-payers, which will you have an honorable, honest practical gentleman, full of benevolence and charity, yet rigidly economical, a man who prides himself on his ripe experience, his personal knowledge of our State Legislation for years past, more than his looks, a man who has rose from the masses and has had the confidence of the people. Or one who has been educated in a law shop, knows nothing of the wants of the people, is without experience in legislative affairs, and has tastes and inclinations entirely separate from your own. You have your choice. Choose him who knows your wants, by voting for Mr. Williams.

HON. GEO. W. JULIAN, at Waterloo, next Monday Oct. 2nd Let the people turn out and hear this gifted orator.

Mr. Bixler, the candidate for Republican Presecutor is to return from Washington where he has been a resident for six years.

FOUND.—Three quarters of a mile east of Butler, a woolen shawl. Can be had by calling on H. H. Wanemaker, Stafford-tp.

The Saginaw road, are offering low rates to the Indiana Exposition at Indianapolis, from Sept. 25th to Oct. 18th. Only $5 65 for the round trip.

Hon. S. S. Shutt returned from the Centennial last Sunday. He has been quite sick since, but hopes to be able to be around in a day or two.

An immense stock of Boots & Shoes at Ryan's. If you want good reliable work, go and examine the fine styles he can show you at low prices.

A handsome pole was raised at Mooresville, last Tuesday evening, and Prof. Fairbanks entertained the large crowd with one of his characteristic speeches.

A Democratic caucus will be held at Spencerville, Sept. 30th, at 3 o'clock, P. M., for the nomination of candidates to fill the various office in Concord township.

We are under obligations to our affable friend Wm. Webster, Esq., and his excellent lady for many favors. And also to Miss Bell, for one of her beautiful songs.

Winter and cold weather are rapidly approaching, and to avoid colds and diseases get a good pair of Boots or Shoes, which you can do at a very low figure for cash at Ryan's.

The Waterloo Press takes us to task for saying something about fees, but attempts no defense of the Rose letter. Charley, that's a dear good boy, or explain why Saxton wanted to fix things up with Mr. Akins.

We stopped the other day with our farmer friend A D More and we are under obligations to him and his excellent lady, for many favors. Mr. M. has a splendid farm, fine stock and the best fruit we ever say.

Charles Klotz has taken up quarters in his new store room, and he is filling it with a fine line of dry goods ready-made clothing, groceries, &c. Charley takes a just pride in his handsome building.

An incestuous cuss, calling himself "Monitor," wrote most of the slime for Weamer last week. Weamer is getting together about as hardened a set of wretches for contributors as can well be found in the country.

Weamer says that Saxton has been trusted with the keys to the vaults. Great Heavings, just think of it—a deputy Treasurer trusted. If he could not trust him, would he be a fit person for that position?

A brakeman on the Eel river road was knocked off the train by the target board at the Junction, last Saturday. It is our belief that these targets are too close to the track, and some one will yet be killed if they are not changed.

Winter's dreary blasts will soon be upon us and new arrangements will have to be made for our comfort. You will want a new stove and a good one at a low price. Go to Snyder's and see his large variety.

The meeting at Fairfield Center last Saturday, was largely attended, and a beautiful pole 160 feet high was successfully raised after some delay. Prof. Fairbanks made a telling speech, and we believe that township will report an increased majority.

Appearances strongly indicate that Tom Mays has abandoned the balance of the Democratic ticket, and concentrated his efforts upon the success of "Tousley and Reform."—Press.

Well, don't you go much on appearances, old sweetness, or you'll get left.

Here's another interesting item from the pen of the gifted Charles I:

Geo. W. Julian will speak to the Christless-whelps at this place, on Oct. 2d.

This is the style of address adopted by our Republican friends, who sometimes ask a Democrat to vote their ticket. Can you do that fellow Demcrats, in the face of such an insult as that?

It won't do, Weamer, to admit slime in your columns abusive of ourself. No old animosities can be re-kindled. The Democracy are all a unit this year. While we know it is your policy to work up a spirit of hate, as being done all over the State, to hide the real issues, it won't pan out this year. Why did not "Monitor" speak of some candidate before the people, Rose, for instance, and defend that letter, that patriotic ebullition emenating from his gifted pen. We have no hard words for "Monitor," the longer we have indulged in no vile abuse of any one, and you cannot sway us from our purpose, not to do so.

It is rumored in some part of the county that our present Commissioner, Geo. H. Duncan, Esq., had a claim allowed his brother, R. J. Duncan for keeping a pauper. That there may be a clear unequivocal refutation of this charge, we produce the following from the Commissioner's docket:

Ordered by the Board, that T. B. Duncan be allowed fifty-four dollars for fruit trees furnished to Poor Farm as per bill on file.

As a further evidence that this charge against Mr. Duncan is wholly wrong, we have the following from Mr. Hague:

I, Isaac Hague Auditor, in and for said county, do hereby certify that there has been no allowance made R. T. Duncan for any purpose whatever since I have been Auditor. The allowance above referred to was made to T. B Duncan, of Waterloo, for fruit trees for Poor Farm.

ISAAC HAGUE, Auditor.

Some person must have conflicted the names of these two men. The one who got the allowance was T. B. Duncan, no relation at all to Commissioner Duncan, so that the story of his favoring his brother with an allowance is entirely untrue.

We are informed that a prominent member of the Baptist church, led in the grunting when Kelly spoke Tuesday evening. If his prayers are no more effective than was his grunting, he will make up the tag end of those immortal horts who are marching to the New Jeruselum.

NEWVILLE, Sept. 22, '76.

MR. B. F. BLAIR, Esq., SIR:—Learning that a report was being put in circulation in different parts of the county, by some evil disposed person, reflecting upon my integrity and no doubt intended to work to your injury, to the effect that I, by the advice of L. J. Blair, did change the vote of Newville township in the nominating convention, held at Auburn, on the tenth day of June, 1876, thereby defeating Andrew Baxter, one of the candidates for the office of Recorder, and placing in nomination Michael Boland, against the wishes and expressed desire of the other delegates of my township. I deem it but just to you and to myself, to say that any and all such reports, coming from whatever source they may, are utterly false, and without foundation. I never changed the vote of my township from Baxter to Boland, neither did any one else. I reported the vote upon that as well as all other candidates, exactly as it was made up by all the delegates. I was not asked by L. J. Blair or any one else to change the vote; neither did I have any conversation with Mr. L. J. Blair, or any other Blair, or any other man upon the subject. Trusting that this statement will set such idle rumors forever at rest.

I remain respectfully, &c.,

J. A. ANDREWS.

The "Soldiers Re-union" was largely attended. Everything passed off in good order.

No Rose Without a Thorn

The Patriotic Rose and the Soldier's Widow!

AUBURN, IND., July 16th, 1863.

MRS. HANNAH MULLINEAUX, Hicksville, Ohio.

At the last session of the board of commissioners of DeKalb County, Indiana, there was an order made for the payment of twenty-five dollars, to your son Nelson, as a bounty for his having volunteered from this county last fall. I have been informed that he is now dead and also that his father is dead. The order is now made out for your son, but there is no money in the treasury with which to pay, and there will not be for sometime to come. The attorney who secured the claim charges five dollars for his services which will leave but twenty dollars. I have some money that I can spare from my business for some time, and will buy the order of you if you wish to sell it. I will give you $12.00 for the order. If you wish to sell it thus you may write to me directing how I shall send the money to you, whether by mail or otherwise. Respectfully,

JAMES E. ROSE.

P. S. Address,

JAMES E. ROSE, Auburn, Ind.

CHRONICLES.

James and the Widow.

Now it came to pass that James the first was King. He was judge over all the land.

And it came to pass as James the King sat in his house he said unto James the Rose of Sharon, verily, verily, unless offerings and shekels, and offices be thine inheritance soon thou shall perish miserably from off the earth.

Then James the Rose said unto James the Judge, do all that is in thine heart for God is with thee. But verily if I could sit upon thine throne and hold thy scepter of power, then the judgeship and the office should be handed down from brother-in-law to brother-in-law even unto the last generation. And with me as Judge and the Moss brother-in law as Clerk, then it shall come to pass that we shall wax rich and great and powerful in the land.

Let us hold counsel of the brothers and brother-in-laws and of all them that bow the knee to Baal and of them that do service unto our behests.

And thereupon it came to pass that there assembled together James the first and James the last, the Rose of summer and the Shyster and the Henchman that gambol around the foot of the throne.

And there upon James the first spake and said, Potenates, and Powers that be, verily the Lord God knoweth that in my heart there is no guile.

The good and just things that are to be enjoyed and done I will do and enjoy, but the mean and dirty things that must be done are to be done by the small fry and they shall slime over all that will not bow to our behests.

Peterson shall be our servant of servants and he shall wash our dirty linen.

And thereupon James the fragrant arose and said, lo these many years have I hungered for office and bloomed in the desert alone, and lo I am poor, and lean and gaunt, and hungry, and cadaverous I am pining to a skeleton and though I have clutched at to feed upon a widow's mite, and though I have written a cunning letter to a widow whose son was killed fighting for the union, while I was bravely staying at home, though I wrote that awful letter and cannot deny it, though I misrepresented in that letter when I said there's five dollars attorney fees to be paid out of the order, though I misrepresented when I said there was no money in the treasury, though the records now show that at that time there was over one thousand dollars in the treasury, though it was well known to all as well as myself that these claims were prefered claims and paid promptly when presented, though I knew if the widow came for the order herself she had but to go to the Auditor's office and get the order and present it to the Treasurer and it would be paid, though I wrote these things in that letter in order to get the widow's twenty-five dollar order for twelve dollars, though I wrote to her that her husband was dead and that her son Nelson was killed in the army, though the widow sat childless and alone in her desolate home in poverty and want, though I was rich and wrote to her that I had money to spare from my business, yet great was my love for my country and the boy Nelson who died in defense of it, great was my sympathy for the desolate widow, yea, verily my bowels yearned with compassion for her in her want and benevolently and generously and charitably with money to spare from my business offered to help her in her affliction, yea, I offered her Twelve dollars for twenty-five, and the ungrateful widow went to Old John Miller, of Newville, with my letter and he went to Major Sprott and they went to the Auditor, got the order, presented it to Geo Barney, then Treasurer, who honored it and paid it in full, and the old widow, by thus having friends got her twenty-five dollars.

I offered her twelve dollars for twenty five for I had money to spare from my business.

Verily, I ought to be Judge, for don't the Bible say we should care for the widows, and didn't I offer to help her.—Have I not a right to shave notes. Have I not a right to help widows?

And then it came to pass that there was great lamentation among the widows, and there was weeping among the clients whose costs and fee bills brought them to the brink of ruin. And the Shyster called Peterson, rolled over in mire and exclaimed great is the Lord.

Great is King James and great am I who stand in the sanctuary and wash the dirty linen of the High Priests.—Bless me it is pleasant scrubbing in the tub.

STAFFORD, IND., Sept. 29, '76.

DEAR COURIER:—The meeting at Stafford Center, last Tuesday evening, was a grand success both as to number and enthusiasm, there being more than five hundred people present, and everything passed off harmoniously. The speaker, Mr. Fairbanks, held the undivided attention of the entire assembly while speaking; but since things have not been so quiet. The pole which the Republicans undermined and let down several days ago, was again put in a perpendicular position with the "stars and stripes" at its peak. But what has this to do with the rally? Just enough to show what union men will do. One of them, a soldier, who has "fought nobly since the war is over," who never did Uncle Sam one cents worth of good being such an "arrant coward" that he never could be got to the front, started out to raise a mob to tear the pole down again. The reason it did not come down is, that the Democrats were determined to have their rights, and gave warning that the first man who touched the pole to take it down should be punished. The only reason the Reps. gave is, that the flag had not thirty-eight stars on the field, consequently it is a "rebel" flag. If these union soldiers who say so much about this being a "rebel" flag had even been near enough the front to have seen a rebel flag, they wouldn't need to expose their ignorance at this time. Oh! consistency, thou art a jewel, but Republicans don't wear jewelry in this part of the world.

Fairbank's meeting in Troy-tp., was well attended, and received good attenion while speaking. All seemed to be pleased.

Yours,

T. H. SHOUB.

Mr. Rose must not think we are making a personal attack upon him. But he is out for an important office, and if we can show that he is unworthy or incompetent for the position, it should not be construed that we are actuated by malice. We would do as much personally for Mr. Rose now, as at any time since we have known him. He is a pleasant, clever gentleman, but he ought not to be made a judge, because he has never conducted an important suit in our courts, because his legal knowledge is quite limited. As to ability his partner, Mr. Hartman, is far his superior on law matters. He ought not to be judge, because he proposed during the war to extort money from the mother of a union soldier, while the brave boy lay a corpse, in a strange land, and his lone mother's heart was wrung with anguish. He ought not to be a judge, because he claimed a lawyer's fee of five dollars, was to be deducted from the soldier's bounty order, but which afterwards was paid in full without such a fee being claimed. He ought not to be a judge, because he claimed that there was no money in the treasury, when the records show that at the June settlement there was over a thousand dollars.

Was he honest in this representation? Was it a fair honorable proposition to a poor wretched widow, mourning the loss of a husband and son? There are questions to be answered. None of his friends have yet dared to come forward and defend this letter business, Weamer is aroused to answer an indirect remark as to fees, but not one word in defense of his candidate for judge. It won't do Weamer, you may dodge and chafe and insinuate, but that letter is before the people, and no honest, fairminded man but what knows its author ought not to be a judge.

Mr. McConnell, of the Angola Herald, Mr. Baxter of the Waterloo Press, and Mr. McGonigal, of Newville, gave the office a call Monday. They are all jolly fellows. Charley staid to hear the joint discussion between his cousin and Mr. J. H. Baker.

Last Thursday evening Tommy Scott and Miss Kittie Weaver were married. The happy and good-looking pair have the best wishes of a large number of friends in the city.

The County Treasurership.

The Waterloo "Press," in trying to head off the terrible effects of the expose of Saxton, inserts a communication, relative to Mr. Gonser. It says, "will his [Mr. G] friends explain his little piece of "nepotism" while he was Commissioner in purchasing the poor farm. While other farms better and cheaper, were offered he succeeded in transferring his brother from the blue clay, west of Auburn to the fine sandy loam on the Steuben Co. line."

Now, let us see what the facts were. The Board, at that time, was composed of Wm Henderson, Wm. McIntyre and D. Gonser. When the farm was to be purchased they advertised they wanted to purchase a farm for that purpose. The following farms were offered: E. McDowell, at $55 per acre, 3 miles from Auburn; James Dragoo, $40 per acre, 7 miles from town; J. Anstutz, $55 per acre, 5 m's from town; H. Sherlock $55 per acre 7 miles from town; I. Grate, $45 per acre, 10 miles from town; M. Gonser $54 23 per acre, 1½ miles from town, which last was purchased. The fact that it was close to the county seat, that the Commissioners were required to visit it at every session that a physician had to employed to attend the sick there, and that it was offered at a reasonable price induced them to make the purchase and no other consideration. It is not much of a compliment to the intelligence, honesty and good practical sense of Mr. Henderson, that he should be a party to a job as intimated by the Press.

The next paragraph asks "what motives influenced Mr. Gonser to buy at the most "fancy prices" those additional lots on which to build a county jail. Mr. Gonser, Mr. Wanemaker and Mr. Griffith were the purchasers, not Mr. Gonser.

The motive which influenced them was, that it was the judgment of all good people that the new jail ought to have been located there. As this was not done, part of the lots were sold with the old jail to the town for $1,000, and the county still owns the balance. They paid $800 for the whole, and all reasonable persons can see that they have not been sold at a sacrifice, as the Press claims.

The next paragraph says: Voters also have a right to know why Mr. Gonser accepted fees from the county for attending the bond case trial at Albion, and not attending, yet still keeping the fees in his pocket. In the fall of 1874, Mr. Gonser was summoned to attend a trial at Albion in the bond case. He was paid for one day's service and milage, about five dollars. He started and took the train to Waterloo in the evening, expecting to take train west. While at Waterloo it was rumored the case was not coming off. Stayed all night, went to Auburn in the morning to see one of the attorneys. Met Mr. Penfield at the depot, who told him the case was not coming off. He returned home. Expenses for trip, railroad fare 80 cents, hotel over night $1, time spent one day. Soon after he was in Auburn, and paid the fees he had received to Mr. McIntyre. Some time in the spring of 1875 he was again summoned to appear in same case, fees paid as before. When the time arrived, boy took him to railroad station, and on his way he received a postal from Mr. Penfield stating that he need not come. He had to walk back, time lost one day. The fees for this day were not returned. These are the facts in the case. He very properly and justly took one fee, and did not hesitate to keep it for the two days and money paid out for expenses. Was that dishonest? We think no fairminded tax-payer will say so.

And thus all these questions are promptly and fairly answered. And now while the Press is asking questions will it answer one. What does it think of the Rose letter, asking a poor widow to take twelve dollars for a twenty-five dollar order. Read the card of Mr. Aikens, and Maj. Sprott in another column.

The Albion New Era, an independent paper, says, on the Rose matter:

"Yes, Bro. MAYS, "a pretty good shave" on DeKalb county paper, and the loss to be borne by that widow. Was your county bankrupt at that time? Did she sell it for the twelve dollars offered? How long was it before the county paid the order? To whom was it paid?

The soul of the writer of that letter was not imbued to any great extent with the sympathy and spirit of the great Abraham Lincoln, who in his last inaugural address, enjoined upon the people: "To care for him who shall have born the battle, and for his widow and orphans."

We would say in answer to the above questions that she did not sell it for twelve dollars, but got twenty-five in full. Sheriff Miller, to whom she came with the letter, says it was paid in full a few days after the letter was written, and so does Mr. Barney, the Treasurer. It was paid to the widow herself, who was told by a Democratic Sheriff, that he would pay it in full if there was no money in the Treasury. Do the people of Noble county want a man who could for a moment, make such a proposition to a lone, heart-broken widow, do they want him for judge?

The genuineness of the letter is not denied, as there is no defense. Against this man is one who has served the people ably and faithfully in this position. Let the honest, fairminded yeomanery of gallant Noble, place their seal of condemnation upon incompetency and a want of patriotism, upon him who would devour widow's houses, and vote for that noble and experienced gentleman ex-Judge Tousley.

Baker—Kelley Contest.

The debate last Tuesday night at Ensley Hall, between the above gentlemen, candidates for congressional honors, was lively and enthusiastic. Mr. Kelley showed conclusively that he was not as ignorant and illiterate as some had supposed Mr. B came with a fine reputation as a lawyer and an experence of one term in Congress. Mr. Kelley came from a farm where he was laboring while Baker was diving deep into books and enjoying great advantages to educate himself.

Yet, with all this difference in their education and training, Mr. Kelley held his wily adversary well in hand. He opened in an hour's speech followed by Mr. Baker, who concluded in one hour and a quarter, the debate being closed by Mr. Kelley with a fifteen minutes response. We do not propose to render an opinion of the result of the debate, but will leave the voters present to determinefor themselves. We can say, however, that the Democracy so far need not be ashamed of Mr. Kelley.—During Kelley's first speech the attention was good and the applause of such a character as to respect the ladies present. As soon as Mr. Baker appeared however, there was quite a stamping from the little bands in several places in the house which showed concerted action. The applause given Mr. Kelley was spontaneous and came from all over the house, that which greeted Mr. Baker seemed to rise up from certain spots as was most conclusively developed towards the last. No one interrupted Mr. Baker, but Kelley had scarcely proceeded in his closing speech when he was interrupted, and this was repeated several times.—A fair minded Republican afterwards said he was ashamed of some of his friends and condemned their course during the evening. We were glad to see that no Democrat interrupted Mr. Baker, but gave him a fair chance. We want the Democracy to be fair and honorable in this campaign and show that we are not trying to carry this election by bullying and browbeating those who differ with us.

We regretted to see Mr. Baker make use of that unfounded charge, that the Democratic House discharged Union Soldiers and put rebels in their place.—Mr. Baker knows, we know and everyone else knows who was in that body that it is a base falsehood. We know that there are more Union soldiers in the employ of the House now, than there was in the last House. Mr. Baker's authority for this assertion is a letter written by a correspondent of the N. York "Times," who, because he was not appointed Clerk of the Committee on the expenditures of the Treasury department, with malice in his heart, made this misrepresentation out of revenge.

The Game Brought Down.

To show how reliable Weamer is in his statements, we re-produce the following:

D. D. Moody told Dr. Elson that he went to Michigan to escape the draft. Now here is another opportunity to sue for $10,000 damage for assailing his bravery.

We are authorized by Mr. Elson to most emphatically deny the above in toto. Though Mr. Elson is a Republican, he is a fairminded, honorable gentleman, one who will not stoop to vile misrepresentations. Now, if this was Weamer, he would yell liar &c., but we say dear Bro Weamer, be careful, or somebody will "set down" on you.

MR. EDITOR:—That Rose man who wrote that slush for Weamer last week, tries to arouse bad passions, and then signs himself "Monitor." Its the old, old story. Unless we can arouse the passions we loose, they cry. Kilptrick says the State is lost unless we have money and the bloody shirt. Baker knows it, for did he not the other night cry war, war, and paint the battle field while he was on his way to Idaho. Now Weamer should not have admitted such stuff as I have noticed you have so far treated him in a polite and gentlemanly way. The attack was made against you when he might have explained or defended that Rose letter with much more propriety, for I believe you are not a candidate before the people. But now I want to show you of the "inner workings" of Weamer. Here is an item from the Steuben "Herald" which he may digest for a while. Mr Wiseman who was in Weamer's employ at Butler, when he published the "Review" there, says that he asked him for a little money to be used as spending money at the festival. He stated he had but ten cents, and wanted that to buy a loaf of bread for breakfast, but would fix the thing up by running off ten checks more than had been ordered by the committee, which he gave us, and charged us up with one dollar for the same. This all worked very well until the committee found out that there was foul play, and tackled this "wolf in sheep's clothing," then squirmed out of it by blaming it on a poor orphan boy then in his employ. How is that for standing? Standing, God bless your soul, Weamer, if you have any, your name stands upon the books of every business man you have dealt with in the country, which they would be glad to erase if you would fork over what is due them.

Why, sir, do you know that you could take the souls of a thousand such men as Weamer, and put them in a peanut shell, give them each a large horn to blow, and then they would be so far apart they could not hear each other. Now, Weamer, learn to be more decent to those who treat you with the respect and forbearance Gen. Mays has since he has returned.

A REPUBLICAN.

We opposed the insertion of the above strenuously, but the writer insisted that Weamer was not representing all the Republicans here, and as the COURIER is a representative of all classes, we were compelled to give way, hence these tears.

FAREWELL TO SUMMER.

BY [illegible] ARNOLD.

Summer is fading; the broad leaves that grew
So freshly green when June was young, are falling;
And, all the whisper-haunted forest through,
The restless birds in saddened tones are calling,
From rustling hazel-copse and tangled dell:
"Farewell, sweet Summer,
Fragrant, fruity Summer,
Sweet farewell!"

Upon the windy hills, in many a field,
The honey-bees hum slow above the clover,
Gleaning the latest sweets its blooms may yield,
And, knowing that their harvest-time is over,
Sing, half a lullaby and half a knell:
"Farewell, sweet Summer,
Honey-laden Summer,
Sweet farewell!"

The little brook that bubbles 'mid the ferns,
O'er twisted roots and sandy shallows playing,
Seems fain to linger in its eddied turns,
And with a plaintive, purling voice is saying,
Sadder and sweeter than my song can tell:
"Farewell, sweet Summer,
Warm and dreamy Summer,
Sweet farewell!"

The fitful breeze sweeps down the winding lane,
With gold and crimson leaves before it flying;
Its gusty laughter has no sound of pain,
But in the lulls it sinks to gentle sighing,
And mourns the Summer's early-broken spell:
"Farewell, sweet Summer,
Rosy, blooming Summer,
Sweet farewell!"

So bird, and bee, and brook, and breeze make moan
With melancholy song their loss complaining;
I, too, must join them, as I walk alone
Among the sights and sounds of Summer's waning:
I, too, have loved the season passing well:
So farewell, Summer,
Fair, but faded Summer,
Sweet farewell!

A NOSE AND A HALF.

Precisely a month after our marriage, I—Mrs. Algernon Sidney Westmoreland—was informed by my lord and master that such and such business—imperative enough, I owned—called him immediately to the continent; and, although both Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Westmoreland murmured somewhat at fate and £600 per annum, Algy was compelled to leave me "my lane," and go on his way the wifeless husband of a month's standing. He was to be back certainly in three weeks, if not sooner, and I was charged to write hourly, to telegraph if I had the headache, and to keep up a good heart besides! Instead of fulfilling which commands, I wrote—well, it is true, almost hourly—in scraps; forebode from telegraphing either my head or my heartaches; and, alas for cheerfulness! I moped about my bit of a house in Bayswater, as though I was a widow instead of a bride; stared at Algy's big photo over my bed; remembered, almost with tears, that I had watched him completely out of sight—a most unlucky proceeding; tried the piano, but found it out a sad reminder of our courting days; poked my fingers in all the pockets of the coats Algy had left at home, but found nothing save a few old envelopes; gazed at all my new gowns, and felt no inclination to put them on; and last, but by no means least, feasted my eyes on my sole dot—a superb set of diamonds that had been in my family for ever so many years, and that my father, even in his darkest days, would in no wise part with. There was a necklace and cross, a brooch, and a pair of earrings with exquisite pendents that one could detach at pleasure; a bracelet and ring, that put Algy's solitaire, sparkling on my small third finger, to the most unquestionable blush; but I loved the solitaire with most unreasonable passion, and, in contrast, looked coldly on the nine-stoned gem lying among its fellows in the big morocco case; nothing would induce me to wear it.

One week, two, three; Algy was not at home, and was not coming. I was to join him at La Manche. He could not be spared to come and fetch me, so I was to go to him, and alone, without even the meager "protection" of a maid, and with naught save the sense of being Mrs. Algernon Sidney Westmoreland as a shield and buckler for my timidity, my nineteen years and babyish face, and a journey of five days' duration. Still, I did not dread it. The idea of travel in itself alone was enchanting to my untraveled soul; the idea that I was to see Algy in something short of a week, and feel his big brown mustache on my mouth, redoubled the enchantment in a most singular manner; and, moreover, in the fact of performing this voyage unattended there was to me a sweet flavor of unaccustomedness, so to speak, that quite bewitched me, as I rehearsed the deportment I should display to admiring tourists over the packing of my brand-new trunk.

I crossed the Channel, sufficient to say, not less a sufferer from mal-de-mer than any woman on board the pitching, lurching vessel; and, after three hours at the Hotel Nationale for refreshment and rest, I took my seat in the railway-cars bound for P——, where I was, according to Algy's express injunctions, "to stay at the Hotel du Bon-Dieu over night,"—armed with a small traveling-bag, containing sundry necessaries, in the one hand, and my shawl-straps in the other, girded around my thick blanket plaid, which, in its turn, was folded securely around my dot—the precious diamonds, which I was too much afraid of losing to trust in my trunks, knowing full well that the company would not be responsible for even a tithe of their value.

I settled myself and my possessions quite comfortably, when, just as the cars were about to start, some one tapped me on the shoulder, and a pleasant voice, with just the faintest flavor of foreign accent, spoke:

"Are you expecting a companion? Is this seat engaged?" pointing to the one beside me.

"No—oh, no!" I answered.

"With your permission, then?"

"Certainly, madame."

I looked up then at the person whose two small canvas bags and one wicker basket were deposited on top of my own portable luggage in the side rack—a tall, old—well, perhaps I should use the milder form—elderly lady, with bunches of soft gray curls on either side of her face, a coffee-colored complexion, two bright gray eyes, a small mouth—and a nose! The foregoing exclamation point is not intended to imply that I was in the habit of associating with persons whose faces lacked that important feature, the nose; but simply to indicate the extreme astonishment I felt on beholding this particular nose.

To say that it was long gives but a faint idea of the actual state of the case, but it was of a great length, and very thin, and very pink, and a vast deal more than very unpleasant; it seemed, as it were, to be peering and investigating everything, to be inquiring and ferreting out all visible and invisible objects, and to have quite an independent character and time of its own. It extended well over the old lady's long upper lip; and, in brief, it was not only a nose that my companion was mistress of, but a nose and a half.

"I hope I do not incommode you?" The pleasant, courteous voice recalls me to my senses.

"Not in the least, I assure you," I reply, casting one more furtive glance at the nose.

"'Tis a little chilly—is it not? I think I need more wrappings."

With which the elderly lady arose and took down one of her small canvas bags, drawing therefrom a blue cloak, with which she enveloped herself, and, snapping the catch, reinstated the bag in its place.

"Can I not hand you your plaid?" the elderly lady asked me, courteously, before seating herself.

I glanced up as I answered her, and read the small card that was neatly, on the bottom of her satchel, "Mme. la Comtesse de Girondelle, Paris."

"No, thanks. Ah, I beg pardon, it is chilly. I am sorry to trouble you, but I will take it, please."

And she hands it to me, resuming her seat with a nice, cheerful smile. I unbuckle the straps, unroll my plaid, and leave my precious morocco case quite bare with its brass mounting and padlock, and the new plate papa had put on it for my wedding-day.

"Let me assist you," Mme. la Comtesse says politely, helping me on with my big shawl. "Fellow-travelers should be on excellent terms, especially when they chance to be two ladies voyaging alone. You have been on the Continent before, I presume? The English ladies are such ladies for sight-seeing."

"No," I replied, bashfully, and—why I know not—feeling mortified to think that I had not been abroad before.

"No! Is it possible? You are so self-possessed that I imagined you familiar with all these scenes."

Worthy Comtesse! Her eyes were beginning to fail her, I feared.

"I—ah, alas! I have been many times over Europe, and alone also, since the death of my husband."

Here it occurred to me to wonder, with another furtive glance, how any man could have married such a nose.

"You are going to Baden to join your mother and father—to F——? I will so gladly chaperone you so far as in my poor power. I know what it is to be so young, though never so pretty"—with a sigh—"and voyaging alone."

"You are very kind," I reply, with a feeling of great satisfaction as I take in the idea of once more being dependent upon some one—which is to tell the truth, my normal state—and that some one a worthy elderly lady, although with more than the usual share of nose. "But I am not going to F——, only to Baden——"

"So?" interrupts the Comtesse, with a smile of genuine delight. "I go to Baden myself. The waters have been prescribed for me by my physician."

"Yes?" I say, interestedly. "I am sorry that I do not stay there. I go right on by coach to P——, and thence to La Manche, where"—I blush painfully at this point—"my husband awaits me."

"Your husband!"—The Comtesse utters a little scream of astonishment. "My child—une enfant! veritablement! Ah, what is this age arriving at?"

I laugh a small, happy, foolish laugh, and proceed to give the Comtesse a brief resume of the principal events in my history—chiefly consisting, I can assure you, in my courtship, marriage, wedding (including my dot, which reposes in the rack), Algy's imperative tour, and my now going on to be with him once more after nearly four weeks of cruel separation; to all of which the Comtesse listened attentively and courteously, with interest, and little, sympathetic, womanly smiles and nods. Before I have finished, I think her the most delightful, motherly, charming lady that I have ever encountered—were it not for her nose; but I endeavored to avoid looking at that, and strive to rivet my attention solely on her bright eyes and pleasant smile.

Mme. la Comtesse in return confides to me her card—a fac-simile of that so neatly tacked to her satchel—and tells me that la Comte is long since deceased, leaving her the mistress of a small independence; that she resides in London, "so she loves the dear English;" and just now is en route for Baden to drink the famous waters.

We get on famously, the Comtesse and I, and I think joyously of how glad Algy would be to know of my being under the wing of so charming and educated a person. In fact, at the end of our fourth day together, I feel as if I had known the Comtesse all my life, and I feel sure also that she likes me. The nose oppresses me frequently, but I contract a habit of talking and listening to her without looking, and this somewhat ameliorates the situation.

On Friday evening at 4 o'clock we arrive at Baden, and, as the Southern train does not start for two hours yet, I accept my new friend's offer of spending the time with her at her hotel quite gratefully.

I am installed in the little parlor of the Comtesse's pretty apartment—en troisieme, it is true, but affording a delightful view of everything and everybody that shall pass. I am seated alone, for my friend has gone down to see to the arrangement of her baggage. She returns, her face full of alarm, and a coarse, reddish envelope in her hand.

"Be not alarmed, my child; 'tis a telegram for you, I think. 'Mme. A. S. Westmoreland,'" reads the elderly lady from the wretched thing in her hand.

"Monsieur Von Linden just gave it to me now as I passed by the office."

I take it, and with trembling fingers tear open the envelope and unfold the bit of paper. A smile breaks over my face and the blood resumes its place in my cheeks—nothing more terrible than this:

"Wait over a day at Baden. I will join you on Saturday evening. ALGY."

I read it aloud to the Comtesse, who shares my joy in charming fashion, and instantly offers to ring the bell, summon the hostess, and secure me a room at once for my stay. I accede gracefully, and ere long am comfortably—nay, luxuriantly—ensconced in a bright, elegantly-furnished room adjoining the suite of the Comtesse—in fact, communicating with it by a door, which I beg may stand open, as I am considerably more than timid.

After a sumptuous supper, served in my new friend's apartment, with great neatness, by a pretty, blue-eyed German girl, I make my excuses and retire. I am, in truth, worn out with sleepless nights in railway-coaches, and am very thankful when I find myself once more in a veritable bed. I dream—a queer, confused mass of nonsense—and, amid the vagaries of my night in the hotel of Monsieur von Linden, I dream that I am suffocating, smothering with some strange-smelling stuff held tightly over my mouth; then that it is removed, and that I can see distinctly, although I can move no more than if I were a stone. I see that the communicating little door between my room and the Comtesse's little parlor stands open, letting in a flood of bright, warm candle-light; I see a woman in a rose-colored wrapper gliding stealthily about my apartment. She is young, and a pretty woman with short, very blonde hair curling all over her head, and she keeps walking carefully about my room, peering into this corner and that, under my clothes, under the lounge-cushion, and into the chest of drawers; and finally she creeps up to the bed. I feel her hands crawling over the blankets, and at last searching under the piled-up pillows beside me—for what? My dot, my precious diamonds, which I placed there for safety. I try to scream, but cannot; I am as silent as the dead, and I watch her, helplessly, recross the room, glide through the door, close it, and then no more.

When I awake in the morning, the bright Baden sunshine is streaming in my windows, and I feel strangely unrested; my eyes ache, and my temples throb. I rise and close the creaking shutters. As I do so I hear a low wail from the apartment of the Comtesse, and like a flash of lightning my dream occurs to me. I make one plunge to the bed again, pull aside the pillows—my dot is gone? A knock comes at the communicating door, accompanied by another wail.

"Come in!" I cry, as I sit staring distractedly about me.

"Ah, Mme. Westmoreland! What have I here? Ah! ah! my few jewels gone! The thieves, the burglars! Ah! I will have satisfaction from Mons. von Linden! Ah! what will become of me?"

The Comtesse had then been robbed also, poor lady! She was well nigh beside herself as she recounted to me almost my own experience; the sensation of suffocation, and of hearing some one walking stealthily about her room. As my new friend said nothing about having seen the robber, I held my peace, being rather ashamed of telling what I now know must have been a dream, mixed up, oddly enough, with truth.

When I told her my misfortune, she condoled with me in the most tender and heartfelt manner, and between her tears over her own petit bijoux, tried, in her pretty French fashion, to suggest ways to me of recovering my splendid gems. But, while the Comtesse made her toilet with all possible haste, and flew down to worthy Monsieur von Linden, I sat like a small statue staring at the tumbled pillows, and then began to cry like a baby, which performance I kept up a full hour at least, and at last determined to do nothing. In reality there was nothing for me to do, for my husband was traveling toward me just as fast as steam could bring him, and, as I assured the Comtesse, I felt that, "when Algy came, all would be discovered."

So I whiled away the long day gazing at the passers-by out of the Comtesse's windows, and listening to her alternate moans over her own gems, and descriptions of the gayeties of Baden in the gone gaming days, when she was young. She was a true daughter of La Belle France, volatility itself, and indeed I envied her quick spirits that mournful day in Baden. At 6 o'clock Algy would be with me, and it was 6 o'clock now. A knock at the door. Another of those detestable, terrifying pinkish envelopes the Comtesse hands me, and I read it while she, with adjusted glasses, peruses her own documents.

"This is too much," I say, fairly bursting into tears, as my eyes fell on the scrawled message:

"Impossible to come on; start at once. ALGY."

"Ah, mon enfant! what is it! Let me assist you. Ah, mon ange! dry those tears, for your husband must not see your beautiful eyes spoiled when he comes."

"He's not coming!" I exclaim, with a fresh sob. "Read that, Madame."

"Ah, 'tis too much? Well, he says to go to him, my darling, and so you see him just now, immediately. Yes—though I grieve to part with you, still—the train leaves in an hour, and 'tis best il faut obeir un maris, n'est-ce-pas?"

With the assistance of the Comtesse, I hastily pack my things in my bag, and strap up the, alas! empty shawl, array myself in my traveling hat and veil, and, cheered by her kind, motherly words, I start in the little hackney-carriage for the depot. I arrive there, buy my ticket of the surly Austrian official, with quivering fingers, and am just about to step into the coach, when I met my husband face to face! I fall into his open arms without regard to the 300 waiting travelers, and he, with equal indifference, exclaims:

"My God! my little Dorothea, what is the matter? Where have you been? Where are you going?"

He puts me into the hack, and bids the man drive back to the hotel of Monsieur von Linden.

During that twenty-minute drive through the streets of Baden, I managed—being a brief, direct little woman—to tell Algy my every word and movement, from the moment I left Dover until the moment I fell into his big, protecting arms. He utters at the conclusion a prolonged and manly whistle, and then, in a most ferocious voice, asks, in one breath, "If any man has spoken to or looked at me on the journey?" and to "show him the two telegrams." I answered "No," emphatically, to the question, and produced the two bits of coarse paper for my husband's inspection.

"These are not genuine telegrams. I sent you no telegrams," says Algy, in a very curious voice. "I waited and waited last night and to-day till I almost went mad; and then I came after you."

We reached the hotel. My husband is a gentleman of few words, but he has given me some very minute instructions. I go up-stairs and knock, much after the manner of a maid, on the door of Mme. la Comtesse de Girondelle. No answer. Again I knock, this time even louder, with a like result. A waiter comes by, and informs me that the Comtesse has gone out to spend the evening with a sick friend in the Heidelberg strasse. I return to Algy, who bids me array myself becomingly; that he is going to take me to the Kursaal to see a little gayety and hear a good deal of good music. Mr. Westmoreland has a dark, not a sinister, expression on his comely face as he issues his mandates, and at the same time puts himself into the dress suit I have brought in my trunks from London for him.

We are soon driven to the Kursaal, soon hear the band playing one of the loveliest things under the sun—the "Dichter unt Bauer" overture. I march around on Algy's arm, too happy to speak, with only the vision of my lost dot to trouble me, about which Mr. Westmoreland is singularly reticent and singularly hopeful; and occasionally the face—especially the nose—of the Comtesse comes across me, and I innocently wonder what she will say to-morrow at breakfast when she sees Algy and me back again? We are meandering around, when I suddenly give a little scream.

"What is it?" Algy says, frowning.

"There she is! don't you see? with all my diamonds on!" "That's the woman, Algy—that's the woman!" Algy looks; so do I. She is leaning her arm on one of the tables, and sipping wine from a goblet—the same woman that I watched in my dream, only I see her clearly now. Tall, with a fair complexion, a small mouth, a perfect little straight nose, two bright gray eyes, enhanced by the artful black pencil, and lovely blonde hair, dressed with superb artificial braids; she is attired in a rose-colored satin gown, covered with black lace flounces, and she wears all my dot sparkling and shimmering in her ears, on her neck and bosom, and arm and finger.

Algy tells me to keep very still, and presently puts me in the cab and leaves me, with strict injunctions to the driver to take me back to the hotel of Monsieur von Linden. As may be imagined, I sleep but little that night, my husband comes home late, very; says there is a certainty, almost, of recovering my jewels; calls me "a nervous, foolish little wife!" and bids me "go to sleep."

Again the Baden sunlight shines in the windows, and again I hear the Comtesse moving about her apartment, without wailing, however, this morning. At 10 o'clock, just as Mme. la Comtesse's breakfast was being set before her on the pretty, polished table, a burly gentleman, accompanied by two police officers, came clattering up to the door—nay, into her parlor itself—and Algy and I at the same moment also appeared to pay our respects to my kind friend.

She greeted us with charming politeness, but uttered a little scream on beholding the burly gentleman who entered simultaneously with ourselves.

"Nein, nein!" said the burly gentleman pleasantly; "no screaming, Comtesse. Permit me!" I looked on with indignation while the burly gentleman literally proceeded to scalp the Comtesse de Girondelle; with fingers defter than an Indian's he removed the entire chevelure of gray, soft curls, leaving exposed a beautiful head of blonde, waving hair. "Nein, nein, no screaming!" repeated the burly gentleman, suavely; and then—I blush to record it—he seized the long, pointed, investigating nose of the Comtesse delicately, between his thumb and forefinger, and—lifted it gracefully into the air. The Comtesse did not follow; she remained seated on her chair, displaying another nose!—a small, straight, pretty, white nose! I was terrified.

"Yah, yah" exclaimed the burly gentleman. Thereupon he took up a wet napkin and proceeded to rub the face of the Comtesse with vigor. In a few moments the coffee-colored complexion had disappeared, and the titled lady rejoiced in a skin matching the hue of her new nose.

"Ver are dis ladee's diamonds?" inquired the official, courteously. The Comtesse at once fainted, revived, screamed, called on all the saints and demons in the calendar to protect her and annihilate the burly gentleman respectively; finally she glanced in the direction of the wardrobe.

Thence the official drew my morocco case—my dot.

Algy took me away wholly in hysterics. Algy swore that no earthly power should lure him into leaving me alone for five minutes again, so long as we both lived. And I—I cannot help it—I look with distrust—nay, aversion of the most positive kind—upon any one who has a nose that is pink and pointed, and even one nail's breadth longer than it ought to be.—English Magazine.

Guileless Savages.

The Seneca nation of Indians, who occupy a reservation in Warren county, Penn., about forty miles in length, held a special election for local officers last week. This was rendered necessary by the "crookedness" displayed at the regular election for the same purpose held last May, when two tickets were placed in the field, both of which claimed to be successful. The matter was investigated by the proper authorities of the United States, who found the testimony so contradictory and much of the voting so irregular that it was impossible to arrive at any decision in regard to the correct result. Under these circumstances a new election was ordered, which passed off harmoniously.

The Slave Trade in Africa.

The slave trade still prospers in Africa. Lieut. Cameron says that the whole of Africa is now one vast slave field. The slave trade is increasing, and whole districts are desolated by it. He thinks that by opening up the country to commercial enterprise, and placing steamers on the Congo river, much can be done toward destroying the inhuman traffic; and Mr. Young, who recently explored Lake Nyassa, says there are at least 20,000 slaves a year carried off from the shores of the lake. The population on the south and west were employed by the Arabs to make war with the tribes inland to the west, and those that were captured were taken as slaves.

THE MOUNTAIN' MEADOW MASSACRE.

The Horrors of That Twenty-Year-Old Tragedy Coming to Light—Trial of Lee, the Mormon Ringleader—A Horrible Account of the Acts of This Bloodthirsty Monster.

The trial of Lee, the monster who planned and executed the terrible butchery of emigrants at Mountain Meadow, in 1857, has revealed to the world the long-hidden horrors of that awful tragedy, and some of the circumstances that led to its perpetration. The Associated Press agent at Beaver, Utah, where the trial took place, has telegraphed east an abstract of the testimony taken, which is full of thrilling interest. The first witness in the case was D. H. Wells, who testified that Lee, in 1857, occupied the position of a farmer to the Indians in Southern Utah, and perhaps some place in the militia. Laban Merrill testified as to the council held at Cedar City, which had under advisement the destruction of the train. It was understood that before it should be done Brigham Young should be consulted. A messenger was sent to Salt Lake for that purpose, and another to Pinto creek to draw off the Indians and allow the train to pass on, till word came from Brigham Young to the contrary. Forty-eight hours before the messenger returned from Salt Lake, he heard that the massacre had taken place. Haight, Higbee and Klingen Smith were in the council, and Lee was not there.

James Haslam testified that he was the messenger sent to Brigham Young by Haight, to whom he explained the object of his message. Lee could hold the emigrants corralled, waiting his return. He rode night and day, stayed two hours in Salt Lake, and returned. Brigham's message was: "Go; don't spare horse-flesh. Those men must be spared. Let them go in peace." Got back to Cedar on the Sunday following, and learned that the deed was done.

Samuel Knight's testimony went to show that he was driving one of the wagons which contained arms for the train; he heard the first gun fired after the emigrants had been decoyed out. Saw Lee blow a woman's brains out, beat a man to death with a gun, and murder several others, and at the same time saw the Indians make a rush on the women and children, whom they slew.

Daniel McMurdy testified that he drove the other wagon. After the emigrants had been decoyed out by a flag of truce, and the whole column commenced moving up the Meadows, he heard the command to "halt," and looking around saw Lee put his gun to a woman's head and fire. She fell. He heard him beating a man's brains out with a gun. Lee then came to the witness' wagon and shot all the wounded men with his pistol, and dragged the bodies to the ground. Only the children in the wagons were saved. The witness refused to tell whether he took a part in the killing, but on the former trial it came out that he was the man who, while in the act of firing on one of the wounded emigrants, said: "O Lord, receive their spirits, for it is for their sake we do these things."

Neshi Johnson, who went to the Meadows as an Indian interpreter, testified that he saw Lee shoot the woman referred to, and cut a man's throat as he dragged him from a wagon. This witness was extremely careful to tell nothing implicating any one except Lee, the witness being most constant in the forgetfulness of names and incidents not relating wholly to the defendant. His cross-examination, which was scorching, showed that he could tell sufficient to hang every man who took a part in the massacre. Jacob Hamblin testified as to a conversation between himself and Lee, a few days after the butchery, in which the defendant justified himself by claiming that it was necessary as a military measure. Hamblin stated that Lee further told him that an Indian chief who lived at Cedar brought two girls who had been hiding in the brush to him (Lee), and asked what he should do with them; that they were too pretty to kill. Lee replied that he must shoot them, that they were too big. The Indian then shot one, and Lee threw the other down and cut her throat; that when Hamblin returned to his ranche he went over the ground and found the bodies of two girls about the age described, from 13 to 15, lying near together with their throats cut as described; that one of the children who was about 8 years old was at his house, who claimed the two bodies as her sisters, and that their name was Dunlap.

Hamblin, on being asked by the defense if he had ever told this to any one, replied that he had, and more, too; that soon after the occurrence, which he remembered better than he did now, had told it to President Young and George A. Smith; that President Young told him that when the right time came and we could get a court of justice, to go and tell it. Being further pressed, witness said he had not seen the effects of any court of justice from that time to this, but thought now was just the right time to tell it.

London Statistics.

The Metropolitan District of London, which contains an area of 688 miles, was guarded during the year 1875 by 10,227 policemen. Of these, however, 1,236 were employed at dockyards, public departments, railway stations, etc., on special duty; the remaining 8,991 did the usual police work. London still continues to grow. During 1875 there were 10,023 new houses built; 169 new streets and four new squares were opened, covering a length of nearly thirty miles, and 3,775 new houses were in course of erection. No less than eighty-seven persons were killed in the streets, and 2,704 were maimed or injured. There was a great increase in the number of arrests for drunkenness, but the increase in the number of other offenses and crimes was but small.

Defaulter Arrested.

Sam Lappin, the State Treasurer of Kansas, who escaped jail in July, while awaiting trial for embezzlement, has been heard from. Assisted by Walter Stanley, one of Walker's old filibusters, he sawed the bars off his cell window; they then drove through Dakota and Nebraska to Duluth, took steamer there for Sarnia, proceeded by rail to Portland and New York, and sailed from there for Aspinwall on the 16th of August.

THE WIND-HARP.

BY FREDERICK E. WEATHERLY.

I set my wind-harp in the wind,
And a wind came out of the south,
Soft, soft, it blew with gentle coo,
Like words from a maiden's mouth.
Then like the stir of angels' wings
It gently touched the trembling strings
And oh, my harp gave back to me
A wondrous heavenly melody.

I set my wind-harp in the wind,
And a storm from the north blew loud,
From the icy north it hurried forth,
And dark grew sea and cloud.
It whistled down the mountain's height,
It smote the quivering chords with might,
But still my harp gave back to me
Its tender, heavenly melody.

Ah me, that such a heart were mine,
Responsive tuned and true,
When all was glad, when all was shine,
Or when storms of sorrow blew.
That so, 'mid all the fret and strife,
The jarring undertones of life,
My life might rise to God, and be
One long harmonious symphony!

Rescued from a Boa Constrictor.

At a fair, in the neighborhood of Lyons, a few days since, loud cries were heard issuing from the booth of Mlle. Laurent, a serpent-charmer. On some people hastening to the spot, they found that the alarm arose from the brother of the proprietress, a young man of 23, having been seized by an enormous boa constrictor. The reptile had got his right hand in his jaw, and was enveloping him in its folds in a way to crush him. The sister, seeing what was going on, seized a bucket of cold water and threw it over the engaged arm. As the liquid entered the snake's throat, it relinquished its victim, who was then free from its folds, and the serpent was afterward easily returned to its box.

THE BARBAROUS TURK.

Consul-General Schuyler's Official Report of His Investigations in Bulgaria—A Catalogue of Horrors Exceeding all Previous Narratives of the Atrocities—Whole Towns Razed and the Inhabitants Slaughtered.

The following is a portion of the preliminary report of Mr. Schuyler, the American Consul General, to the Hon. Horace Maynard, the American Minister, resident in Constantinople:

During the last winter and spring, agents of the Bulgarian committee, at Bucharest, made an agitation at Bulgaria for an insurrection against the Turkish government, and met with considerable encouragement among the younger part of the population. Owing to the betrayal of the plot the insurrection broke out prematurely on the 1st of May in the villages of Klissora, Koprishtiza, Panagurishta, Novo-Selo, Bellova, and, perhaps, one or two others. There was great alarm, and even a panic, at Tatar-Bazardjik and Philippopolis; numerous telegrams were sent to the Porte for regular troops, which, after some delay, were refused. The beys of Philippopolis and Adrianople practically seized on the government, and armed the Mussulman inhabitants of the towns and of the country, arms being sent for that purpose from Adrianople and Constantinople. These armed Mussulmans, called irregular troops or Bashi-Bazouks, were then, together with the few irregular troops at hand, sent into a campaign against the Bulgarian villagers, for the purpose of putting down the insurrection and of disarming the Christian population. But few Circassians seem to have been employed at this time. Their settlements are east of Adrianople. It was a levee en masse of the Mussulman villages against their Christian neighbors.

The insurgent villages made little or no resistance. In many instances they surrendered their arms upon the first demand. Nearly all the villages which were attacked by the Bashi-Bazouks were burned and pillaged, as were also all those which had been abandoned by the terrified inhabitants. The inhabitants of some villages were massacred after exhibitions of the most ferocious cruelty, and the violation not only of women and girls, but even of persons of the other sex. These crimes were committed by the regular troops as well as by the Bashi-Bazouks.

The number of villages which were burned in whole or in part in the districts of Piippopolis, Roptchus, and Tatar-Bazardjik is at least sixty-five.

[Mr. Schuyler here presents a tabular statement, showing the number of houses, churches and schools destroyed in each village. The total number of houses burned foots up 6,160; churches, 20; schools, 42.]

It is very difficult to estimate the number of Bulgarians who were killed during the few days that the disturbances lasted, but I am inclined to put 15,000 as the lowest for the districts I have named.

The manner in which the troops did their work will be seen from a few details gathered on the spot from persons who escaped from the massacre.

Perustitsa, a town of 400 houses and between 3,000 and 4,000 inhabitants, took no active part in the insurrection. Becoming alarmed by the attitude of the Turks in the neighboring villages, the inhabitants sent a deputation to Aziz Pasha, the mutessarif of Philippopolis, to defend them. He returned them a written message that he had no troops to send, and that they must defend themselves. When the Bashi-Bazouks appeared before the town they therefore refused to surrender, entrenched themselves in a church, retreating finally to another, and held out for five days, until they saw the regular troops under Rashid Pasha, when the remainder gave themselves up. Many of the inhabitants escaped at the beginning of the struggle, but many were shot down. The church was bombarded, and about 1,000 in all were killed, many of them women and children.

TUSSUM BEY'S EXPLOITS.

Klissura was nearly twice the size of Perustitsa and proportionately richer, as many of the inhabitants were engaged in the manufacture of attar of roses, and many were merchants traveling through the country. The insurrectionary movement began here on the 2d of May, but it was not until the 12th that the Bashi-Bazouks, under the command of Tussum Bey, of Korlova, attacked the place. A few shots were fired, when the villagers surrendered and fled to Koprishtista and to the mountains. More than 250 Bulgarians were killed, chiefly women and children.

Panagurishta (Otluk-kul) was attacked by a force of regular troops, together with Bashi-Bazouks, on the 11th of May. Apparently, no message to surrender was sent. After a slight opposition on the part of the insurgents the town was taken. Many of the inhabitants fled, but 3,000 were massacred, the most of them being women and children. Of these about 300 belonged to the town of Panagurishta, and the others to nine neighboring villages, the inhabitants of which had taken refuge there. Four hundred buildings, including the bazaar and the largest and best houses, were burned. Both churches were completely destroyed, and almost leveled to the ground. In one an old man was violated on the altar and afterward burned alive. Two of the schools were burned, the third—looking like a private house—escaped. From the numerous statements made to me, hardly a woman in the town escaped violation and brutal treatment. The ruffians attacked children of 8 and old women of 80, sparing neither age nor sex. Old men had their eyes torn out and their limbs cut off and left to die unless some charitably disposed man gave them the final thrust. Pregnant women were ripped open and the unborn babes carried triumphantly on the points of bayonets and sabers, while little children were made to bear the dripping heads of their comrades. This scene of rapine, lust, and murder was continued for three days, when the survivors were made to bury the bodies of the dead. The perpetrators of these atrocities were chiefly regular troops commanded by Hafiz Pasha. The Turks claim and the villagers admit the death of fourteen Mussulmans, two of whom were women who were killed with arms in their hands during a conflict with a party that refused to surrender to the insurgents.

While pillage reigned supreme at Koprishtitsa, and lust at Panagurishta, at Batak the Turks seemed to have no stronger passion than the thirst for blood. This village surrendered without firing a shot, after a promise of safety, to the Bashi-Bazouks, under the command of Ahmed Aga, of Burutina, a chief the rural police. Despite his promise, the few arms once surrendered, Ahmed Aga ordered the destruction of the village and the indiscriminate slaughter of the inhabitants, about 100 young girls being reserved to satisfy the lust of the conqueror before they, too, should be killed. I saw their bones, some with the flesh still clinging to them, in the hollow on the hillside, where the dogs were gnawing them. Not a house is now standing in the midst of this lovely valley. The saw-mills—for the town had a large trade in timber and sawn boards—which lined the rapid little river are all burned, and of the 8,000 inhabitants not 2,000 are known to survive. Fully 5,000 persons, a very large proportion of them women and children, perished here, and their bones whiten the ruins or their putrid bodies infect the air. The sight of Batak is enough to verify all that has been said about the acts of the Turks in repressing the Bulgarian insurrection. And yet I saw it three months after the massacre. On every side were human bones, skulls, ribs, and even skeletons, heads of girls still adorned with braids of long hair, bones of children, skeletons still encased in clothing. Here was a house, the floor of which was white with the ashes and charred bones of thirty persons burned alive there. Here was the spot where the village notable, Trandafil, was spitted on a pike and then roasted, and where he is now buried; there was a foul hole full of decomposing bodies; here a mill-dam filled with swollen corpses; here the school-house, where 200 women and children who had taken refuge there were burned alive, and here the church and church-yard, where fully 1,000 half-decayed forms were still to be seen, filling the inclosure in a heap several feet high, arms, feet and heads protruding from the stones which had vainly been thrown there to hide them, and poisoning all the air.

Since my visit, by orders of the Mutessarif, the Kaimakam of Tatar Bazardjik was sent to Batak with some lime to aid in the decomposition of the bodies and to prevent a pestilence.

Ahmed Aga, who commanded at the massacre, has been decorated and promoted to the rank of Yuzbashi.

Flogging a Garroter in England.

A prisoner named William Leonard, who was convicted of a highway robbery with violence upon a young lady in Lincoln's Inn Fields, at the last session of the Central Criminal Court, received, recently, in Newgate, the first installment of the forty lashes awarded him. The prisoner had been previously flogged in 1870 for a previous offense, and the present is said to be almost the only instance in which the punishment of the cat has not proved effectual in preventing the offender from repeating acts of violence; and Mr. Commissioner Kerr, having regard to this fact and the prisoner's previous bad character, sentenced him to undergo two separate floggings of twenty lashes each at an interval of one month, and then to be kept in penal servitude for seven years. The prisoner, it is stated, greatly dreaded the punishment, and frequently appealed to the Governor to relieve him from it, representing that he was ill and unable to bear the flogging. Dr. Gibson, the medical officer of the prison, was consulted, but he could find no reason in the condition of the prisoner to justify any remission of the punishment. The moment he was brought into the room where the punishment was to be inflicted, the reporter says, he began howling and appealing to Mr. Smith and Dr. Gibson to have mercy upon him, and it was with some difficulty that he was fixed to the whipping-block. At the first stroke he shrieked for mercy, and urged the warder who was administering the punishment not to give it him too hard. He continued shrieking and crying all the time the punishment was being inflicted, and when it was completed he pretended to faint, and he was then taken back to his cell.

Eighty Years a Soldier.

On the 15th of August last Marshal Von Wrangel celebrated the eightieth anniversary of the day on which he received his first commission in the Prussian army. In 1796 Frederic William II. was King, his famous uncle had been dead but ten years, Gen. Bonaparte had just achieved European fame by his first Italian campaign, and Washington was President of the United States; Jena was still ten years off, and Waterloo nineteen. In the interval Prussia was to be reduced to a third-rate State, her army limited to 42,000 men, and a French Emperor was to take away the sword of Frederick the Great "from the keeping of a nation unworthy to retain it." These gloomy days passed away; but Wrangle was to live into another age of troubles—to see a Prussian revolution, Frederick William IV. refusing the imperial crown of Germany, and a new French Empire menacing the unity of the fatherland. Finally he has lived to hear of the wonderful events of 1870-1. The life of the veteran has extended over more than half the duration of the Prussian monarchy, which is not yet 176 years old. In his early youth he might have conversed with a survivor of the wars of Marlborough, and even listened to anecdotes by an eye-witness of Frederick I.'s coronation.

A Revelation from the Mounds.

While engaged in exploring an ancient mound in Champaign county, Ohio, Dr. Thomas Moses fell into it. The enthusiastic doctor was dug out by his friends, who were rewarded by finding and removing four perfect skeletons of grown persons and two of children. This makes eight in this mound. They also found about 100 conch-shape sea-shells lying about the neck of one of the children, and about as many pearl beads about the neck of a grown person. Mica plates, crescent shape, and a peculiar shaped polished stone ornament, probably an insignia of rank, were also found. The bodies were lying in regular line, with the heads pointing alternately to the east and west, and over and about them was a large amount of charcoal and ashes. The scientists are much elated over their success.

ABOUT DEAD LETTERS.

Pathetic and Ridiculous Array of Stray Mail Matter—Curiosities of the Dead Letter Office.

The paradise of fools, "to few unknown," writes a correspondent of the Cleveland Leader, is the mental comment as one sees the many evidences of people's carelessness, foolishness and stupidity which are displayed at the Dead-Letter Office Museum. Arranged in glass cases on four sides of the room are all these waifs of travel, displayed with a view to their respective attractions, and suggestive of the treachery of postage stamps and the adverse fate which sometimes overtakes even mail-bags. There is everything known to the useful and ornamental; everything not smaller than a thimble or larger than a stove-pipe hat.

Such a pathetic array of might-have-beens, so eloquent of disappointments and blighted hopes! Locks of hair—there are whole switches of them—and as for photographs, we are told that there are forty bushels of them in the basement of the building. But fancy yourself the recipient of a nice parcel from the hands of the postman some morning, which, upon being opened, discloses a live snake! Whether one would go into raptures or hysterics at such a treasure would be a matter of taste, I suppose. But, then, people do send snakes through the mail, and sometimes they come back to the Dead-Letter Office for want of a claimant, and we see them leading a serenely spiritual existence in a glass jar among other stray postal curiosities. It is a fact that a Postmaster once found a small live alligator disporting among the letters and papers in a mail bag.

There was also a bouquet of fresh flowers which had slipped out of its box, and a couple of empty boxes, very similar in size and shape, and both addressed to ladies, left the poor man in doubt as to which the alligator belonged, and to which the flowers. Imagine the fair recipient of the flowers finding a monster in her box, instead of the delicious offering which she had expected! But the Postmaster made no blunder; he put the flowers into one box, the alligator into the other; notified the ladies of the slight confusion of property which had taken place, and directed each to exchange with the other if she should receive the wrong article. But he was gratified to learn shortly afterward that there had been no mistake made. Jewelry is one of the articles most commonly intrusted to letters and postal packages.

One can hardly realize that there is a daily average of 12,000 or 15,000 dead letters, or about 400,000 a month. Allowing one person to a letter, there are 400,000 persons every month who undertake to send letters either without stamps, without addresses, or with cancelled stamps, insufficient postage, or illegible or incorrect addresses. Many of them are without either stamp or address, and often with no signature which gives the slightest clew to persons sending them. There are 40,000 a month received that either lack postage or address, or else have insufficient or cancelled stamps; and, strange as it may seem, these are sometimes the most valuable letters, often containing currency or drafts for large amounts of money. It is estimated that there is about $4,000,000 in drafts and $75,000 in cash received yearly through letters. This is all returned, if possible, to persons sending it; but if any portion of it fails to find a claimant, it is turned over to the Postoffice fund.

Very little difficulty is experienced in restoring the checks and drafts to the rightful owners, but the money generally comes in small sums, and is usually sent in the most careless, haphazard fashion, and the loss of these small sums, and the ignorance or carelessness with which they are launched upon a journey, represents a deal of suffering and disappointment. Some hard-working man may send $20, the savings of a month's labor, to his wife and little ones, whom he has had to leave behind him; but, alas! he is one of forty thousand who trust to Providence, without stamp or address, or else his writing or orthography are beyond mortal ken, and so the poor wife never gets the pittance, which is her all.

It is very amusing to see the letters opened, and guess at their contents before they are brought to light. Three out of five from a bundle of unaddressed letters contained money, one of them a $5-note. Then there are such quantities of dress samples in letters. One would imagine that all womankind had discovered a language in the interchange of these scraps of dress fabrics. One-half show their prosperity in bits of silks and satins, and the other half in bits of six-penny calico, and it is only in the Dead-Letter Office that they meet on common ground. Certainly every fifth letter contains a photograph, and I don't imagine that any great care is taken to return lost photographs; but any one so bereaved has the privilege of rumaging among the forty bushels of human "counterfeits" which have accumulated here.

A Vision of Death in Sleep.

A singular story comes from Wise county, Texas. One forenoon the wife of a farmer lay down on the back porch, went to sleep, and dreamed. In her dream she saw a newly-dug grave in the yard; near the grave was a woman laid out in burial apparel; the woman she recognized as herself. When her husband came to dinner she related her singular dream, and gave a minute description of everything that she had seen, locating her grave in the back-yard, and the manner in which she was dressed. Her husband thought it singular, but paid no further attention to it. During the afternoon a woods-rat ran into the house. The farmer snatched up an old pistol, and snapped it at the escaping rat. While examining the treacherous fire-arm it was accidentally discharged. The ball lodged in the wife's brain. She fell and expired in a few moments.

Hold On, Boys.

Not more than ten years ago there was an uneasy movement among the farmers of Illinois and Iowa, and other interior States looking further West. Lands were offered for sale, on all sides, by well-to do people, who wished to buy up townships, more or less, in the rich lands of Western Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska. The grasshoppers and drouths drove this wave of emigration rudely back, and now it is well understood that the cheap arable lands of the United States are exhausted. They have all passed to private ownership. Henceforth the price of land everywhere will go up as it never has done before.

There are children now living who will see land in this country as unattainable to the poor man as it is in Europe. The "old farm," from which the country boy is so eager to escape, will become a little principality, to which the city clerk will look with envy. The country boy who will now make his best struggle to get a good piece of land, and when secured plant it in fruit trees, or preserve the natural growth now on it, will be a nabob in a small but very real way before the snows of age whiten his temples.

The advice to young men now is not to "Go West," but to get land, get out and keep out of debt, and hold on to it. The man who will be allured to part with his farm, by any of the mirages of town life, will have occasion to rue it bitterly. Hold on to the farm, boys, and in a few years from now you will not care to call the King your uncle.—Interior.

How Pete Amused Himself.

A rather elderly darkey from the Post Oaks was inquiring of a policeman if he knew anything of his son Pete. The policeman replied, there was a young darkey in the lockup, that had a mouth like a stable door, and a piece bit out of one of his ears, that was locked up for breaking up a prayer meeting with an ax-handle. "Dat's him," exclaimed the overjoyed parent, "he told me he was gwine to 'muse hisself," and the policeman conducted the parent to the bower in the market house, where Pete was recovering from his amusement.—*San Antonio (Tex.) ROOFS.
Why not make your Roofs last a lifetime, and save the expense of a new roof every ten or fifteen years. It can be done; if you use Slate Paint, it will not only resist the effects of water and wind, but shield you from Fire.
OLD ROOFS.
Protect your Buildings by using Slate Paint, which neither cracks in winter nor runs in summer. Old shingle roofs can be painted, looking much better, and lasting longer than new shingles without the paint, for one-fourth the cost of re-shingling. On decayed shingles it fills up the holes and pores, and gives a new substantial roof, that lasts for years. Curled or warped shingles it brings to their places, and keeps them there. This paint requires no heating, is applied with a brush, and very ornamental. It is chocolate color, when first applied, but changes to a uniform slate color, and is to all intents and purposes slate.
ON TIN OR IRON ROOFS
the red color is the best paint in the world for durability. It has a heavy body, is easily applied, expands by heat, contracts by cold, dries slow and never cracks nor scales. One coat equals 4 of any other.
FIRE-PROOF NEW ROOFS.
Mills, foundries, factories and dwellings a specialty. Materials complete for a new steep or flat Roof of Rubber Roofing, cost but about half the price of re-shingling. For private houses, barns, and buildings of all descriptions, it is far superior to any other roofing in the world for convenience in laying, and combines the ornamental appearance, durability, and fire-proof qualities of tin, at one-third the cost. No Tar or Gravel Used.
"How to save re-shingling—stop leaks effectually and cheaply in roofs of all kinds"—a 100 page book free. Write to-day.

All Goods Retailed at Wholesale Prices

This is the Only Secret of Our Immense Trade.

we purchase at first hands and sell direct to the consumer, so there is no middlemen to eat up profits. Some goods—take teas for instance—pass through four different hands before they reach consumers, and each one has to have his profit, so that 40 to 50 per cent. is added to price. The impot has his profit of 10 per cent., the jobbing merchant his profit of 10 per cent., the speculator and whol sale merchants, 10 to 20 per cent. and the retailer all he can get. So Sugars, Coffees, Spices, Prune Fruits, Tobaccos, Liquors, or anything we deal in. Our customers get the benefit of all these inter edi tem profits, No middlemen with us. We are having a great run on Prunes. The Finest enny saved is two pence got." Ten cents reduction on teas. The continued dullness in trad t, coupled with the large number of failures in the tea trade, has completely demoralized . Teas we used to sell at $1,40, and lately $1,10 per pound, we now fell at $1 per pound. Bit Hyson, Imperial or Gunpowder, the very best qualities, now $1 per pound. The best uncolo now 80c, was 90c, the best Oolong now 35c, was 95c. Other grades as low 25c per pound, up 50 and 70c per pound.

PRUNES ONLY 8c A POUND.

There is no safety in anything but a free ballot.

Keep your eye on the man who would corrupt the ballot box.

Blue Jeans will be the next Governor of Indiana if Democrats do their duty.

There is a perfect stampede of German voters from the Republican party.

Vote for better times by voting the Democrotic ticket.

Every time Hayes was a candidate for office in Ohio he ran several thousand behind his ticket.

A vote for Williams for Governor is a vote for economy.

Hazy, Hazy, sweet Ruthy B., have you heard from the widow and orphaned mother of that dead soldier whose $400 you pocketed? "Yum, yum, yum!"

Vote for the honest old farmer, J. D. Willirms, for Governor.

In four states, Vermont, Maine, Arkansas and Alabama, all of which voted for Grant, the Republican loss 120,000 votes, or nearly one-quarter the entire vote of both parties

Those who are realizing hard times and want a change will vote the Democratic ticket.

While the war was in progress the men in the field labored to bring the rebels into the Union. Now, the men who never went into the war are laboring hard to keep them out.

Won't our cotemporaries publish that letter of Kilpatrick's? Their readers want to be informed what is necessary to carry Indiana. And, while they are about it, it will opportune to show just what Hayes did with the $400 which he got from the body of a dead soldier.

Those who want an economical administration these hard times will vote fot "Honest Old Blue Jeans."

The Chicago Tribune, a leading Republican paper, says: "By the showing of his own hand, Governor Hayes has been falsifying the record and returning an amount of tax ridiculously below the valuation of his personal and taxable property." Will the Blade and Commercial please copy?

Vote for Kelly, the farmers' candidate for Congress. There are too many lawyers there now.

The Terre Haute Express adorns its pages with a wood cut of Hon. S. F. Cary, that has the appearance of having been taken at a time when that worthy gentleman was suffering from civil war in his stomach and bowels.

Schurz says, the administration is a cesspool of corruption. Vote for a reform by voting the Democratic ticket.

It is now perfectly clear that nothing but the bayonet can enable the present public officials to prepetuate their control of the Government. They will do well to study the histories of all who have, for a time, succeeded in smothering the voice of the people by means of the military power.

The present and future good of his country is what should determine the character of a freeman's ballot. His vote is for the preservation of his individual liberty and the advancement of his country. No man can afford to make of his franchise an instrument of hate and revenge.

It is generally remarked that Uncle Jimmy Williams bears a striking resemblance in face and form to Old Abe Lincoln. The early life and habits of the two men were very much alike, and there promises to be something of a similarity in their subsequent lives. Lincoln was a lawyer and legislator and finally became President. Williams is a farmer and legislator and will soon be Governor.

Uncle Jimmy Williams made many friends while he was in this city. A little party of three gentlemen from the country called at his room to see him and said they had come several miles to get a look at "Old Blue Jeans." Uncle Jimmy received them in his usually cordial manner and had a pleasant chat with them. Then told him they had always been straight Republicans but this time they were going to vote for "Blue Jeans Williams," the honest old public economist, and said that many of their Republican neighbors would do the same. At least one of these men was a soldier and fought through the entire war, but he now says he wants peace and honest government and believes the only way to get it is to vote for a change of party rulers.

Adams Accepts.

Charles Francis Adams will run for Governor of Massachusetts In his letter accepting the Democratic nomination, he says:

"The time for service on my part is fast passing away; but my interest in the prosperity and the honor of the country will cease only with my life. Convinced, as I am, that the ruling party will not tend to the eradication of the great evil that prevails—the tendency to corruption in official station—neither will it promote the restoration of internal peace and harmony—a vital object, in my opinion, to the complete restoration of the country—I can only say that whatever service I may be able to render to the attainment of these ends, however feebly it may be, is entirely at your command. With great respect,

"CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS."

There probably never was a campaign before where the opponents of the Democratic party resorted to more outrageous lies and slanders against the Democratic candidate than at present. The object is evidently to detract the attention of the people from the grave charges of malfeasance and corruption of the officers of the government elected by the Republican party. The demand for a change of administration is important and imperative because only a change can effect reform. By change we do not mean the ousting of one Republican and the installment of another Republican. Some great head of the government must take the knife of reform and cut clean; must root out corruption and bring about reform and retrenchment. The men like Morton and Shepherd and Conkling and Blaine do not desire to change, beause they have grown wealthy and powerful and corrupt under the present American system. These men are the leading advocates of Hayes' election. His success means more years of Grantism. Every voter in the country has come to know that Grantism is inimcal to good government. Hard stories against Tilden can not explain away the wickedness of the Republican party.

Hayes's Tax Returns.

From the Chicago Times.

1. With a full knowledge of the requirement of the law, R. B. Hayes has persistently neglected to list his property subject to taxation.

2. He has for three years made false oath as to the value of his property above his just debts.

3. He has sworn that in 1865 his property was worth only $2,581, when the portion of it liable to be taxed turned $60,000.

4. He has refused for three years to list his gallery of paintings and a diamond that fell to him as a residuary legatee—$5,000.

5. He never paid any money toward the Fort Stevenson purchase, although he says he did, for the purpose of explaining the remarkable falling off in the exhibits of figures from 1873 to 1874.

6. He had in 1874-'75-'76 about $9,000 worth of credits, in the shape of mortgages which he did not list, and, more than this, perjured himself by swearing he was not possessed of them.

7. He had three horses in 1874, and swore he had but one.

8. He had three watches in 1874, and swore he had but one.

9. He has had the use of thirty odd thousand dollars left as bequests by his uncle, for which he makes no return.

10. He has disregarded the law, and made no return to the Probate Court of Sandusky County for the executorship of his uncle's will.

11. In short, Rutherford B. Hayes has been guilty of false swearing for the past three years, and has swindled his country and the State of Ohio out of a large share of their just revenues.

It begins to look as if the Republican cause in this section of the State was about ready for a funeral.

Hayes' $400 Defense.

Was ever before such a shambling, dodging, non-committal, non-denying defense made by a gentleman to a charge of larceny? "I have no recollection of ever having received it. If it was handed to me it was immediately, and there, turned over to the proper officer to obtain another man in the place of the deserter."

And pray, Gov. Hayes, if you have no recollection of ever having received it, how are you able to assert, as you do, that it was immediately turned over to the proper officer? Who was that "proper officer?" If he had no name, surely his office has some designation. Was it the Captain of Whitlow's company? Has Hayes forgotten, not only the name but the office? The charge against him can not be whistled down the wind in this style.

The truth is that out of Gov. Hayes' own mouth he is convicted. He first robbed the heirs of the dead in the name of the law by an absurd decision, that the money belonged to the Government—a decision that he, as a lawyer, must have known was in violation of every principle of law and right. Then he himself demanded and received the money, and the only account he is able to give of it is that if he received it he turned it over to the proper officer, to be used in getting another recruit in the place of the man who was executed. The records of the regiment will show who the "proper officer" was, if any such officer existed.—Courier-Journal.

Hayes a Salary Grabber.

Hayes was a member of the Thirty-ninth Congress, and was a salary-grabber. He was elected when the pay of a Congressman was $3,000 a year, and he voted to increase the salary to $5,000 a year, and the law being made retroactive and passed July 28, 1866, he drew pay from the day he was sworn into office, at the increased rate of $5,000 a year. By this knavery, and violation of his implied obligation to serve his constituents at the rate of $3,000, he pocketed $4,000 extra for his first term, and $1,500 for the nine months he served of his second term. He is a salary-grabber to the amount of $5,500, stands branded before the country with unfaithfulness in a trust, and expects people who refused to elect salary-grabbers to Congress to vote for him for President. The Forty-second Congress made a bolder and deeper grab which aroused the indignation of the whole people, and the smaller and meaner steal of the Thirty-nineth Congress, which Hayes got his part of, was forgotten in the storm which banished the big grabbers from public life. The Thirty-ninth Congress set the example upon which the big grab was subsequently made. Hayes himself voted and pocketed $5,500 back pay, and with this act of venality stamped upon him, for Buckland can't get witnesses to swear him out of this bold indecency, he is before the people for the highest office within their gift. The election of a salary grabber to the office of President would be such an indorsement by the people of corruption as would make it an approved qualification for the highest honors. This is a serious matter, and its entire truth cannot be controverted. The only defense is a justification of the act. Hayes voted for the law as we have stated, increasing his own pay from $3,000 a year to $5,000 a year, and when the bill became a law drew from the treasury $5,500 more than he would have received if the pay had not been increased. If this was not salary grabbing, what was it? It only differs with the later act, which was pronounced infamous by the whole people, in the amount of money pocketed by the members whose votes passed the law. A salary grabber who swears strong to get clear of paying taxes justly due from him under the law, is hardly a fit person to represent the honor, dignity and integrity of the American people.

Ask a Republican why his party demonetized silver, and he will tell you that you are a rebel and it is unsafe to trust the country in the hands of the rebels. Ask a Republican why his party wants to force an attempt to resume payment in gold in less than two years, when everybody knows that there is not gold enough in the country to resume at that time and the attempt will be ruinous to all kinds of business, and he will tell you that the Democratic party wants to pay the rebel debt and re-inslave the negroes. Ask a Republican why his party does not reduce the expenditures of the Government and by economy lessen the burden of taxation, and he will tell you there are sixty rebel Generals in the "Confederate" Congress. Give a Republican a chance to talk and instead of pleading for honesty and a better and a more peaceful condition of the country, he will flaunt the bloody shirt and talk over war scenes of fifteen years ago. This is the Republican style of carrying on a campaign in which the suffering people are vitally interested. Can honest men think there is no need of a change, when such answers are given to such questions of interest to everybody?

"Blue Jeans."

Much was said by our Republican gentry, and especially by the soft-handed and soft-headed kind, about the personal appearance of the Democratic candidate for Governor, as if that had anything to do with his fitness for the office for which he has been selected by the people of Indiana. It will be readily admitted that if good looks were a necessity for a Governor Mr. Williams would probably never been presented in a Democratic convention. If it was required or desirable that a man should know the service of straw-colored kids and patent-leather boots, and be familiar with the language of flowers and card lingo, Williams would be as unfit for Governor as Witherill is to join the angels. Had these been the necessary adjuncts of office, poor homely old Abe Lincoln would never have occupied the Presidential chair and Grant never would have got a grip on back salary. Were these the necessary adjuncts of the gentleman and honest man, it would make a boor and thief of every farmer and every laboring man in the State of Indiana. Thank God, who ordained an honest heart under the blue jeans of the farmer and brains under the cap of the bronzed toiler! It makes the blood of our father burn with indignation to hear some brainless puppy behind a counter, some rose scented lying lawyer, some lavender-gloved banker, some black-and-tan close-communionist, some sutler or paymaster who made enough money out of the war to lay around and do nothing—to hear them making fun of a man and decrying him because his hands are hard and large with honest labor and his figure bent with toil, and because he is more familiar with the plow handles than with the little mysteries of gilt-edged society. Out upon such men! Look here, farmers and working men, this is why Williams should not be Governor of Indiana;

Williams was uninviting enough to look upon, but when he opened his mouth he displayed the distressing emptiness of his shallow pate. He would be a sweet-scented thing to represent the great State of Indiana—the fifth State in the Union! How proud would Indiana be with that shitepoke as her chief magistrate! Posey county, Hoop Pole township, would then be the representative locality in the State! Sweet Williams, who never wore a kid glove, nor knew what a calling card was, until he went to Washington; who picks his nose at the table and on the speaker's stand, and arrays his boasted ignorance of the proprieties of life as a qualification for the highest office in the gift of the people of Indiana!

This is the sheet that denounced the formation of working men's unions. Here is a man who never wore a kid glove—Great God! And they want to run him for Governor! Here is a man bronzed with the sun of the farm, whose hands and back are bent with the grip of the plow—merciful heavens! Here is a man who don't use calling cards—and, what the d—l are we all coming to!—they want to make him the executive officer of a great State. Ah! he is a "sweet-scented thing," and picks his nose—what a brute! He ought not to pick his nose, whatever he does. These things be very offensive to our Republican friends. Had these objections been presented to the Democratic convention in its proper light, they would undoubtedly have selected a good-looking man.

Our Republican friends are great sticklers for society. Belknap always wore a swallow-tailed coat and kid gloves; Babcock wears lavenders and knows a calling card on sight; Grant always wears a plug hat, when not too drunk to wear any; McKee always wore white kids and blue swallow-tail when out of jail; so did Tweed, but the fashion changed after those fellows got in, and they are bound to keep up with the fashion; Bristow didn't wear kids—but Bristow was a dirty reformer and was kicked out. The fact is, these Republicans have been so long in office they consider it a birth-right which belongs to the kid-gloved portion of mankind. Their man is Harrison.

Now, we are just democratic enough to despise any man or set of men, poor or rich, who assume a superiority over their fellows because of these things. Contempt is too light and inexpressive a word.

Sop that Cough.

No pulmonary complaint however obstinate, can resist the healing influence of Dr. Morris' Syrup of Tar, Wild Cherry and Horehound.—Nothing that we have ever sold acts so promptly and effectually in coughs, colds, hoarseness, sore throat, asthma and all diseases of the throat, lungs and chest, leading to consumption. It is a certain cure for Hooping Cough and Croup. Contains no opium and is pleasant to take. Cough-worn victims whose lungs are racked and torn with paroxysms that threatened to choke them, should secure speedy relief in its use. Trial size 10 cents. Ask for Dr. Morris' Syrup take no other.

The Election is close at hand. Prepare.

THE FOES OF THE FIELD.

BY WILL M. CARLETON.

There's no nation on earth can compare with our own!
What people so fast as our people has grown?
What country can spread out such beautiful farms?
What women can equal our own, in their charms?
Where else, in the records of ages, appears
A town like Chicago, in forty-odd years?
Where else, in those forty-odd years, can be found
Such thriving young cities as cluster around?
The ancient, slow coaches are broken and gone:
And the cry of our nation is "Onward, right on!"
We've factories that finish whate'er they begin,
From an engine and train, to the head of a pin;
On railroads, o'er mountain and prairie-land run
Locomotives—the fastest ones under the sun!
We've many staunch men in the different grades
Of all the professions, and all of the trades;
In churches and schools, young America trains,
Preparing himself to take hold of the reins;
And, to make the long list of our glory complete,
American babies, though scarce, are not beat!

We've Omega—Alpha—the last and the first!
Of everything known we've the best and the worst!
We've land which, for richness, the world will defy
And deserts o'er which e'en the birds will not fly!
We've horses, the fastest on earth—by our measure—
And mules ever ready to kick us with pleasure;
We've men for dispensing their thousands esteemed—
And men who would "whittle a flint till it screamed;"
We've Christian young men who are steady as steelyards,
And smart little boys who play euchre and billiards;
For helpers to build up our national worth,
We lay under tribute all parts of the earth.
Our ladies—heaven guard them!—are nowhere surpassed
In their several stations, from first unto last;
The sisters who, howe'er their hearts find another,
Can never forget the pure kiss of a brother;
The wives, who, if decked with love's glistening gem,
Cling close to the man who clings truly to them;
The mothers—what man was e'er favored with birth,
Whose mother was not the best woman on earth?
But never a nation so mighty has been,
But foemen have found it, without and within;
Let me mention some foes that are doing their all
To hurry our land to inglorious fall;

First steps out the creature of Sham, covered o'er
With masks and with mantles full near half a score;
With a bright solitaire on his bosom displayed,
From Paris, the place where good diamonds are made;
A wig curled to science his high head is topping;
He's an oroide repeater, repeatedly stopping.
His wife grandly follows, arrayed, on her part,
With all the resources of feminine art;
Her hair has forgot its original red;
A knapsack she bears at the back of her head;
Would her face I could paint, your approval to win with!
But then, she has done that herself, to begin with!
False teeth—a false eye—a false manner—too young—
False garments—false jewels—false pride—a false tongue—
False all—save her falsity; that is too true.
Need I, my dear hearers, have mentioned to you,
That the names of this couple, of duplicate life,
Are simply Sir Sham, and his sham of a wife?
Need I tell of the ravages they have been making?
The common-sense laws they are constantly breaking?
The way that some people unceasingly trample
Such truth as is in them, to take their example?
The question is not, with these folks, "What I am,"
But simply and constantly, "What can I sham?"
Not, "What grace or goodness rests truly with me?"
But, "What unto others can I seem to be?"
Not, "How much may honestly fall to my lot?"
But, "How much will people believe I have got?"
Not, "Am I, myself, taking the best
Heaven gave me, and leaving God's mercy the rest?
And am I close following the good and the true,
And doing what I fain would be seeming to do?"
Not, "Does the great God view my acts with a smile
And his sweet approbation?" but, "Am I the style?"

Let us fight this Sir Sham, with Truth's sharp-pointed spear,
And know what we are, rather than how we appear;
And if we see spots on the sun, let us know
That the sun has the spots, not the eyes that below
Are scanning his features, so dazzling to view;
Let us sound what is solid, and prove what is true;
Let us know right, and be right, and do right, the best
That in us doth lie, and let God run the rest.

STRANGELY BETROTHED.

"Going out, Ellen, are you?" said my father, as he tightened the rein of his sturdy hill-pony. "Well, well, my dear, I have to face the heat, too, and shall envy you the shade of your favorite trees, beside the big tank. That Malabar headman I spoke of, who has just brought over a gang of fresh coolies from the mainland, has promised to meet me in front of the joss-house in the Nal Tautee village, to see if we can come to terms. I shall be back before tiffin time, I hope."

And, with a kindly nod and smile, he rode off at a brisk trot; his horsekeeper, a barefooted Cingalese lad, easily keeping pace with the pony, and running swift and silent, like a brown shadow, beside his master's stirrup. Times had changed, and for the worse, since Mr. Travers had been reckoned among the most thriving coffee-planters in Ceylon. Our once-famous plantation, called Travers after the family that had possessed it for two generations, was not now the source of profit that, in my grandfather's time, it had been. The rich soil, worn out by over cropping and neglect, no longer yielded its heavy harvest of red-brown berries; while to reclaim fresh land from the jungle was both toilsome and costly. The estate gave us the means of maintenance, and little more.

I was an only child, and my father was a widower, so that our actual necessities, in that cheap and frugal country, were easily provided for—nor should I have had a care in the world, save for the old, old story of love, the course of which hard circumstances would not suffer to run smooth. Our nearest neighbor—and Christian neighbors, with white faces and English-speaking tongues, were scarce in Northern Ceylon—was Mr. Forster, a planter, by far wealthier than we were. Now Oswald Forster and I were plighted lovers, but the very idea of an engagement between his only son and the daughter of his embarrassed neighbor was gall and wormwood to Oswald's father, a proud, strong-willed man, who managed his thriving property so as to extract from every biggah of [illegible] land its utmost yield of silver rupees.

Desirous to efface from Oswald's mind the idea of marrying poor little Ellen Travers, Mr. Forster, with his wife's concurrence, proposed to send his son to Europe, confident that foreign travel and change of scene would soon obliterate from his memory the image of the lonely little girl beside the great Tank of Minary. And now a word concerning the Tank itself, the name of which, I fear, conveys to European readers but a very inadequate conception of the stupendous reality. The Tank of Minary, justly reckoned among the marvels which the island of Ceylon has still to show, is perhaps the largest of the artificial lakes ever planned, by mortal engineer. More than two thousand years have passed since, before the Christian era, a Buddhist king bade his subjects toil to erect the massive walls of hewn stone and tough chunam, that environ that vast sheet of water, twenty-five miles in circumference.

With the Minary Lake, or Tank, which lay close to my own house, I had been, from childhood, familiar; and I dearly loved the mirror-like expanse of its calm waters, studded with floating islands of the crimson-blossomed lotus of India, the red flowers and green leaves of which covered many thousand acres of the surface. Strange fish, of brilliant colors, glided in glittering shoals through the deep, clear water, rarely disturbed by prow or paddle; bright birds, of every size, from the scarlet flamingo to the tiny oriole or the towering adjutant, haunted it; and all around grew in dense profusion the mighty trees and flowering creepers of the virgin forest, whence came at times the complaining cry of the mountain cat, the belling of the deer, the panther's snarl, or the crashing of the cane and sapling, as wild elephants forced their way through the trackless recesses of the jungle.

I am bound to admit that there were other tenants of lake and forest less attractive than the bright-plumaged birds, and the pretty little lizards basking in the patches of yellow sunshine. Alligators were very common, snakes plentiful, and the scorpion, the centipede and the tree-leech were often to be met with in the more swampy and tangled tracks of the woodland. But we, who were colonial-born, learn a disregard of the creeping things that surround us, which astonishes a new arrival from Europe, and I had never in my life known what it was to feel real fear of beast or reptile.

I watched my father's retiring figure until it disappeared amid the feathery bamboos that lined the path, and then, turning my back on the white house with its green verandahs, walked on, under the shadow of the great forest trees, till I reached the embankment of the Minary Tank. Half-an-hour's walking brought me to within sight of a ruinous summer-house, built on the edge of the lake by some former Dutch proprietor, and yet surmounted by a large bull of gilded pith, perched on a pole. Near this summer-house it was my custom to meet Oswald. And it would be but very seldom that we were to meet, henceforth, since, poor fellow, he was to sail by the Lord Dalhousie, expected at Point de Galle on the 31st of the month.

On my way I paused now and then, familiar as was the prospect, to gaze upon the wide expanse of the lake, the silvery waters of which rolled away so grandly that it was hard to conceive that what seemed almost entitled to take rank as an inland sea could be actually the work of human hands. Flocks of wild fowl, with white wings and shrill scream, hovered above the swarm of gorgeously-tinted fish that swam around the huge weed-beds, while here and there among the red lotus blossoms appeared what might have been easily mistaken for a floating log, but which I knew to be an alligator, drowsily basking in the glad sunshine.

The heavy heat seemed to render exertion, even for the natives, difficult, for I saw no fisher, as usual, paddling his light canoe or preparing his tough nets of cocoanut fiber; and the very Cingalese woodcutters had deserted their work, leaving behind them a great heap of hewn timber, in front of which, imbedded in the spongy wood of a cypress, four or five short, bright axes remained sticking. Some few paces from this heap was the ruinous summer-house, and beyond it there towered aloft the giant talipot tree, with its vast serrated leaves, that serve the Cingalese for sail and thatch and screen, beneath which Oswald and I were accustomed to meet.

To my surprise, and perhaps chagrin, I did not at first see him for whom I looked, and began to fear that he had forgotten to keep his wonted tryst; but on drawing nearer, I beheld a sight that for the moment froze my very veins with horror, and caused the cry of anguish that rose to my lips to die away. Oswald, lying on the turf among the roots of the gigantic palm tree, seemed to be asleep, overcome, probably, by the unusual heat, while around him was loosely coiled something that resembled a stout rope, curiously streaked with black, and orange, and white—something that caused the withered leaves and crisp grass to rustle, as it stirred, writhing.

I had never seen a living tic palunga, but I knew at the first glance that the snake before my eyes was no other than a large specimen of that dreaded reptile, which in Ceylon takes the position that in Continental India belongs to the cobra, for the bite of which there is no known remedy. Twice within the last three years, laborers on my father's plantation had been brought in, dying, from the venom of the tic palunga, but in each instance the skill of the native snake-charmers had led to the capture of the reptile, and it was not believed that any of this species, rare as well as dangerous, had been left alive in our immediate neighborhood. This, however, was unquestionably a tic palunga, many feet long, and it had wrapped its coils, as though in hideous sport, around Oswald's limbs as he lay there, unconscious.

The great flat head of the enormous snake rested on the ground, among the flowers and ferns. I could see its eyes, bright as jewels, fixed upon me. It showed for the moment, however, no particular sign of anger or of distrust, but contented itself with quietly contemplating the intruder upon its haunts. As I stood, gazing on my sleeping lover and the monstrous creature that lay, wakeful but quiescent, so near to him, all the stories of snakes that I had ever heard or read came crowding in upon my quickened memory. I knew that the tic palunga, in common with most of the venomous varieties of its race, seldom employed its poison-fangs unless when attacked or annoyed; but I also knew that the hardiest elephant-hunter of the forests would sooner confront the charge of a herd of incensed tuskers, than face the lance-like dart and rancorous bite of this dread denizen of the jungle.

The tic palunga, unlike the boa and the python, rarely, if ever, preys upon the larger animals, such as deer or cattle, confining its diet, for the most part, to birds, and frogs, and lizards. Some caprice, most likely, had caused it to twine a part of its supple convolutions around Oswald as he lay, and, so long as he remained asleep and motionless, there was little probability that the serpent would harm him. My great fear was lest he should awake, and in awaking, by some hasty movement, arouse the ire of the resistless foe. Oswald was brave and strong, but it was a mockery to speak of strength or courage when so terrible an antagonist was in question.

Suddenly, as if it had been a whisper from heaven, there came into my mind a thought that promised hope, even in that dire extremity of need. I had often seen harmless snakes kept tame in colonial households, and was aware of their habits, and of their love for certain kinds of food, and, above all, for milk. Could I but bring to that spot a supply of milk, and place it, before Oswald should awake, temptingly near to the tic palunga, all might yet be well. And yet to desert him—poor fellow—in such terrible company, seemed cruel; yet it was for his sake, and I felt that I must go. Very slowly, then, lest my footsteps should disturb the sleeper or irritate the huge reptile that kept watch beside him, I stole away, and, when at a safe distance, flew, rather than ran, along the forest path.

The nearest European dwelling was Oswald's own home. There were Cingalese huts nearer, no doubt, where dwelt some of Mr. Forster's hired men, but I should not be able to procure what I sought, save from the planter's house. At another time I should not have willingly trespassed on the domains of Oswald's father; but this was no occasion for scruple or punctilio. Life and death, as I knew, depended on my speed.

There, at length, rose up before me the milk-thorn hedge, the impenetrable thorns of which are often useful in keeping out leopard and jackal, which surrounded the planter's homestead, and, passing through an open gate, I entered the compound. The first servant that I met, and who lifted his hand to his snow-white turban with a polite "Salaam!" and a smile that showed the white teeth between his bearded lips, was a man whom I knew, a Mahratta groom, who had formerly been in my father's service, and whose child I had nursed through an attack of the Ceylon fever.

"Lall Singh!" I gasped out, panting for breath, "do me a kindness for the sake of old bread and salt. Get me some fresh milk quickly, for the love of God, but ask no questions—bhai!"

Something in my tone impressed the Mahratta, for without a word he hurried off and soon returned, bearing a jar of milk and a drinking vessel, or lota, which would contain something less than a pint, and which, at a sign from me, he filled with milk. This very act, slight as it may seem, was no small compliment, for it was, doubtless, his own drinking-cup that Lall Singh was giving me, and should any lip not belonging to one of pure Hindu descent touch its burnished rim, it would hereafter be unfit for use. However, I scarcely waited to utter a word of thanks, but snatched up the brass lota and darted out.

It may be thought singular that I had not given the alarm to the household at Mr. Forster's plantation; but I had resolved that I would not, if I could do my errand unquestioned, create a turmoil which might bring about the very evil against which I was striving. Oswald's mother and sisters loved him, but their nerves were not of the strongest, and their outcries, had they heard the news, would have had the effect of summoning a score of servants and coolies, and to seal Oswald's fate by sending a posse of volunteers to the place where he lay at the snake's mercy.

As if on winged feet, yet carrying the precious draught of milk with jealous care I hurried back to the spot where, at the foot of the huge talipot tree, lay Oswald, yet asleep. The snake, however, as though uneasy, was beginning to stir. Its monstrous head wagged slowly from side to side among the white wild flowers, and its slender tongue protruded from between its grim jaws. But I was in time, and, as I poured the milk, or rather a portion of it, on the ground, so that a long trail should lead to the spot where I set down the brass drinking-cup, with what of its contents remained, I was careful to avoid, by any abrupt gesture, incensing the tic palunga.

Then came a minute or two of agonized expectancy, and then, to my great joy, I saw the reptile slowly uncoil himself, evidently making for the milk. First one wreath and then another of the snake's limber was untwined, and the great serpent, brushing through the forest grass and flowerets, stooped its broad head to drink. As I saw Oswald thus freed, and the unsuspected foe draw farther and farther away from the place where he reposed, I felt the strength which had hitherto supported me become weakness. My nerves being no longer braced by the sense of Oswald's mortal peril, the instinctive terror and disgust which I had from childhood felt for the serpent tribe overpowered me, and I grew giddy and weak, and could scarcely stand and scarcely see.

What was this before my dim eyes? The well-known porch of the Dutch colonist's summer-house, overgrown by trailing creepers, and all but choked by tall weeds. Mechanically I entered, and sinking down on a moldering wooden seat, once decked with silken cushions and gold leaf, I gradually regained the physical strength which had deserted me, and with it the capacity for thought. It is curious how, in such cases of extreme exhaustion, the benumbed mind slowly resumes some train of abandoned thought, and thus it was with me. By degrees I remembered Oswald's danger, my own efforts to save him, and—

What was that rustling among the stems, and leaves, and buds of the luxurious plants that festooned the shattered windows of the summer-house, in all the rank profusion of their tropical growth? Surely—surely not the rippling, undulating motion with which a huge snake drags himself through the brake and jungle grass! Yes; my fears were but too true, for there in the open window space—the broken trellis-work of which had been replaced by wild vines and dangling orchids—appeared, at a height of six or seven feet above the ground, the hideous head of the serpent that had lately menaced Oswald, and now confronted me.

And then it flashed upon me that the deserted kiosk was probably the reptile's actual home, and that, as though in the very irony of terror, I had ventured to intrude into the lair of the terrible creature, from the sight of which I had—once that Oswald's safety seemed assured—reeled dizzily away. I had often heard of the strange taste which snakes evince for an abandoned human dwelling, and how frequently they haunt the outbuildings of Europeans' abodes and the huts of the natives; and yet here had I rashly strayed into the lurking place of the deadly guardian of the Ceylon jungle.

That the snake was perturbed there could be no doubt. It curved its graceful neck like that of a swan, and hissed slightly, while its broad jaws were partly opened. I fancied that I could see the curved poison-fangs—more to be dreaded than ever was Malay creese or Moorish dagger—while the jewel-bright eyes glistened ominously. One wild, piercing shriek I could not repress; and then the futility of resistance or of flight forced itself upon me, and I stood, motionless as a marble statue of embodied fear, gazing at the emeraldine eyes, fixed with so pitiless a stare on mine. The subtle, suffocating odor which large serpents exhale, when angry, reached me; but already I gave myself up for lost, and waited passive till the tic palunga should make his fatal dart.

The sibilant noise from the snake's half-shut jaws had grown louder, and the bright, baleful eyes more menacing, while the grim head towered high aloft, ready to strike—when, suddenly, something bright flashed through the flowering vines of the creeping plant, and the snake's hideous head and lithe body disappeared, as if by magic. Then followed the sounds of a fierce struggle, repeated blows, trampling feet, and snapping boughs, and the accents of human voices; and then Oswald came leaping through the doorway, clasped me in his arms, and bore me out into the broad light of day, where lay—writhing yet—the carcase of the dead snake, hewn through by the sharp-cutting ax which Oswald still grasped in his right hand.

"Shabash!" exclaimed Lall Singh, whose swarthy face gleamed with delight, as he spurned the body of the vanquished reptile. "It was well that first blow went home, or it would have fared but badly with the young sahib when this accursed slayer of men turned on him. Wah! I'd sooner have faced a tiger."

To Lall Singh I was, indeed, in no slight degree indebted for my safety. Convinced, from the agitation of my manner, that something was wrong, he had followed me, and was in the act of arousing Oswald from his slumber, when the piercing shriek which fear had wrung from me re-echoed through the woods, and called attention to the imminence of the peril. Then Oswald had snatched up one of the keen, short axes which the native wood-cutters had left sticking in a tree-trunk, and had been fortunate enough to disable the snake at the first blow.

My story is now told, and I have only to add that I was overwhelmed with praises and caresses by the Forster family—hitherto so cold—and that, on the following day, Mr. Forster himself rode over to my father's house to entreat Mr. Travers, from whom he had of late been estranged, to accept his renewed friendship, and to ask for my hand on behalf of his son. Oswald lost his passage on board the homeward-bound steamer that was to touch at Point de Galle; and when he did visit Europe he took with him Ellen Travers as his wife.

We have long been happily settled—far from tropic jungles and their dangerous inhabitants—but never have either my husband or myself forgotten those few instants of bitter anguish and alarm beside the Tank of Minary.

The Bonanza Kings of California.

Mr. James C. Flood, of the firm of Flood & O'Brien, is now on a visit to this city and the Centennial, after years of absence from here, his former residence and home. His partner, Mr. William O'Brien, has not yet arrived, but is expected during the month.

Flood, O'Brien, Fair and Mackey are the principal owners and trustees of the "Consolidated Virginia" and "California" mines, in the "Comstock Lode," near Virginia City, Nev. These mines have yielded in gold and silver each over $3,000,000 per month for many months past, and are believed to be the richest gold and silver mines in the world. The aggregate wealth of Flood, O'Brien, Fair and Mackey is supposed to be $100,000,000. A few years ago each of these gentlemen were comparatively poor. Fortune has indeed showered her richest blessings upon them, and although each has become enormously wealthy, yet each has maintained "the even tenor of his way," putting on no aristocratic airs or "shoddy" habits, and the firm have the entire confidence of everybody on the Pacific coast. Mackey is the miner, managing and working the mines; Fair is the financier and business manager in Virginia City and at the mines, and Flood & O'Brien are the business men and financiers, conducting their great operations at the Bank of Nevada (which the firm own), in San Francisco, probably the most substantial and elegant banking house in America.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

A New Explosive.

A substitute for gunpowder has been invented in England, in the shape of paper impregnated with a chemical combination of chlorate of potash, nitrate of potash, prussiate of potash and chromate of potash, coupled with a little powdered charcoal and tinder. The paper is rolled around these latter in the desired sizes for cartridges. The advantages offered are that no danger of explosion exists except from actual contact with fire; the interior of the arm is not soiled; less smoke and less rebound are made than with gunpowder, and less damage takes place from humidity. Very satisfactory trials have been made of the new material.

The least pretentious and seemingly the least ambitious contestant in the premium examination in Rome this year was the recipient of the special gold medal, which has been taken by only one other student since the scholastic days of Cardinal Cullen. In order to get this prize a student must hold the first place in each of five classes. Each class numbers several hundred, all of whom have passed severe initiatory examinations. A young man from the mountains of Kerry, who up to his tenth year had only spoken his vernacular Irish, was the recipient of this most infrequent honor.

FALL TRADE IN DRY GOODS.

The Outlook of the Coming Season for the Man who Handle the Manufactured Fabrics of the World—Cheaper Prices and Better Prospects.

[From the New York Sun.]

Only a vague impression of the actual state of the dry goods market can be gained by conversations with our leading wholesale dry goods men this fall. Most of them seem to be feverishly over-anxious to give a favorable report. Some of them assert, in a tone that implies the expectancy of contradiction, that "the market is healthy;" "we have had a fine opening of trade;" "we have sold more goods this fall than any season for three years past;" or, "we think that we reached bottom last spring, and now trade has begun to take an upward tendency that we believe will be lasting." As a set-off to the sanguine men, the bulls of the dry goods trade, there are many sound, old importers and large dealers in home manufactured dry goods, men who have been known in the mercantile world of New York for years as "safe men," who will not hazard an opinion, or make any particular or general statement as to the conditions of the market. Those who converse at all agree, however, on one point, "dry goods are much cheaper."

To come down to particular lines of goods. In heavy woolens for men's wear the market is improving. There was some room for this, as every line of these goods has been very low. In June the market was lower than it has ever been before in New York. The large auction sales which took place in June and since have had a tendency to fix prices. The goods sold at those auctions commanded fair rates, and the bids were active. Among the buyers there was a spirit of competition to get the goods at the prices at which they were sold. The sacrifice was not so great as the holders anticipated before the sales took place; consequently the market has been healthier since, in every sense of the word. The bulk of the importations this fall has been in broken checks and plaids, mixtures, and narrow hair lines. In fancy cassimeres there has been a judicious importation in both low and high-priced goods. The market is steady, the demand fair.

Dress goods for ladies' wear, both all wool and silk and wool, though reduced in price, are in steady demand. For black cashmeres of medium quality the demand is enormous, and, in fact, almost unlimited. This is a certain evidence of the disposition to economize among all classes. Fine black mohairs and brilliantines sell in moderate quantities, but for the lower grades of alpacas there is little or no demand, the cashmeres having almost taken their place. The importations and home productions of fine dress fabrics have not been in excess. The stocks have been comparatively light, and for the finest goods there has been a demand quite equal to the supply up to date.

The average prices of dry goods, hosieries and gloves, disposed of by peremptory auction sales in large lots during the past week, were below the ordinary rates. Extra fine wool overcoatings were knocked off at $3.12½, $3.20 and $3.70 a yard. Newest styles of West of England suitings brought $3.50, while others of the same quality but older pattern fell to $3, $2.55 and $2.05 a yard. The highest price reached was for a small lot of fancy worsted cassimeres, sold without allowance for manufacturers' imperfections, at $3.95 and $4.00 a yard. Superior gros grain silks went for $1.35, $1.65 and $1.90 a yard. Lyons, all silk, faille, 60 cents a yard. Crefeld black velvets, heavy, at $1.25, $1.32, $2.12½ and $2.37½, and long black ostrich plumes, single, at $2.12½ and $2.37½ apiece. At one sale a catalogue of 288 lots of kid gloves in a variety of shades and colors went off at from $2.87½ per dozen to $9.00 per dozen. At another sale a fine lot of gros grain silks found ready sale at prices varying from $1.47½ to $1.80 a yard.

In ready-made-suit departments there is a limited degree of activity. Prices are low. Many handsome long beaver cloth paletots are sold from $13.00 to $20.00 a piece, and these, too, trimmed with black cony fur. Economy and caution are the order of the day everywhere. Yet the sanguine dry goods men assert that the market is firm, active and steady.

The Returning Tide.

If the United States takes from us the largest number of emigrants, they also give back to us the most considerable immigration. In the last three years nearly a quarter of a million of persons have come back to this country from the States.

The commercial crisis and depression of business in the United States may have had much to do with this observed result, which it would be rash to consider as other than a temporary modification of the main tendencies of population changes; but it justifies the observation that either the number of emigrants who have gone to the United States for permanent settlement has diminished recently, or "their place has been taken by emigrants of an older date or native-born Americans coming to this country." It is significant enough that last year the inward current almost precisely equalled the outward in volume. More than 81,000 persons left our shores for the United States, and more than 80,000 returned from the United States to the British Isles.—London Times.

Indian Summer.

This halcyon period of our autumn will always in some way be associated with the Indian. It is red and yellow and dusky like him. The smoke of his camp-fire seems again in the air. The memory of him pervades the woods. His plumes and moccasins and blanket of skins form just the costume the season demands. It was doubtless his chosen period. The gods smiled upon him then if ever. The time of the chase, the season of the buck and the doe, and of the ripening of all forest fruits; the time when all men are incipient hunters, when the first frosts have given pungency to the air, when to be abroad on the hills or in the woods is a delight that both old and young feel—if the red aborigine ever had his summer of fullness and contentment, it must have been at this season, and it fitly bears his name.

THE NIGHT-WIND.

BY THOMAS BAILY ALDRICH.

At a lonely inn among the pines
I sit alone in the fire-light's glow,
Losing myself in the backlog's mines,
And hearing the night-wind come and go

And now it threatens, and now it grieves,
Pleads at the lintel, or slams a blind;
Now it prowls, sullen, about the eaves,
This protean, bitter autumn wind.

Fiercely it sweeps on the doorside yew,
As a vulture drops upon its prey,
And now in the throat of the sooty flue
I hear it howl, like a beast at bay.

Now it flies shrieking across the downs,
And now, like a ghost, it whispers me
Of people starving to death in towns,
And of wrecks a thousand leagues at sea

Pith and Point.

A WISEACRE—Your wisdom tooth.

PERSONS of extended views—Panorama painters.

IN classic Italy they don't speak of "square meals"—they call them "serious repasts."

A RECENT marriage notice ends with the singular expression, probably added by a waggish friend: "May their future troubles be little ones."

A VERMONT youth at his mother's funeral said to the neighbors: "Me and my father are obliged to you all, and hope soon to be able to do as much for you."

"WHAT time is it," asked one passenger of another in a Detroit depot the other day. "Ten minutes to wait," was the answer, as the man looked up at the time-table.

A LITTLE 5 year-old, of Dorchester, somewhat surprised his mother a few days since with the remark: "God is everywhere, he is all over me, and when you spank me you spank God!"

IT is estimated that the famous Brazilian diamond wedding will be totally eclipsed on the occasion of the coming nuptials of a Philadelphia hackman and a St. Louis ice-dealer's daughter.

"GOOD for the crops," said a Salem man, looking out of the car window into the rain. "Yes," answered a Cape Anner, "our granite never looked more promising than it does this morning."

SUPPOSE.

Suppose a tree's long-reaching arm
Should 'gainst a window dash,
In one of nature's breezy whims,
And knock it all to smash;
Amid the clatter and dismay,
What, think you, would the fragments say?
Angels and ministers of grace defend us?
O, not at all. They'd cry tree-mend-us!

"ALPHONSO, dear, what is the difference between our Thanksgiving and those revolted Turkish provinces?" "Really, Clementina, I can't say. What is it?" "Why, you see, here we have turkey in Christians; there they have Christians in Turkey."

"WHY," asked a pensive-looking stranger, contemplating the Division-street improvement, of a brisk young Burlington man, "why do they change the grade?" "Because," replied the brisk y. m. of B., "the Council agrade to the change."—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

TWO FRENCH ladies were looking at the pictures in the Paris Salon. "So I hear," said one, "a celebrated painter has finished a picture for you." "Yes, he has graciously consented to paint the portrait of my husband for my drawing-room." "Indeed!" said the first speaker. "Well, for a room like that I think I should have chosen a gayer subject."

A LABORER of Hibernian extraction as not long since lamenting the hard mes, and drawing for a contrast a right picture of his home in the old ountry. "Ah," said he finally, "av I was only back agin in me father's pal-lis." A jolly fellow-workman squinted his eye and replied: "Shure, an' av ye were there ye moight sthan' on the groun' an' reach yer han' down the chimbley an' open the door av it."

"WHAT is my bill?" anxiously asked a man who had stayed over night at a Philadelphia hotel lately. "Your bill?" was the calm reply; "how much money have you along?" "Twenty-nine dollars," gasped the innocent and retiring guest. "Well, that's it—that's your bill," remarked the considerate proprietor. And as the Centennial visitor started out on foot for his home in Indiana, he muttered thoughtfully to himself: "So this is the way that 'tramps' are made."

HAVING plenty of apples and pears, but having no dog, a resident of Cass avenue stuffed an old suit of clothes and stood the effigy up in his back yard to scare the wicked boys away. The plan seemed to be perfection for a while, but yesterday morning the "man" was discovered suspended to the limb of a tree by a rope tied to his heels. The coat tails were cut off, the mouth filled with weeds, and the eyes and ears with mud, and the following note was pinned to the body: "This 'ere feller has got the kolic afful bad." The big bell pears and the rosy red apples had been thinned out until it looked like an off-year for crops, and the boys were far away.—Free Press.

Thad Stevens as a Lawyer.

A correspondent of the Baltimore Gazette, writing from Lancaster, Penn., relates the following anecdote of Thaddeus Stevens: "Many years ago, when Thaddeus Stevens was practicing law in Lancaster, he was employed to defend two bank officers who had been indicted for conspiracy, they having used the funds of the bank in speculation. All the legal talent of Philadelphia and surrounding counties had been engaged to assist in the prosecution. When the trial was opened Mr. Stevens rose, and, addressing the court, said: 'If it please Your Honors, presuming there are different degrees of guilt attached to the prisoners, my clients, I move they be tried separately.' The Judge consulted for a few moments with his associates, who consenting, the motion was granted and so recorded. Waiting some time for Mr. Stevens to go on, the Judge at last becoming impatient, said impetuously: 'Proceed, Mr. Stevens, proceed. We are waiting for you, sir.' Stevens rose deliberately, and, looking around the court-room for a moment, said: 'Did Your Honors ever hear of one man bein' tried for conspiracy?' Then waving his hand to his clients, he said: 'You can go home; you can go home.' And they did go home. The jury were discharged and the court adjourned. And for this piece of legal strategy Thad Stevens received $5,000."

BIG INDIAN TALK.

Council Between the Commissioners and Red Cloud's People.

[Letter from Red Cloud Agency.]

Among the prominent Indians present were Red Cloud, Little Wound, Swift Bear, Red Leaf, Black Coal, White Tail, Sitting Bull, Pretty Crow, Eagle Dress, Young-Man-Afraid, and Quick Bear. Many officers from Camp Robinson attended the council, which lasted two hours. Red Cloud made the first speech. He said that he and his people were willing to give up the Black Hills country. Also to have his young men take a journey to see the country spoken of by the Commission in the Indian Territory, and if they report that it is a good country his people will so consider it. If they report it bad, they will consider it "bad, quick."

Bear said that when the young men got back from that country the Indians would want to go to Washington with their agents, chiefs, and interpreters, and have a talk with the Great Father before giving this country up.

Sitting Bull said: "I have got a judgment against the agent. If he is sure every ten days, promptly, it is all right; but if he don't, I will go north."

Young-Man-Afraid said: "My father shook hands with the Great Father on the Platte river, and was told that this country belonged to the Dakotas. I was brought up in this country to be a chief. The soldiers have no concern in this country since I have been here, and have tried to do right. I wish to tell you plainly that I have been ashamed ever since the soldiers came here and sat down. I wish you, my friends, who have brains and hearts, to tell my Great Father what my opinion is, and what I have said. I agree to the young men going on the journey, but we are going to ask of the Great Father a great many things. We expect to have food and blankets as long as we live. The Great Father has not lived up to his promises in the past."

American Horse said: "The soldiers had no business here. If they wish to arrest anybody, the country is wide; let them go and arrest them. There are a great many bad men in the north; let the soldiers go and arrest them." [Laughter on the part of the Indians.]

Here Red Cloud took Dr. Daniels, Maj. Howard and Joseph Bennett, set them among the Indian chiefs, and said he wanted them to do his business for him, and go to the southern country with his young men. He also wanted P. C. Boucher, Antoine Janis, Bill Sowland, Hank Clifford, Todd, Randall, Frank Solway and Nelse Moran to go as interpreters.

Red Dog said that the Indians were not willing to sign any paper until the young men got back from the southern country, and they had a chance to go to Washington and talk face to face with the Great Father.

Black Coal, the Chief of the Arapahoes, said that his people had an equal right with the Sioux to the Black Hills country, and they would want their share of the money received for them. He was willing to go to look at the southern country.

Bishop Whipple replied to the Indians that the Great Father required them to sign a paper binding themselves to go to the Missouri river if they did not go to the Indian Territory; else they would get no more rations. He urged them to consent at once to the proposition, and go to the Indian Territory upon the return of the young men.

Young-Man-Afraid said: "This is the country where I was born. I have never made any man's heart feel bad. I have thought the Great Spirit intended I should live here and raise my children here. I wished that the Great Father should take care of me, and I should live here with my children. These white people who have married among us give notice that it will take me a long time to learn to labor, and I expect the President will feed me for a hundred years—perhaps a great deal longer. The promises that have been made by the Great Father heretofore have not been carried out; therefore, I have been unwilling to go to see him, though I have been often invited. Dr. Daniels will remember bringing back from Washington the word that here was where we were to raise our children. I have appointed to live here; therefore, I have never traveled about to see other countries. You never heard of me behaving badly." With this he took the pen in his hand, and as he made his mark said: "That a is to signify that the Great Father has fed and clothed me a hundred years, and given me wagons and cattle."

Red Dog said: "I want the Great Father to make haste and send me that Man-Painting (Maj. Howard) for Agent; also Bennett and Daniels to assist me."

Little Wound: "I told you before that I must have my annuities within two months, and provisions to last us until spring."

American Horse said: "In regard to this arrangement about the Black Hills, it is to last as long as we last."

Man-Afraid-of-the-Bear took hold of the pen, saying: "The others have said enough," and signed and returned to his seat.

Three Bears inquired for how many years they would stay. He thought it should be for five generations.

Fire-Thunderer came up holding his blanket over his eyes and signed blindfolded, returning to his place in silence.

Big-Fool, who has been engaged in agriculture several years, said: "I am a farmer. I wanted a hundred wagons, but have never seen them yet. I am the man that is going down to see that country."

Crow, with a good voice, refused to sign the treaty, and walked away with quite a show of indignation, but all the others who had been solicited and were present, affixed their cross to the paper, a copy of which was given to them at their request.

A Discreet Juror.

In one of our Western counties, not long since, a man was tried and found guilty of stealing a pig. In writing out the verdict the foreman wrote, "Wee fine the prisner knot gilty." One of the jury, who had seen the inside of a school-house, wanted some slight change made in the spelling of the verdict, but the foreman whispered, "I know that spelling is sorter shaky, but you have to pander to the Sheriff and the Judge and District Clerk, for that's the way they all spell. If I was to spell a verdict right, and they were to find it out, the whole jury would be indicted next term of the court, and we wouldn't even get our jury fee for this day's work. You see they have got the drop on us. Let us not exasperate them as long as they are in power."

The Truth About Galileo.

A correspondent of the New York Evening Post, writing from Rome, Italy, contributes to that paper some exceedingly interesting facts touching the trials of Galileo before the Holy Office of the Inquisition in 1616 and 1633. The information is derived from the original records of the two trials, which are now published for the first time by Prof. Domenico Berti. The history of the records themselves is of more than ordinary interest. During the French occupation of Rome they were carried to Paris, and remained there forty years. Many learned men were allowed to read them, and Napoleon I. at one time ordered their publication, but for some reason the order was not complied with. The Vatican authorities made several requests for their return, but without success, until Louis Philippe ascended the throne, when Pius IX. made an earnest solicitation for them. The request was finally granted. The Pope kept them for a long time in his possession, and they were finally consigned to the secret archives of the nation, where they still remain. Their publication gives the world the first authentic account of these celebrated trials, and, it may be added, does not relieve the church from the absurd and superstitious fear of science which it manifested in those early days.

The story which these records tells is substantially this: The great astronomer came to Rome in 1610 after the publication of his book, the "Nunzio Sidereo," expecting that the blessing of the church would cheer him on in his scientific studies, and little dreaming of the sort of welcome that was awaiting him. He brought his telescope, which he had recently discovered, with him, exhibited it, explained it, and showed the learned societies the satellites of Jupiter with it. Galileo and his telescope were soon the sensation of Rome, and of course attracted the attention of the Inquisitors, who immediately decided that his doctrines contradicted the scriptures. His studies were stopped, and his writings were confiscated, and from that time to the end of his life, the bigots of the Inquisition followed him with persistent persecution. He repaired to Florence, resumed his studies, wrote letters explaining his theory of the movement of the earth, and even answered the denunciatory sermons of the monks. Their only reply was to drag him before the Inquisition for trial in 1616. His sentence was the imperious command of Cardinal Bellarming: "You will philosophize no more; you will reason no more on the movement of the earth, and the constitution of the world." Galileo promised to be silent, and kept the promise through seventeen long years of mental torture. Unable to restrain himself longer, he began again to publish the results of his studies, only to find the bigots upon his track again, with Pope Urban VIII., of the Barberini family, at their head. He was dragged before the Inquisition the second time for trial, at the age of 70, and a decree for the execution of torture was entered. Such is the brief but authentic history of those dark days of ignorance, when timid churchmen feared that religion would be imperiled and the authority of the scriptures overthrown by the declaration that the world moved—a declaration made centuries ago—and yet religion survives and the scriptures remain.—Chicago Tribune.

Ravages of the Yellow Fever at Savannah, Ga.

[From the Jacksonville (Fla.) Union.]

The following is an extract from a letter received by a physician of this city in reply to one asking for a truthful statement of affairs in Savannah, and was written by a gentleman well known here as a candid and truthful man, who was formerly a resident of this city:

"I was in Savannah night before last and yesterday, and I cannot describe the gloom that has settled over the fated 'Forest City.' Following each other in grim silence, one can stand on almost any corner and see from two to five or six hearses, with their sad load, on their way to their last resting-place. The real facts are very much withheld fr. the News. From what I can learn on the streets, and of the Benevolent Society, there are on an average now about 150 new cases daily, and from thirty to forty deaths—rapidly on the increase—as you will see by the papers. It is estimated up to yesterday there were 1,200 cases under the doctors' hands. A number of our personal acquaintances are either dead or sick with it. You can walk the streets for hours in the daytime and not see a lady or child, only a few poor 'can't-get-aways,' and plenty of colored people who are too poor to leave.

"The general opinion is that Savannah is ruined, and will recover but slowly—if at all. When I left the city last night I could not help a pang of sorrow at the rich harvest that death was reaping. There is a great deal of suffering in the city, both among the poor and also among clerks who are being discharged on account of 'no business.'"

Massachusetts Law.

A Bostonian went in his buggy on Sunday from Boston to Charlestown. Returning, a train on the Boston and Maine railroad ran over him and broke some of his bones. He sued the Boston and Maine Company for damages, but failed to recover anything, as, under the circumstances, the law of Massachusetts was against him. The court decided that if it could be proved that this Bostonian's buggy ride was "a work of necessity and mercy," he might recover some cash from the railroad company for the repair of his fractured bones; but that if he took a ride for pleasure on the Lord's Day he went at his own risk, and could recover nothing. It was in vain that he showed that his errand to Charlestown was for the purpose of examining a house with a view to seeing if it would suit him for a residence. The court decided that he need not have gone to make such an examination on Sunday, and he was non-suited.

AMERICAN MEATS IN SCOTLAND.

The Exportation of Cattle—A Trade of Growing Dimensions—The Dead Meat Supply.

The Pall Mall Gazette says: "The importation of American cattle to Glasgow appears to be a trade of growing dimensions. Some interesting information on the subject is given in the Dundee Advertiser, from which it appears that the experiment was first made in 1873, and on the 11th of August of that year six cattle arrived at Glasgow from America. During four succeeding weeks twenty-two cattle were brought, and the number gradually increased till it reached fifty per week in October. The shipments of cattle then ceased until last year, when in June 100 to 150 were landed weekly. This rate of importation was continued weekly until October. Nothing farther was done in 1875, but arrangements were made for the more vigorous prosecution of the trade this year. Accordingly, the shipping of cattle was recommenced in July, and since then from 100 to 250 head have reached Glasgow every week, exclusive of deliveries in London and Liverpool. Last week 154 cattle were sold in Glasgow, and brought on an average £33 each. Never, it is stated, did a lot reach so much on an average. Dead meat is also imported in large quantities. The first sale was held on the 5th of June, when 100 carcasses of beef and seventy-two of mutton were disposed of. Since then about 150 carcasses on the average have been sold weekly. Last week 210 carcases were sold, and on Wednesday evening there might have been seen passing through the streets of Glasgow to the cattle market the uncommon procession of thirty-three lorries, each laden with three tons of butchers' meat. The freight paid for carriage to Glasgow, Liverpool, and London last week amounted to £1,900. Altogether, since the importation began, 1,250,000 pounds of dead meat have been sold in Glasgow market; and of these 365, dead and alive, were imported from America. Cattle killed on Thursday in New York are sold that day fortnight in Glasgow. In the course of a month or so the importation of live cattle will cease for the winter, but arrangements are being made for increasing the dead meat supply, and it is expected to be not less all the winter than 200 carcasses a week."

ROOFS.

Why not make your Roofs last a lifetime, and save the expense of a new roof every ten or fifteen years. It can be done; if you use Slate Paint, it will not only resist the effects of water and wind, but shield you from Fire.

OLD ROOFS.

Protect your Buildings by using Slate Paint, which neither cracks in winter nor runs in summer. Old shingle roofs can be painted looking much better, and lasting longer than new shingles without the paint, for one-fourth the cost of re-shingling. On decayed shingles it fills up the holes and pores, and gives a new substantial roof, that lasts for years. Curled or warped shingles it brings to their places and keeps them there. This paint requires no heating, is applied with a brush, and very ornamental. It is chocolate color, when first applied, but changes to a uniform slate color, and is to all intents and purposes slate.

ON TIN OR IRON ROOFS

the red color is the best paint in the world for durability. It has a heavy body, is easily applied, expands by heat, contracts by cold, dries slow and never cracks nor scales. One coat equals 4 of any other.

FIRE-PROOF NEW ROOFS.

Mills, foundries, factories and dwellings a specialty. Materials complete for a new steep or flat Roof of Rubber Roofing, cost but about half the price of re-shingling. For private houses, barns, and buildings of all descriptions, it is far superior to any other roofing in the world for convenience in laying, and combines the ornamental appearance, durability, and fire-proof qualities of tin, at one-third the cost. No Tar or Gravel Used.

"How to save re-shingling—stop leaks effectually and cheaply in roofs of all kinds"—a 100 page book free. Write to-day.

TO MAKE MONEY DURING THE HARD TIMES, SECURE AN AGENCY FOR THE CELEBRATED Robbins Family Washer.

This machine has been ON TRIAL for the past six months in every State and Territory in the Union, and the almost unanimous verdict is:

"Your Washer has proved a complete success."

Some of the reasons why this popular verdict has been reached may be found in these facts:

The Robbins Washer is an entirely NEW MACHINE. It is constructed upon a NEW PRINCIPLE—that of forcing water by downward pressure through the fabric. The dirt or discoloration is removed by water force; there is no rubbing or friction about it. This principle is the only one that has ever been successfully applied to the cleansing of fabrics by machinery. All others have failed in one or more essential points. The Robbins Washer will cleanse perfectly without rubbing all kinds of wearing apparel, table or bed linen. It will not injure the most delicate fabric. It is the greatest bleacher extant, and for this purpose alone is worth ten times the price of the machine. It is simple, self-operating, never gets out of order, and will last a lifetime. It saves time, it saves labor, it saves material.

By purchasing a ROBBINS WASHER you can count the hard drudgery of the washboard among the things of the past.

Therefore, we confidently say to every housekeeper in the land, you want a ROBBINS WASHER. You cannot afford to be without one. It will pay to buy one.

The Retail Price is only $3.50.

Sample to those desiring agencies, $3.00.

The philosophy of the Washer is fully explained in the following circular, which is full of valuable information to housekeepers. We bespeak for it a careful perusal:

In bringing the Robbins Washer before the public it becomes necessary to take into brief consideration the Art of Cleansing Fabrics,

which, although so common, is yet imperfectly understood. Having had a life-long experience in the laundry business—in connection with first-class hotels, public laundries, asylums, hospitals, etc.—we know whereof we speak. The numerous devices of friction rollers, pounders, squeezers, dashers, agitators, steam wash-boilers, etc., have all done very well, so far as it was possible for such principles and devices to do. But they have all failed in one or more of the three essential points, viz.: The saving of labor, the wear and tear of clothes, or in perfectly extracting the dirt or discoloration—all of which are accomplished by the ROBBINS LITTLE WASHER.

What is it that Removes the Dirt?

You may ask all washerwomen and housekeepers, and your answer from nine out of ten will be: "Plenty of elbow grease," or, in other words, plenty of hard, laborious rubbing on the washboard. And such is the case, for you first have to rub soap upon the cloth, then you have to rub it in, to make the dirt soluble. But does that remove it? No; to do that you must first dip it in the water, and then rub it again to force water through the fabric. That is what removes dirt, after being softened by the chemical action of the soap upon it.

The way in which this could be the most economically accomplished is what we have so long and patiently sought after, and at last a principle has been developed in the LITTLE WASHER that embodies all the above-named points.

All the aforesaid mechanical devices have many objectionable features. It is harder work to operate them than to use the common washboard. They are constantly getting out of order, and, at the best, wear out in a short time. They wear out clothes ten times faster than the rubbing-board, because the friction is a hundred per cent. greater than can possibly be applied to that article. They take the entire time of a person during the whole wash, and, last of all, they will not perfectly remove streaks from the clothes.

The Principle of the Little Washer

embodies all the essential points. First, we have the desired heat, which expands the fabric, and causes it to discharge the dirt. Second, we obtain a powerful suction beneath the clothes, which causes a rapid downward current or water force, through and through them, thereby removing the dirt. Third, we use a large body of water, which holds the dirt in solution. Thus we cleanse thoroughly, rinsing the clothes as usual, being all that is required to complete the operation.

The Washer is composed of solid galvanized iron, which will not rust or corrode. There are two sizes—the No 1, or family size, for ordinary household use, and No. 2, or hotel size, suitable for country hotels, boarding houses, laundries, etc.

Family size weighs 5 pounds, is only 7 inches long by 5 inches wide by 1¾ inches deep. The discharge pipe is 18 inches high over that, and is 1¼ inches in diameter. It throws water in a solid, unbroken stream, at the rate of 15 to 20 gallons per minute, will work in any common family boiler, and if you wish will do the work in a boiler nearly twice that size, thereby enabling you to do twice as much, or the same amount in half the time. It takes only 3 ounces of soap to 15 or 20 gallons of water, and will wash household linen, such as bed and table linen, a boiler full in ten to fifteen minutes, and do it perfectly; wearing apparel in from fifteen to twenty-five minutes, and will remove all streaks without any rubbing; requires no previous preparation of the clothes, such as soaking over night, etc. We take the clothes dry and when the Washer gets thoroughly at work we will fill the boiler as full as it will hold, by gently pressing them down with a stick. We use no chemicals, only good soap and soft water. If the water is hard it may be softened by a small piece of borax, which is perfectly harmless.

The No. 2, or small hotel size, will do the work in a boiler four times the size of a common family boiler, and wash of average pieces from 1,500 to 2,000 per day; or it may be used in any smaller boiler. They will work in anything that has a bottom large enough for them to rest upon.

Our Method of Handling.

We want agents everywhere throughout the United States; in every State, county, town, and hamlet. The retail price of No. 1 Washer is $3.50; of No. 2 Washer, $5. But we will sell sample machines of No. 1 size at $3; No. 2, or small hotel size, at $4. Canvassers for this Washer can make more money with it than with anything ever before offered to the public. As, for instance, we established two agencies to test the sale of the Washer upon its merits—one in Naugatuck, Conn., and one in Providence, R. I. The former, Mr. Charles Daniels, in a town of about 3,000 inhabitants, sold by canvassing in two weeks eighty-five Washers. In the latter place Mr. James Roberts, now of Naugatuck, sold in less than three months, without canvassing or advertising outside the store, over 500 Washers, a thing never before heard of.

To Persons out of Employment

we would say, if you want to secure a paying business, now is your time. Don't wait until the best territory is taken up, but send at once for sample machine and go to work. By following instructions you can sell to nearly every family in your neighborhood. Others have done it, and there is no reason why you should not. Full directions and instructions accompany each machine. Also special terms to agents; circulars, testimonials, etc.

All orders must be accompanied with cash. Remit by money order or registered letter to

A Few Men who Supported Lincoln, who are now supporting Tilden.

There are a large number of eminent men scattered throughout the country who, more or less directly, were identified with the Liberal party. These men from their nonpartisan character and known integrity of purpose are looked to with interest in times of political stife, as not likely to be influenced by other than pure motives—as good guides for those seeking the good of their country in their political action. A partial list of these men we find in the New York World. Of those who now with the Republican party but two can be brought to mind, Schurz and Halstead. Of those supporting Tilden for President may be mentioned the following:

Charles Francis Adams, of Massachusetts.

Andrew G. Curtin, Pennsylvania's "War Governor."

Ex-Senator Trumbull, of Illinois.

David A. Wells, of Connecticut.

William Cullen Bryant, of New York.

Park Goodwin, of New York.

Gideon Wells, President Lincoln's Secretary of the Navy.

Montgomery Blair, Lincoln's Postmaster General.

Justice David Davis, of Supreme Court, United States.

Ex-Governor Austin Blaire, the "War Governor" of Michigan.

Ex-Governor B. Gratz Brown, of Missouri.

George W. Julian, candidate for Vice President on the Free-Soil ticket, 1852.

Cassius M. Clay, of Kentucky.

General John M. Palmer, Ex-Governor of Illinois.

General William F. Bartlett, of Massachusetts.

Prof. W. G. Sumner, of Yale College, who wrote the Republican State platform of 1874, and who has now written the strongest letters of the kind yet published in behalf of Tilden.

Prof. A. L. Perry, of Williams College the distinguished political economist.

Colonel Augusta H. Fenn, the Republican candidate for Lieutenant Governor of Connecticut last year.

Frank W. Bird, of Massachusetts, the founder of the Republican party.

Ex-Congressman John F. Farnsworth, of Illinois

Charles Francis Adams, Jr, of Massachusetts.

Henry Brooks Adams, of Massachusetts.

Col. Nicholas Smith, representing the Grealy family.

George W. Fenton, of Chautanqua, brother of Senator Fenton.

Col. Fred A. Conkling, of New York, brother of Senator Conkling.

"Fighting Joe." Hooker.

Charles A. Dana, editor of the Sun.

Col. Alex K. McClure, editor of the Philadelphia Times.

Judge Henry K. Belden, of New York.

Charles G. Davis, of Massachusetts.

Ex-Senator Ross, of Kansas.

Ex-Senator Tipton, of Nebraska.

Ex-Senator Cowan, of Pennsylvania.

Ex-Governor David L. Lewis, the last Republican Governor of Alabama.

Judge Daniel S. Gooding, Lincoln elector at large in Indiana, 1864.

Judge Hoadley, of the Superior Court of Ohio, supported Hayes for Governor last year.

Charles Reemelin, of Cincinnati who supported Hayes for Governor last year.

E. W. Kittridge, the eminent lawyer of Cincinnati, supported Hayes last year.

Emil Hoffman, of Cincinnati, who supported Hayes last year.

Ex-Lieutenant Gov. Jacob Mueler, of Ohio, elected on the Republican ticket in 1871, who supported Hayes last year.

Judge J. B. Stallo, of Cincinnati, who supported Hayes last year.

Frederick Hassaurek, late editor of the Cincinnati Volksblatt, who supported Hayes last year.

August Rheme, editor of the Cleveland Wachter am Erie, who supported Hayes last year.

Col. Edwin Jessen, of Chicago brother in-law of Carl Schurz.

Ex-Governor Koerner, of Illinois.

General Franz Sigel, of New York.

The Republican party by one of its counsel, Carl Schurz, comes before the country and puts in a plea of confession and avoidance to the case made against it by the Democracy. It admits that it has plundered and oppressed the South that it has defrauded the revenues, that it has prostituted the civil service, that it has wasted the public domain and that it has demoralized the public conscience, but feebly endeavors to avoid an adverse verdict by pleading its loyalty and its purpose, if continued in power, to reform. Nobody knows better than Mr. Schurz that this is a bad pler in every sense of the word—as weak as it is desperate, and as humiliating as it is insincere. Its past services to the country could, at best, be admitted only in mitigation, and its promises of future amendment are unworthy of a moment's consideration when coupled with a refusal to surrender its plunder to make its immediate restitution. It says to the people, I have betrayed and robbed you it is true, but if you will forgive me and let me keep the swag, the custom house, postoffice, post tradership, navy yards, whisky-gaugerships—etc., etc., I solomnly promise to reform myself at my very earliest convenience!

* * *

It is difficult for the most zealous Republican to give a good reason why the party should longer be continued in power. He will tell you of deeds of valor done in the war by Republicans, but he ignores the fact that some of the bravest generals and fully one-half of the soldiers were Democrats. He can refer to no wise legislation to inspire confidence in the Republican party, neither can he point to a prosperous country as the result of Republican rule He can denounce Democrats for party sake and that is all. He cannot point to Comeron and Blaine and Chandler as honest examples of patriotism, although he does defend Grantism. In fact there is no good reason for honest men to longer vote the Republican ticket. The welfare of the nation lies not in that direction. It fills our heart with joy to think of the grand and glorious change that is to be made before our next issue, telling our readers that the Democratic party has won the victory and that there will be better times, not only for a few, but for all the land. Is it possible that fair minded men can look over these truths and throw away their vote. Young man your first vote is the one you will always remember, let it be for Reform, by voting the Democratic ticket.

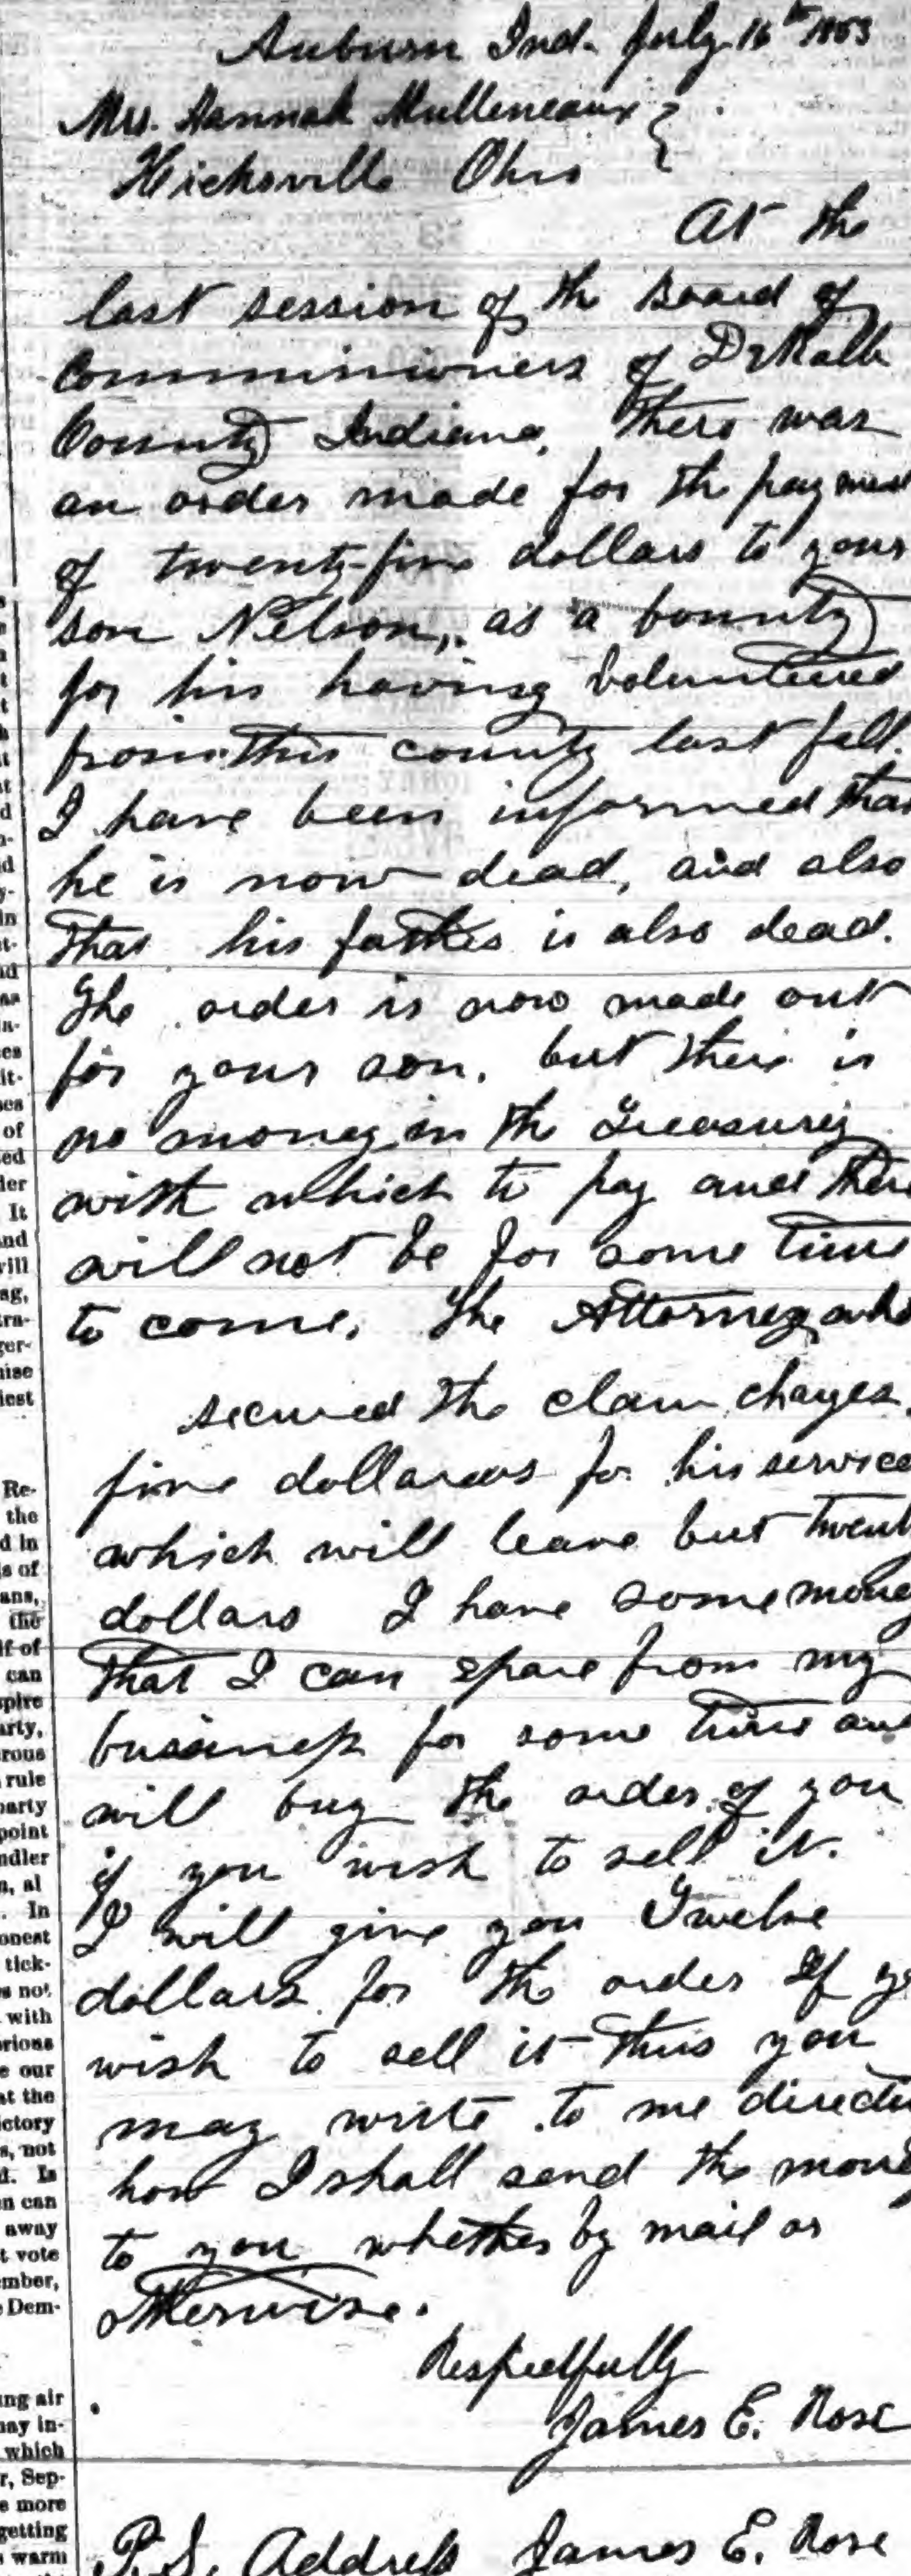
* * *

October opens with clear, bracing air and skies are glorious blue. It may indeed be called the first month in which we actually get autumnal weather, September generally being a little more than a continuation of summer, getting the last expenditure of the sun's warm rays. But October ushers us into the new season fairly and squarely, and the month has that distinctive character of its own which makes us respect it. It is a good time for work, for travel, and for pleasure; and though the editor may feel sad as he sees the leaves fall, and watches the preparations for the coming frosts, yet sound, hearty, and healthy men rejoice in the brisk air, and set themselves about their tasks with new spirits and increased vim. They will welcome the frost, and trust that it will soon extend to those plague stricken regions where yellow fever is not decimating the population. But what will make this October the most memorable of the months will be the victory of the opponents of the corrupt party in power in the coming State elections, prefiguring that greater victory which on the 10th of October, and on the seventh of November will utterly crush out Grantism, call Tilden to the White House to introduce the needed work of reform in the administration of the Government. For this result, all wise, thoughtful, and patriotic men devoutly pray.

* * *

The National Republican Committee is running Indiana red hot on the soldier's reunions to keep up the campaign excitement. Democratic soldiers can not be turned by such displays. They will vote for Tilden and reform. What a silly underhanded way this is to get votes. Friends, don't it look cowardly. Don't it look as though they felt their defeat. Even at the soldiers reunion here it could be heard on the corners "We will make two hundred votes." Voters of DeKalb, shackel such cowards and come and join a fair, honest and brave party—the Democratic party.

Roses' Letter to the Widow!



Auburn Ind. July 16th 1863

Mrs. Hannah Mulleneaux }
Hicksville Ohio }

At the last session of the Board of Commissioners of DeKalb County Indiana, there was an order made for the payment of twenty-five dollars to your son Nelson, as a bounty for his having volunteered from this county last fall. I have been informed that he is now dead, and also that his father is also dead. The order is now made out for your son, but there is no money in the Treasury with which to pay and there will not be for some time to come. The Attorney who secured the claim charges five dollars for his services which will leave but twenty dollars I have some money that I can spare from my business for some time and will buy the order of you if you wish to sell it. I will give you Twelve dollars for the order If you wish to sell it thus you may write to me directing how I shall send the money to you whether by mail or otherwise.

Respectfully

August Flower.

The most miserable beings in the world are those suffering from Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint. More than seventy-five per cent of the people in the United States are afflicted with these two diseases and their effect such as sour stomach, sick headache, habitual Costiveness, palpitation of the Heart, heart-burn, water-brash, gnawing and burning pains at the pit of the stomach, yellow skin, coated tongue and disagreeable taste in the mouth, coming up of food after eating, low spirits, &c.—Go to the drug store of F. E. Davenport and get a 75c bottle, or a sample bottle for 10c. Try it. Two doses will relieve you.

That Soldiers Reunion.

Our article last week in regard to the Soldiers' Re-union, had the desired effect. Though gotten up under Republican auspices, they did not dare, after what we said, to turn it into an out and out political affair, though it had several features that evidently pointed that way. First, came Logan, who distinctly said he understood it to be in the interest of the Republican party, and came for the purpose of making a political speech. This much we learn from a Republican. It was agreed to give out that he was unable to speak, though he could warm out of his hoarsness. It was a queer spectacle. Logan ready to inflame the war spirit, and the managers anxious that he should do so, but afraid of the result. That old man who started out first with what would have proved a better partizan speech, but was pulled back that Hayes' banner, which appeared in the crod as they marched to the depot, and after which several soldiers refused to march, that glee club hired by the Illinois Republicans, and sent here to sing their party songs, and their attempt in the evening to give the whole proceedings a political cast, ought to convince everyone that a Republican rally was intended all the way through, and had not our item appeared opposing such a scheme, what a jolly time they would have had But the whole thing in this respect was a failure. The attendance was large, though the day was unfavorable. Had any body else than a union soldier made this opposition they would have cried "rebel," but they can't get that howl on us. There is not another soldier in the country who would take more pride in a regular re-union than ourself, but we shall always oppose any party making a handle of them for political purposes. We see a Democratic soldiers' re-union advertised for to-day at Indianapolis. We are opposed to this arrangment, and as soon as our soldier boys lend their influence to favor any party, that soon may they expect to see the true re-unions lessen, and diminish in interest and attendance. You might just as well prostitute the Fourth of July to partizan purposes as those affairs, and the true soldier will engage in those only in which he can meet his comrade of what ever political party, on cannon ground, where the crack of the party whip is not heard, and where none but brave gallant officers, are recognized as leaders.

Democrats of Dekalb Co.

We appeal to the sturdy Democracy of DeKalb county to do their whole duty on the 10th of October. This duty consists of voting and seeing that your neighbors vote also. If every Democrat in the several townships will consider himself a self-constituted committeeman to see that somebody else is on hand to vote all will be well. The result in the State is what we are after. Every one counts. The strongholds like DeKalb county are expected to do their work faithfully. We want no Democrats to stay at home. The election in October is of the most vital importance to every man who loves his country, his business or his labor. There must be help for these pressing hard times. The relief lies only in the success of the Democratic party. Success in October, means victory in November Remember this. Think of it all the time. Impress it upon your neighbors. Make it your duty to be an active worker from now until after the poles close on the 10th of October. Do this for the sake of your country. Let your patriotism rise to the occasion and Indiana will stand forth as one of the great leaders of this mighty reform movement.

Sworn Statement of Mr. Akins.

Below we give a statement made by Mr. Akins, thinking probably it would give better satisfaction to all concerned We did not get our article wrong anymore than Mr. Saxton sent Andrews to Akins, instead of going himself—six of one and a half dozen of the other. All the talk and argument from now until the day of judgment, could not make the matter out anything but a move on Saxton's part to be certain of his pay, and keep his blunders from the eyes of our next Treasurer, Mr Gonser.

I, Christopher Akins, swear upon oath that Willis Andrews came to me on the day or two after the last Republican convention, and said that T. J. Saxton would pay back to me the one dollar and a half which he had wrongfully taken from me for delinquent taxes, by the next mail. Afterwards the said Andrews came to me and told me that Saxton would not pay back said amount until after the election, but that I must say nothing about it. On the second day of October, Saxton and Andrews came to my house and wanted me to sign a statement, that I had never refused to pay one dollar and fifty cents of said delinquent taxes. I told Mr. Saxton I would not sign such a statement as I had refused to pay all but the fourteen cents, as that was all I thought I ought to pay, but had paid the one dollar and fifty cents. Upon the advice of Mr. McGonigal, who told me the law was all on their side, and they could beyond a doubt, collect the full amount. It was then I concluded to pay the one dollar and fifty cents, whereupon Mr. Saxton became quite indignant, and said to me "I understand that you and your son are not going to vote for me." And he further said if I refused to do anything for him, he would refuse to do anything for me.

Christopher Akins.

Sworn and subscribed to before me this 3rd day of October, A. D. 1876

Jacob Walborn, J. P.

One year ago ex-Governor Dix "warmly approved the object of a meeting" to approve the action of Gov. Tilden. Now he reviles and abuses him. To such depths can partisan spite degrade a narrow mind!

In 1854 Hayes was one of the worst Know Nothings in Cincinnati. He holds the same views yet. Let every lover of liberty remember this and act accordingly.

Chandler, Hayes & Co. intended to carry Ind., in October by ballot box stuffing. Watch the corruptionists every where. See that Indiana has a fair election.

John Hebel is lying at the point of death, and from hear say will probably cross the river this Wednesday evening. John has had two attacks of a similar nature in the last few years.

Charles Klotz has started east for his fall stock of clothing, dry goods, &c.—Charley will bring the latest styles and best qualities of goods, and our readers will save money by waiting a few days for his goods to arrive.

The red uniform a hundred years ago received a terrible licking. History always repeats itself, and the bloody shirt army will meet overwhelming defeat next Tuesday. It is an unlucky color the Radicals adopted for their calves.

Our local politicians of both parties, are busily engaged in a general canvass of the county, and will spare no effort to have the free and untrammeled voter thoroughly posted on all the exciting questions now engaging the attention of the people.

The Radical papers make their principal fight on Mr. Williams by attacking his clothes. They are so enamored of General Harrison's white kids and broadcloth that they think it a mortal offense for a man to go barehanded and wear jeans clothes.

Our Democratic friends should be careful to do no trading on election day There is no need of it, for if every man sticks to the ticket, the candidates on the tickets will all be elected by large majorities. There is no need of sacrificing one man to increase the vote of another, because every man on the Democratic ticket is safe. If any Republicans ask you to swap, say to them "I don't have to."

The Courier last week stated that not a single Democrat had been placed upon the committee for the soldier's reunion.

The above is from the gifted pen of Weamer. Some people call lying a gift Read again, Weamer, and you will see that we were particular in using the word programme and not committee.—If you can show us the name of one Democrat on the programme or posters we'll surrender. In the meantime somebody pray for Weamer.

There is one thing very evident at the present stage of the campaign in Indiana, and that is, that the Republican party is fearful of the result. Two months ago they were confident that the State ticket would have 20,000 majority. Now the State is admitted by them to be very doubtful. Fellow Democrats, this should inspire us to work hard. Don't let the contest go by default. The enemy is nervous and anxious. We have victory within our grasp See to it that our opportunity is not frittered away by lack of work or vigor at home Democrats.

Auburn Courier.

Local and Miscellaneous.

—How are you going to vote?

—What do think of Rose's letter?

Vote for Boland the one-armed man.

Watch the poles closely next Tuesday.

Vote straight Democratic on Tuesday next.

Vote for St. Clair an honest practical farmer.

We have a good Democratic ticket. Vote it clean.

A new sidewalk is going down on Sixth street.

Corn cutting keeps the farmers busy now-a-day.

Frank Kline has returned from a long stay in Michigan.

Our merchants are beginning to bring in their fall goods.

Vote for Tously, who has experience and is an able lawyer.

Court is still in session. The attendance is quite large.

Call and see Roth's underwear, overcoats, gloves, &c.

Mr. M. Osgood and Miss Lotta Ford were married last week.

Al Dawson and wife have returned from Philadelphia.

Vote for Kelly, who will represent the farmers in Congress.

Don't you want to take a Saxton pill? It will bring you to time.

Vote for our Commissioners solid, for they are all good men.

Vote for Shutt, who has already represented us with credit.

The Gregg Bros. are showing in the country school houses.

Roth has the best underwear in town, for the least money.

Democrats, stand by your nominees, and victory awaits us.

Tell Mercer he'll have a terrible Fike before he gets in for Senator.

The weather is getting quite cold. It looks like snow, "they say."

Call at Roth's, for the best bargains. He has prices down to a fine point.

Vote for Moody, a man of experience and an honorable upright gentleman

The Albion silver cornet band accompanied the excursion to Butler to-day.

Vote for reform and economy and better times by voting the Democratic ticket.

Vote for Gonser, who has been a resident of this county for years, and has helped pay the taxes.

A fine hicory pole was raised at Corunna Wednesday. Prof. C. A. Fairbanks delivered one of his splendid addresses.

Mr. M. Boland, of Corunna, the Democratic candidate for Recorder, was in the city Tuesday.

Hon. Freeman Kelley speaks at Hamilton, next Saturday night, and at Waterloo on Monday evening, Oct. 9.

Prof. Fairbanks will address the people at Garrett, next Saturday afternoon and at La Otto next Monday evening.

Dan Voorhees and Gen. Sigel will address the people at Fort Wayne, Friday Oct. 6th.

We hear that several of our saloon men gave the grand jury a call this week.—That's right, boys, be sociable.

The band boys made a nice thing off of their military ball. We are glad to hear it.

Did any of the excursionists to Chicago see Sankey and Moody? Did you ask them how they voted?

Politics are getting talked up to a peak. Next Tuesdey the peak will be knocked off—of the Reps.

There will be a Democratic rally at Butler next Monday That place turns out large crowds.

Loveland, of Corunna, was in town on Tuesday electioneering for the Republican party.

The roof on the new school house was the work of J. L. Davis' boys. It is said to be a good job.

Mr. Beuret has painted his store building which helps the appearance of it to some extent.

The oyster season has opened up and lovers thereof are in their glory. Only 35c a dish.

Cider making is, to say the least, immense. One firm bought twenty barrels yesterday.

Hi. Rasely has moved his stock of harness next door the postoffice. Hi. has a nice stock.

We are ready for a good dramatic performance. It takes the Auburn troupe to give one.

Benedict's new room is almost ready to occupy. It will make a splendid business stand.

W. D. Bickel has taken a partner in the restaurant business. The firm is doing a good trade.

The excursionists returned from Chicago Thursday, very much delighted with their trip.

No Response from Rose.

Mr Rose has not offered to defend that outrageous letter he wrote to a poor widow, the mother of a dead union soldier. Not one word has he dared to say to justify his action in this case. Tax-payers, you may die, and your family may be placed in a position where he, as Judge, would have something to do with your estate. Will you place a man there by your vote, who attempted to shave a bounty order due a mother for the bleaching bones of her brave son? Study well before you vote. Weamer tries to explain for him, but as Rose had time to do it himself, we imagine the feeble attempt made by Weamer, is all but a brilliant effort of his facile pen.

The Presbyterian excursion to Chicago Tuesday was well patronized from this place.

We were absent at Indianapolis yesterday and are therefore one day late with our paper.

Twenty thousand Democratic soldiers met at Indianapolis and snowed under the attempt of the Radicals last month.

There is not much of Weamer this week, ignoring the slime, and the precious contributors that are gotton up in town.

F. D. Ryan has moved his stock of boots and shoes into Munn's old stand owned by J. L. Davis.

See change in Mr. Davis' hardware advertisement. Also in railroad time cards in other columns.

Tarney has the largest and best assortment of meat always on hand of any market in the city.

Chas. Klotz' old building, which stood near the court house, is being moved to the south end of town.

Weamer calls on Culver for an affidavit. Now, if he could have placed Feagler's along side what a pretty pair they would be.

Remember you that may have estates to settle in court, TWELVE DOLLARS for TWENTY FIVE is a little to big a shave.

The October election will take place next Tuesday. Let every friend of reform remember this and be on hand for business.

Mr. St. Clair will occupy the new jail building as a residence, in a couple of weeks. Mr. Moese has purchased the Baughan property.

By the election of the Democratic ticket you will get less taxes to shoulder and more labor and better wages, while on the other hand it will be to the contrary.

Some of the candidates for county offices in this county will suffer defeat and should be prepared to meet it philosophically. All cannot be successful.

Sammy Pommert has employed another first-class barber. The public are invited to call when wanting a good shave hair-cut, or anything in the tonsorial line.

A large crowd from this place accompained by the Auburn Silver Band and Mr. Foltz' marshal band attended the speech delivered by Hon. Mr. Julian, at Waterloo, Monday.

Our subscribers are paying up very slow. Bear in mind we have a great deal of cash to pay out each week. Its true the times are hard, but we must have money just the same.

There will be a grand Democratic rally at Garrett next Saturday. A large crowd will be in attendance, and good speakers have been engaged.

Mr. Roof, of the Kendallville "Standard" and his brother, the champion job printer, at Albion, was in the city last week. They are boys "that know how 'tis yourself."

Come and get tickets for the different voting places, at this office, next Monday. We are going to print enought to get 5,000 majority on the county ticket. That's enough.

H. Randall, living east of town, lost a wrapping chain between Poters residence and Ashelman's farm, last week. A liberal reward will be paid the finder by leaving it at this office.

The facts we have presented against Mr. Saxton are called silly nonsense by Weamer, but the tax-payers will show him next Tuesday as to who is to be trusted.

It is claimed that Saxton has been doing the dirty work of the party long enough now he ought to have an office. How many deserving there would be if all who done dirty work should be rewarded.

Weamer extols Dr. Mercer, and, makes him out a wonderful man. A glance at another column will give you the motive power that generally prompts that man to action.

The white man who walks the streets in search of work to buy his family bread, should recollect that the Radical leaders are importing negroes to override the will of the people, and, in order that it may cost them as little as possible, are providing them with work at the people's expense.

No Word From Saxton.

Why dont that tax-payer of Weamer's give his name, as we did Mr. Akins if his case is good. It wont do for some irresponsible party in this place to sit down and write as though he was a heavy tax-payer, when the fact is he is a dead beat. Why dont Mr. Saxton come to the front with a statement of his own. He has not dared to.

Mr. D. Bender, living near the north school house, has a splendid lot of kegs, barrels, cistern tubs, &c., for sale very cheap.

The building in rear of Zacher's grocery, is a terribly dilapidated thing. A little enterprise on the part of the proprietor of the building would make it give a different appearance.

A number of our citizens went to Butler Thursday to attend the Republican rally. There has been a strong effort made to get as large a crowd as the Democrats had, a few weeks ago. We are afraid they will fail.

J. J. Van Auken has given better satisfaction to the people of this county, than any other surveyor that has ever filled the office. We hope to see him continue in the position, as it is seldom you can find a man who suits all classes

Who is it, and what is it for—that meeting so often held in Rainier's Hall. Through the window, the other night, could be seen an audience of two, and our County Treasurer laying it off in speech-like way, to the attentive hearers of said audience.

Weamer said he was short of help, last week, is the reason why his paper come out on Friday. He only had four hands besides himself, and one or two other ones laying off waiting for their pay for what they had done.

The Republican band did not go to Butler. We heard one of the members say, they might pay our expenses, if they want us very bad. That's what we thought. They want your vote, gentlemen, worse than your company or your music.

Mr. Geo. Ensley, the father of "our Nick," says that he had as much to do with that poor farm barn as Mr. Gonser and that sealed proposals were advertised for but when opened they were so very high in their figures that they concluded to take private bids. This is from Mr. Ensley.

The Waterloo Fair commences next week and the general outlook is far superior to former ones. We look for a very large attendance and a most splendid fair. Let all be present and enjoy a share of the pleasure that will be exhibited there.

A vote for Blue Jeans Williams means a vote for public economy and better times for poor men. A vote for Harrison. means a vote for the continuation of Grantism, public extravagance and hard times. The men who pay the money can take their choice.

We could name a hundred leading Republicans in the different States who have left their party to advocate Tilden and reform. We cannot think of a single leading Democrat who has gone over to the other side as advocate of Hayes.

The Radicals are making an especial effort to elect Harrison, and would swap the whole state ticket to accomplish their object. How do the truly loyal subordinates appreciate that speculative spirit? Why you might as well try to elect Grant to a third term as to elect Harrison for Governor.

Go to Bickel & Co's. for the boss dish of oysters. This is one of the best restaurants in the county for farmers to get a square meal. Don't fail to give them a call when you are hungry, for you get the best and the cheapest meals you ever set down to. Rooms on Main Street, next door to Woodford's shoe store.

The rail road and manufacturing establishments are curtailing expenses in every direction possible, by discharging employees and cutting down wages. To use an original expression, "times are hard."

We hear it noised around town that there will be a marriage in high life on or about Thursday next. Oh, young man, if you only knew how the happy father smiles as he pours out the paregoric and muses over the certainty of a Democratic vote not 22 years from now, you would only know the true way of living "doubled up."

The wood market is lively. Now is the time to lay in your winter supply.—Don't wait until the roads get muddy, and then abuse the hard working farmer because he asks you twenty-five cents more for hauling a cord than he did when the roads were dry and dusty.—It is your fault and not the farmers if you run out of fuel in the dead of winter. "Give the devil his dues."

This is the time of year when you are asked by your better half to black the kitchen stove and move it from the out house into the other room, get down on your "all fours" and put that carpet down, and be carful, dear, that you get the stripes straight. I'm going over to Jones'; I'll be back by the time your done if I can. If the baby wakes up do your best to get him asleep again.—Good night, dear.

TOO LATE!

Weamer says it was a put up job, to get McClure off the track. Well there was a put up job about it, and that was to defeat him if he did not get out of the way, by the very reason which caused him to withdraw. Gen. Blair was very wrothy when he found the Auburn Republicans had spoiled the game. They would have held on until the last week and then come out with the affidavits of Feagler, Culver, and other citizens and thus defeated him. And now Weamer says its a put up job to get McClure's friends to go for Copting Cutter. Its too gauzy, Weamer Rose and Saxton could have come out before this and explained, if their case was good, but the fact of their holding back is proof that what we charge is true.

Weamer does not like Gonser to promise any favors while he is Treasurer but says, "many are the favors Saxton has extended the people" Mr. Akins, Devilbis and Wise, were especially favored, and yet they will hardly vote to elect Saxton.

A thousant families in DeKalb county say that Morton knows nothing about the suffering that Radical rule has brought upon them. He associates with government contractors and members of the whisky ring and thinks that the country never was so prosperous.

If our Democratic friends are on the alert there is but little danger of the Republicans polling many illegal votes.—All doubtful votes should be challenged The Democrats should make every effort for a fair election. This is all they want, for a fair and honest vote will bring forth a sweeping Democratic victory.

CONUNDRUM:—If D. D. Moody's character is worth $10,000, what is a two year old colt worth?—Mrs. Weamer's Paper.

ANSWER—The colt would be worth about as much as you received from your wife when you sold and conveyed your printing press to your wife, in order to beat your creditors.

We were glad to see a large attendance at Waterloo, last Monday, to hear Julian. He made an impressive speech and it was a good one, to judge from the remarks made afterwards by Judge Green. He showed what a weak negative man Hayes was, having known him for twenty-five years past. He showed up the war question and the reason for it, to blindfold and hoodwink the people.

Several weeks have passed and yet no one has attempted to explain or defend the Rose letter. The Press or Weamer have not dared to publish it nor defend it. We have confidence in the honesty and intelligence of the people, and believe they will hardly trust their interests or their childrens interests after they are gone, in the hands of a man who would speculate on the misfortunes of a poor widow.

The Republican candidate for Treasurer is trying to make the people believe that he is poor. What became of that farm in Ohio, which he boastingly spoke of when he first came here, four or five years ago and the money he has out on interest. He married an eighty-acre farm, and Saxton cant be worth much less than $10.000. And now he is crying before the people, because forsooth he is poor. It only shows what some people will do to get into office.

The Democratic meetings that have been held throughout the county were all largely attended and great enthusiasm prevailed. Mr. C. A. Fairbanks has done a noble work in canvassing the county, visiting each township, giving the people truths and facts that should be brought again to mind before the hand reaches the mouth of the ballot box. We are certain that the people of DeKalb are tired of hard times, and they evince a decided disposition to labor together for reform. Pass it along the line.

The men who advertise are the ones from whom good bargains can be secured. They are the live, wide-a-wake business men who fully understand how to do business, and are willing to let people know what they have to sell. They are men who build up the town, and the ones who deserve the patronage of the people. Remember this in making your purchases. Do not buy elsewhere until you compare prices with those who do business on business principles.

We have not heard a word from Saxton yet, and if he intends to hold off so that we will have no chance to reply, it will only indicate the unfairness with which he proposes to run the canvass. We have brought everything forward as soon as it came to our ears, and have had no intention of getting anyone in a position where he could not defend himself. We have given cases against the honesty and capacity of Mr. Saxton, so that he could have replied before this, and if he waits until the last moment, it will only indicate a weak defense. Why, he even offered to buy a ticket for the excursion to Chicago, last Tuesday, in the interest of the Presbyterian church, if a certain Democrat, a member of that church, would turn in and help elect him. This is the kind of a man Weamer wants you to vote for. We have no unfriendly feeling for Saxton personally, but he is certainly unfit for the position of County Treasurer.

Grand Rally at Butler.

"A Little More Grape, Capt. Bragg."

Gen. S. E. BRAGG,

OF MISSOURI,

one of the gallant defenders, and

Gen. MESSMORE,

OF MICHIGAN,

another brave officer will address the people at Butler next Monday afternoon and evening. Let there be a grand rally

Give Waterloo a big chalk mark. They raised a handsome hickory pole there last Monday. Such poles are very popular this year, being almost as thick as telegraph poles all over the county. Corunna tried to raise one 196 feet long, last Saturday, but an accident occured, just as they had it in position which let it down again. It was to be raised Wednesday, and we hope they were successful. There is to be a pole raising at the school house in District No. 1, in Smithfield-tp., one mile east of Barker's Church next Saturday. C. A. D. McClellen, Esq., and others will make addresses.

Tom Mays goes to the extreme of thinking it very wicked for a man to even visit a place where the mild Teutonic beverage is sold and drunk—[Waterloo Press.

What we object to is this thing of descerating the Sabbath day. That one who asks the suffrages of the people should lend his influence and presence to an affair of this kind is very wicked. We judge what men will do by their past acts, and if this is a specimen of the conduct that Cutter, as an officer of the peace expects to show; should he be elected it would hardly be creditable Beer pic-nics on the Sabbath day may do for Chicago, but would be a sad innovation on the peace and quiet of all good people, and those who encourage them by their presence, should receive no countenance from the public.

Why is it that the Democrats fear any thing with "Soldiers" in it? Dead or alive, the soldier is feared by them, else why so much opposition."

Democratic soldiers put that in your pipe and smoke it. That was the estimation placed upon you when you marched the other day along with your comrades. Why, they will claim after while there is not a Democratic soldier in the county, and we really believe there will be as many such voters go in for Tilden as Hayes. But the above from Weamer is a fair expression of the respect entertained for you by the leaders of the Republican party. If they could lessen or blot out the number of Democratic soldiers in this country then they would be happy.

Weamer makes out Mr. St. Clair to be worth $40.000. At that rate how much is Weamer worth? Not less than $50,000 if you include several of his talented contributors, more generally known as dead beats. Mr. St. Clair is comparatively a poor man owning a small farm for which he worked and slaved years ago, in the mean time paying taxes and adding to the industrial interests of the county. When Capt. Cutter does as much hard work and learns to be frugal and lives to be as old as Mr. St. Clair he can be worth as much or more.—Simply because a man came here in an early day and labored hard and finally grew into the posession of a small farm that should not prejudice him before the people, but rather commend him as an honest hard-working, worthy citizen entitled to the respect and confidence of the people. It wont do Weamer to preach poverty for Captain Cutter. He has had eleven years since the war to earn something and if he has not succeeded must the county take him up at a word and provide for him. We hope the farmer and tax-payer will lay aside his prejudices and vote for a worthy man, a tax-payer himself.

The Kendallville "Standard" copied that lie which Weamer gave publicity the other week about Dr. Elson and Mr. Moody, and for which he so gracefully apologized by saying it was another man. There don't seem to be one good generous impulse in the entire organization of the man, but then we dont mean to be personal. But the "Standard" will make no correction. In fact so far none of the Republican papers in this District are in the habit of making corrections. We called the attention of the "Press" to an error it made in intimating that Voorhees failed to appear at Crown Point, the other week, to meet Schurz, when the fact was, it was the latter gentleman who failed to come, yet the "Press" did not make the correction but ignored the matter entirely When it called our attention to a little item in the COURIER about Hayes voting for the salary grab, we made the correction. Again the Angola "Republican" charged that, "Blue Jeans," the old fraud had not resigned his seat in Congress. We corrected it the week following, but nevertheless it never alluded to the matter again, and doubtless many of its readers having confidence in its statements believe to-day that "Blue Jeans" is still a Congressman when everybody knows that a gentleman is running in Williams' District for the unexpired term. Perhaps it was the intention of the editors to purposely deceive their readers and thus get a vote away from the honest old man. Such are our opponents.

A NAUGHTY DOCTOR.

The Merry Mercer on the Ramage.

A woman is the Case.

We were regaled one day last week with a narration, not a blood and thunder story and o'er true tale, as is claimed by some of the best citizens around Corunna, of an escapade in which Dr. Mercer, the Republican candidate for State Senator, acts an important part. We give it as we heard it, from those who know whereof they speak. Not a thousand years ago a man by the name of Fike was sent to the penitentiary for dabbling in counterfeit money, leaving a wife and one or more children. About this time there resided at Corunna a wild fellow named Burt Erie, a notorious character. Now, the Doctor and Burt took it into their heads to give Mrs Fike a call, and they were indelicate enough to select the dark hours of night to carry out their purpose. Their intentions were evidently bad, as all intentions are that have to be carried out under cover of darkness. They presumed to judge of the character of Mrs. Fike by her husband. So at the dead hour of night they called at a house near the one occupied by Mr. Fike, and inquired if such a house was the residence of this woman. They were answered in the affirmative, and they started off in that direction. Curiosity prompted a neighbor to keep a lookout and he saw them go in the direction of the house after which they had inquired. As it happened a young girl the daughter of another neighbor near by, was staying with Mrs. Fike at the time and from her we learn they were aroused from their slumbers by a loud rapping, and soon the demand came to let somebody in. This was peremtorily refused and after some parleying another demand was made to admit the party. But Mrs. Fike was firm and the party, finding no chance to gain the coveted prize indulged in vile Billingsgate and indecent language, applying epithets and making requests of the very lowest character. Concluding that they had made a great mistake they got in their buggy and went home. The affair got noised abroad until it finally came to the ears of the Doctor's wife, and the Doctor was indignant, not because of the act, but because some one had taken the trouble to inform his wife of the matter. And this is the man who aspires to the position of a Senator to represent the intelligent, respectable people of DeKalb and Steuben. Perhaps he judges the people the same way he judged Mrs. Fike, by the character of her husband who was a resident of this county. We judge too from a remark he made after his defeat two years ago for representative. He was asked how he felt. He said, "I feel like Lazarus, as though I was licked by dogs." There is another matter in which the Doctor is said to have been connected that is far from creditable. A man by the name of Cogsdell made application for life insurance and Mercer examined him and certified to his physical condition in such a manner that he was accepted. Soon after the same man applied for a pension and was again examined by the Doctor who pronounced him a fit subject to receive a pension. The certificate in each case was signed by our versatile Doctor, and on them the man received an insurance and a pension.—What do you think of a man whose conscientious scuples will permit him to do that. Is he honest and fit to be trusted? It would be an outrage to send such a man as that to represent us in the Legislature. Mr. Shutt is the Democratic nominee. He has been there one session, is a fair upright gentleman and is known far and wide for his sterling integrity. He is a farmer and knows the interests of the laboring classes. Every farmer and tax-payer should vote for him.

NOT TRUE.

It has been circulated by someone who has but little respect for his word and honor, that Mr. M. Boland, the Democratic candidate for Recorder, has a permanent situation on the Air Line Road, as operator, as long as he sees fit to keep it. That is not true. The Railroad company is under no more obligations to Mr. Boland than to any one else on the line, and no one would circulate such a report only those who are meddlesome, those who attend to others business and let their own attend to itself. Such people are not worth listening to and have but little, if any, influence in the city or town where they reside. Mr Boland is a man worthy and competent of the Recorders office, he is temperate in his habits, steady to his labor, kind and affable to all, a splendid penman, and one of the neatest and most exact youn men we ever knew. What more does the intelligent people of this county want?

We learn that his opponent is a man not capable of filling the office, that he is a miserable writer, and has a very limited education. Voters of DeKalb this is not the man you want. A man to fill this office should be an able scholar, clever and accommodating in his ways, and we leave it for the ballot box to decide.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

The professional thieves of Philadelphia have united in a request to the Mayor for permission to visit the Exhibition in a body on some day to be set apart for that purpose, promising to maintain a firm control over their pickers and stealers "for this occasion only."

The reef of rocks at Hell Gate, which has heretofore formed a serious obstruction to the entrance of New York harbor, was blown up on Sunday morning, Sept. 24. There was considerable apprehension in the city lest the explosion of the mine, consisting of 50,000 pounds of the most powerful explosive known to science, would result in the destruction of both life and property. All such expectations, however, were agreeably disappointed. A slight tremor of the earth throughout the city, and the upheaval of two columns of water, accompanied with a considerable quantity of rock, which all fell into the river, were the only evidences that the great blast had been effected. It was precisely 3 o'clock p. m. that Gen. Newton sent the electric spark into the mine. This was followed by a cloud of black smoke, rocks and lumber, and at the same moment a heavy shock ran through the ground, and gave one the impression of being lifted about two inches. The sound of the explosion was not loud, but low, rumbling, and deep. A cloud of yellow smoke followed the rocks, and, in ten seconds, the water had become level again, and no traces were left but a large yellow space caused by mud and other substances thrown up. At the works it was found that the coffe-dam which surrounded the shaft was entirely gone. A small house which stood close to the shaft was thrown a distance of ten feet, but other buildings were just as before the explosion. The affair was a complete success, and the whole reef was blown up.....Eastern papers give the particulars of a terrible disaster that happened recently in Forest county, Pa. The mountain streams becoming greatly swollen from the recent storm, the waters flooded the partly-settled valleys near Ralston, a newly-opened lumbering hamlet. Two cabins, occupied by George Parks and Daniel Cooper, woodchoppers, were washed down the mountain side into the stream at an early hour in the morning. The Parks family consisted of seven persons—father, mother, and five children. There were nine members of Cooper's family—Cooper, his wife, six children, and Mrs. Adams, the mother of Mrs. Cooper. The sixteen persons were all drowned, and their bodies carried away and jammed between the boom of logs in Forest creek. The houses were completely wrecked. Two persons were drowned near Southport. In Tioga county three lives are known to have been lost, and four persons were drowned at Willsport.

A dispatch from Tamaqua, Pa., says: "The conviction at Wilkesbarre, of Thomas Campbell, a notorious Molly Maguire for the brutal murder of Michael McNulty, at Carbondale, last July, has aroused the murderous organization of which he was a member in Luzerne county, and already the gang have commenced their terrible operations. Thomas Long and John Donelly have fallen victims to their vengeance. The Mollies, who have terrified Hyde Park, Dunmore, Meadow Brook, and other places in the Lackawanna region, are reported to be perpetrating atrocious outrages."

A splendid bronze statue of William H. Seward was unveiled in Madison Square, New York city, one day last week. The oration was delivered by William M. Evarts. John Bigelow, the Secretary of State, made the address of presentation on behalf of the contributors to the fund for the statue, and Mayor Wickham accepted the gift for the city. There was a large number of people in attendance, and much interest was manifested....Pennsylvania's day at the Centennial—Thursday, Sept. 28—witnessed the largest attendance of any day since the opening of the big show. From early morning till late in the afternoon, almost to the moment of closing the gates, the people swarmed to the grounds in multitudes, and numbered at length about 250,000 souls. Every imaginable vehicle, from an oyster-cart to a truck, was utilized in drawing people to the show, and notwithstanding the fact that almost every available horse in the city was brought into requisition, at the close of the day thousands of people, many of them women and children, were compelled to trudge to their distant homes on foot. Of the fifty-cent admissions during the day there were 217,678; twenty-five-cent admissions (children), 33,785; to the live-stock show, 5,823; total cash admissions, 257,286.

THE WEST.

A frightful accident occurred a few days ago on the Pan-Handle railroad, twelve miles from Columbus. The train was running at a rate of perhaps forty miles an hour, when, from some cause or other, four cars of the train jumped the track and rolled down the embankment, thirty feet high. Six persons were killed, and thirty or forty wounded, some of them seriously....The Commission appointed to treat with the Sioux, Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians for the peaceable surrender of the Black Hills have concluded their mission, the savages agreeing to the propositions made to them, without the change of a single word....The St. Paul papers print full and interesting accounts of the capture of the Northfield bandits. The hero of the affair appears to be a youth of 17 named Oscar Olesou Sanborn, son of a farmer living a few miles from Madelia. This youth instinctively recognized the fugitives as the men whom the law and public safety demanded should be captured, and, despite his father's discouraging words and warnings, the brave boy mounted a horse and set off with all the speed of which the animal was capable for the town, where he found ready listeners to his story, and brave and prompt men who quickly set to work to effect the capture of the villains. The job was short, sharp and decisive, as has before been stated. One of the robbers fell dead at the first volley, while two others were soon brought down, one of them receiving no less than seven wounds. It has been ascertained from admissions made by the bandits, that three of them are Younger brothers.

A. C. Hesing, and the other members of the Chicago whisky ring who were some time convicted of defrauding the revenue and sentenced to various terms in the county jail, have been pardoned by the President.

Two successive and heavy shocks of earthquake were distinctly felt in Evansville, Ind., on the night of Sept. 24. So great was the effect that the alarm was general throughout the city. People left their beds, globes were shaken and chandeliers broken. Many thought it a boiler explosion.

The Northfield bank robbers recently captured at Madelia, Minn., have been fully identified as members of the notorious Younger gang.

At the Spotted Tail Agency, on the 23d ult., the Peace Commissioners held a council with the Sioux Indians gathered there, and, after the usual grumbling about the bad faith of the Government, Spotted Tail and his men put their names to the new treaty.

A telegram from Vinita, Indian Territory, states that the Cherokees and other civilized Indians of the Territory are greatly excited over the proposed removal of the Sioux into their country. They say the Government is again proposing to violate treaty stipulations by removing those Indians to their country without their consent. They characterize the action of the Commissioners in agreeing to give the Sioux homes in the Territory of Oklahoma as being similar to the one made by Satan on the mountain 1,800 years ago. There will be a united and solemn protest made by all these people against the consummation of this alleged outrage against the civilized as well as the Sioux Indians.

A Several weeks ago a requisition was made by the Governor of Wisconsin upon the Governor of Illinois for the surrender of the body of Mr. W. F. Storey, editor of the Chicago Times, charged with the publication of a libel against one Beck, the Milwaukee Chief of Police. The matter was referred by Gov. Beveridge to Attorney General Edsall for an opinion as to the law in the case, and the latter has replied in a letter to the effect that the requisition cannot be lawfully complied with, for the reason that Mr. Storey was not in Wisconsin at the time the alleged offense was committed, and therefore cannot be considered a fugitive from justice....A Bismarck special reports preparations at Fort Lincoln for an expedition of the Seventh Cavalry and a detachment under command of Maj. Reno. Destination not stated, but the preparations indicate an absence of a month or more.

THE SOUTH.

There are 600 cases of yellow fever at Brunswick, Ga. The people are in a most destitute condition, without food, physicians or nurses. A dispatch states that it is impossible to exaggerate the frightful condition of affairs, and that some of the people will die of starvation unless speedy aid is rendered.

Three Southern cities—Savannah, Charleston and Baltimore—are now afflicted with the pestilential presence of the yellow fever. Other coast cities are in danger of the epidemic, some of them being, without doubt, destined to receive a visit from the dreadful scourge. The city of Savannah has been the chief sufferer thus far, an average of over thirty deaths per day occurring there from this one cause, with a marked daily increase.

Gen. Braxton Bragg dropped dead of heart disease in the streets of Galveston a few days ago. He had been in his customary health up to the moment of the fatal attack. Gen. Bragg was a prominent officer in the Confederate army, holding at various times important commands. He was educated at West Point, but for several years previous to the outbreak of the rebellion he had had no connection with the United States army.

WASHINGTON.

The Secretary of the Treasury has called in for redemption $10,000,000 5-20 bonds of 1865, May and November, upon which interest will cease the 21st of December next. They are as follows: Coupon bonds, $50, No. 651 to 718, inclusive; $100, No. 8,601 to No. 15,400, both inclusive; $500, No. 15,001 to No. 19,000, both inclusive; $1,000, No. 35,851 to No. 46,850, both inclusive. Total coupon, $7,000,000. Registered bonds, $50, No. 1 to 50, both inclusive; $100, No. 1,101 to No. 1,650, both inclusive; $500, No. 1,401 to No. 1,810, both inclusive; $1,000, No. 3,701 to No. 5,750, both inclusive; $5,000, No. 2,301 to No. 2,900, both inclusive; $10,000, No. 3,101 to No. 3,950, both inclusive. Total registered, $3,000,000.

In the five months that the Silver bill has been in operation there has been $11,397,121 in fractional currency redeemed and destroyed. There is now about $500,000 in the different sub-treasuries which is to be destroyed. According to the books there is $30,111,615 yet in circulation. It is safe to say that $10,000,000 of this amount will never be redeemed, as much is destroyed and lost. The bill issuing silver for fractional currency went into effect on April 20, and the figures given above are for Sept. 23....The officers in charge of the Senate wing of the Capitol are much troubled by the evidence that some malicious person or persons has deliberately gone to work to deface that wing of the Capitol. A short time ago nearly a gallon of oil, which must have been brought into the building for the purpose, was spilled on one of the inner flights of marble stairs. And only the other day it was discovered that a large quantity of blue ink had been poured over the outer balustrade of the corridor connecting the Senate wing with the main building. The ink was poured in two or three places, and splashed about so as to do as much injury as possible. It cannot be removed without cutting into the marble.

So far $19,058,252 in silver coin has been paid out by the Treasury Department for the redemption of fractional currency and in payment of obligations since the 19th of April last, leaving a balance of $2,000,000 of such coin on hand at this date.

GENERAL.

The multitude of travelers to the Centennial Exposition, by overloading the cars, the Post-office Department declares, greatly delay trains, and thereby prevent the delivery as quickly as common of the mails.

For nearly twenty years the great horse Lexington stood at the head of the American turf, and it was not until two years ago that his four-mile time, 7:19¾, was beaten a quarter of a second by Fellowcraft, at Saratoga. Another Kentucky horse has now beaten the time of both Lexington and Fellowcraft, and the people of the blue-grass State are warranted in feeling proud over the performance. Ten Broeck, a thoroughbred racer named in honor of the gentleman who owned Lexington, and bred and owned by a member of the famous Harper family of horse breeders, at Louisville, the other day, ran four miles in the unprecedented time of 7:15¾, or three seconds faster than Fellowcraft's, and four seconds faster than Lexington's time—an achievement which stamps Ten Broeck the greatest horse of the century.

POLITICAL.

The Oregon Legislature has elected Gov. Grover to the United States Senate....The Democratic Convention of Washington Territory have nominated John P. Judson a Delegate to Congress.

The New York State Greenback Convention was held at Albany, last week. Richard Montgomery Griffin, editor of the Albany Evening Post, was nominated for Governor; Thomas Armstrong for Lieutenant Governor; Anthony J. Cudderback for Canal Commissioner; Marcus M. Dixon, Judge of Appeals; John W. Crump, State Prison Inspector.

The Republicans of Nebraska have nominated Frank Welch for Governor, A. O. Abbott for Lieutenant Governor, Bruno Tschuck for Secretary of State, J. B. Weston for Auditor, and J. C. McBride for Treasurer.

FOREIGN.

Numerous meetings throughout England have passed votes of thanks to Mr. Schuyler, of the American Legation at Constantinople, for the promptness of his report on the Bulgarian atrocities....The plague has broken out among the Turkish troops operating against Servia....Late advices from Mexico state that the revolutionists under Gen. Porfirio Diaz are making strong headway, and appearances indicate that they will probably succeed unless Congress adopts certain compromise measures which have been proposed. Diaz is at Oaxaca in the South, with from 3,000 to 4,000 efficient, well-armed men, and from his great personal popularity is constantly receiving accessions to his force....Gen. Cortinas, who escaped from the City of Mexico and pronounced for Diaz is besieging Matamoras with a force of about 300 men.

A Constantinople dispatch of Sept. 26 says the Porte has agreed to prolong the suspension of hostilities for eight days, and expresses a hope that the powers during that time will communicate the conditions of a peace which they propose....The steamship Dardenoug, from Melbourne to Sydney, foundered near Jervis Bay during a hurricane on the 11th of September, and sixty of her crew and passengers were drowned.

The Russian Government has ordered the registration of all the horses in the empire liable to seizure in case of war....The United States steamer Franklin, with William M. Tweed on board, has sailed from Vigo, Spain, for New York....Spain is sending more reinforcements to Cuba.

News from Panama states that in the engagement at Laschenoca, in the Cauca, between the rebels and Government forces, the rebels lost more than a thousand in killed and wounded, while the Government forces lost 300 killed and 300 wounded.

CENTENNIAL NOTES.

A THREE HUNDRED DOLLAR HAT.

There are two exhibits in the Peruvian section which attract an unusual share of attention. The first is the hideous collection of mummies and fragmentary portions of the bodies of ancient Peruvians; and the second is what appears to be an ordinary Panama hat, until the price label, inscribed $300, induces one to examine it more carefully. Close scrutiny elicits the fact that the article is woven with wonderful fineness; and, by the aid of a lens, 108 stitches, or picks, as weavers would call them, may be counted to the inch, measured radially from the center. The hat is exhibited by Juan Daste, of Monte Christo, Peru. The material is jipijapa, a species of palm, the leaves of which are gathered before they unfold. After the veins and other coarse portions are removed, the leaves are made into bundles and macerated in boiling, and then in cold, water until they become white. Bleaching in the shade follows, and then the hats are plaited from the straw by the Indian natives of the country. For so fine a fabric as the hat exhibited at the Centennial, the above process would be too rough. The only wetting the straw receives is done in the dew, to the influence of which it is exposed. Then the braiding is done in a dark, damp room; and, to produce a single hat, a woman often works from five to six hours daily for three or four months. When the article is finished it will wear indefinitely, provided there be no defective straws in it. Probably the $300 hat exhibited in Philadelphia would outlast the lifetime of its purchaser, and serve as an heirloom to his descendants for years afterward.

FLEXIBLE SHAFTING.

Imagine a workman handling the nozzle of a short section of hose. In place of the nozzle, substitute an auger; and then conceive the astonishing appearance of the man directing the auger toward a block above his head, then to the floor, then sideways in every direction, twisting the hose meanwhile in all sorts of kinks and curls, while the tool, wherever it touches, sinks into the solid material as if the latter were putty. Yet the hose does not rotate. Certainly the invention is a remarkably ingenious one, and it is as simple as it is effective. A long section of wire is made into a close spiral. Over this is wound more wire, the turns being, however, in reverse direction; then follows a third spiral envelope, and so on until suitable thickness is attained. The extremities of the flexible shaft thus formed are brazed. One end is feathered into a driving pulley; the other has a clutch for the tool. A piece of hose or other suitable covering envelopes the shaft, which transmits rotary motion to any desired distance from the source of power and through any number of curves, so that the power may be taken to the work instead of the work to the power. We were told that the device has been successfully applied to marble, granite, and other stone surfacing, polishing, and working; iron drilling and surfacing; wood boring, carving, and facing; horse cleaning and clipping; casting, cleaning, and emery grinding of all kinds. It has been tested, we learn, up to the transmission of nine horse power.

A NEW STEERING APPARATUS.

This is exhibited in the Russian section in Machinery Hall, and is the invention of M. Nozikoff. The helm being located directly above the propeller shaft, motion is communicated from the latter by a bevel gear to a vertical shaft, which rises immediately abaft the wheel. By turning the latter in one or the other direction, one of two clutches is thrown into action, the effect of which is to communicate the motion of the vertical shaft to an ordinary hand wheel which moves the rudder in the usual way. The essential feature of the device is the mechanism whereby the power of the main engines is utilized to maneuver the helm, thus obviating the use of the additional small engine commonly employed in steam steering gear for a like purpose.

A PAINTING MACHINE.

Every one who has had to paint slats or laths, or like narrow work, knows that doing so is a tedious and not over easy operation. Plenty of paint is wasted in using a big brush, and to employ a small one is to throw away time. Mr. W. Roberts, of Liverpool, exhibits, in the English section of Machinery Hall, a very ingenious little apparatus which performs this work very rapidly and in a much better manner than it could be done by hand. The paint is poured into a low tray. Above are located, first, a pair of rollers, which seize the slat and draw it in between a series of brushes, while two more cover the edges. To keep these brushes wet with paint, two wheels beside the grasping rollers rotate partially in the paint beneath. These are so grooved as to carry up the liquid at every revolution and dash it on the brushes. The machine, we learn, will paint 6,000 running feet of lath per hour, without the aid of steam power.

The Cramming System.

Throughout the empire of Morocco there are villages where the elder members of the adult population follow, professionally, the pursuit of fattening young ladies for the matrimonial market of Barbary. The Moors, like the Turks and most other Orientals, give a decided preference to "moon-faced" wives over lean ones, and are more solicitous as to the number of pounds which their brides weigh than about the stock of accomplishments they possess. A girl is put under the process of fattening when she is about 12 years of age. Her hands are tied behind her, and she is seated on a carpet during so many hours every day, while her papa stands over her with a matraque, or big stick, and her mother from time to time pops into her mouth a ball of consoussou, or stiff maize porridge kneaded up with grease, and just large enough to be swallowed without the patient choking. If the unfortunate girl declines to be crammed, she is compelled; so that ere long the poor girl resigns herself to the torture, and gulps down the boluses, for fear lest she be beaten.

Wicked Sultans.

Of the thirty-three Sultans who have hitherto occupied the throne of the Osmanlis, eleven commenced by the massacre of their brothers, nephews or cousins, in order to simplify the order of succession. One of them, Soliman III., had his nineteen brothers murdered on the day following that of his accession. In addition to the eleven just mentioned, some others died of problematic maladies, such as indigestion or apoplexy, which may have been chosen to cover poisoning.

THE RAVINE FIGHT.

A Solitary Indian Who Multiplied Remarkably.

[New York Herald Cor. from Crook's Column.]

Firing had ceased, except occasional shots from the ravine on the west side of the village, where it was supposed a single wounded Indian lay, determined to sell his life dearly.

During the morning soldiers had been killed by shots from the ravine. Gen. Crook determined to catch the Indian alive, and caused the interpreter to make a promise of life to him. Bullets were the only reply. Soldiers posted behind him on the opposite bank had poured their fire into the ravine for hours, but still the Indian's gun was not silenced. Passing from the right to the village soldiers were saluted by bullets. Troops were deployed below the mouth of the ravine to make the approach cautiously. They crawled, with loaded guns. Bullet after bullet was sent over their heads from the depth of the ravine, and they returned, but did not silence the fire. The excitement spread through the camp, and the mouth of the ravine became the focus of a crowd. Several officers joined in the siege; the stronghold was approached by hundreds of eager soldiers under the delusion that they were to see an Indian made prisoner.

Hitherto only single shots had come from within; but suddenly there was a volley through the approaching troops, which caused an indescribable rush away from the spot, and the wildest confusion reigned. The ravine was full of Indians, who, after the first charge in the morning, had fled there to hide. The volley wounded private Kennedy of the Fifth Cavalry. The siege became more tragic and earnest.

Capt. Munson was foremost peering over the steep bank into the ravine, when he slipped in through a dense bramble and found himself among the Indians. The dry water-bed was narrow and deep, and hidden by brush. Several warriors lay face downward in this trench, and had built small breastworks across it with mud and roots. Behind these were a score of squaws and children. Some of these were wounded, and the mud was drenched and bushes spattered with blood.

Munson gallantly seized a squaw, and, putting her papoose on his back, shoved her out. One buck was lying on a dead infant. Munson had barely a glimpse of the interior of this strange stronghold, and then dodged back to escape the muzzles of five guns over his head. Bullets hissed both ways, the soldiers pressing forward to fire. They several times swayed backward before the fire of the Indians, and the roar of musketry was like that at Antietam.

Baptiste, the Pawnee scout, dashed in and caught two other squaws and a young brave. They said the rest would surrender, but when quarter was again proposed they answered with bullets.

John White, known as Buffalo White, a friend and follower of Buffalo Bill, was shot through the heart. Baptiste just escaped a ball to kill the savage who fired it, and scalped him in an instant.

A talk was meanwhile held with the women who had been rescued. One of them, who was wounded, said she would go into the ravine and induce the Indians still alive to surrender. She went, and soon after led out a forlorn-looking group. There were several squaws and two bucks, one of them named Black Wolf. On entering the stronghold there were found three dead squaws and one dead brave. American Horse or Iron Shield was found horribly wounded in the abdomen. He was brought out and cared for by the surgeons, but died this morning.

The captives were twenty-one in number. When they surrendered they seemed to expect immediate death. A squaw discovered her dead papoose in a tepee, and was a picture of intense woe.

Indiana.

Indiana is ablaze with political excitement. Hundreds of meetings are held nights and scores daily. The State is being stumped by school districts as well as by Congressional districts. Each side is doing its "level best." As a matter of interest at this time, we print below the returns of each State election in Indiana for the past twenty years. The figures are taken from the World Almanac:

"Look here, you critter, exclaimed a Hoboken man the other night, as he brought his hand down on the place where a mosquito sat, "do you take me for a lunch counter?" The mosquito, by this time sitting on the far side of the room, was very respectful, and made no reply.

THE BRITISH GRAIN SUPPLY.

Better Prices for Wheat Predicted.

Mr. James Caird, the well-known writer on agriculture, in a communication to the London Times of Sept. 21, in regard to the wheat crop, says:

"The condition and quality are all that can be desired, but as threshing proceeds the yield continues more disappointing. The land under wheat in the United Kingdom this year is 3,136,000 acres, which is 678,000 acres below the acreage of 1874, and the seven preceding years—a decline of more than 20 per cent. on the average growth. The decline from last year is 376,000 acres, but that will be more than compensated for by the increased yield per acre and the higher quality. I put the gross produce of the present crop at 10,600,000 quarters. Deducting 800,000 quarters for seed, will leave 9,800,000 quarters for consumption. At the present rate of consumption with us we require for the coming year about 18,000,000 quarters from the stocks in hand and foreign importation.

"This is the fourth year in succession in which America has been our main dependence; if that should fail in any material degree it will be impossible to fill the gap elsewhere. In none of the European wheat exporting countries has there been an average crop. British India has largely increased her export, which, in the last eight months, reached nearly 5 per cent. of our whole foreign supply. With no quarter from which we can expect increased supplies, and with some prospect of a diminution in the American supply, it is satisfactory to know that we begin with a large stock from the surplus of last year's imports."

Night Doctors in Paris.

"The Prefect of Police at Paris," remarks the Pall Mall Gazette, "has lately issued a decree with the object of meeting one of the great requirements of the day, or rather the night, in that city, namely, 'night medical attendance.' At every police office doctors who are willing to get up at night will inscribe their names. The public may see the list there all night, and choose any name they please. A policeman will forthwith proceed to the doctor's house, awaken him from his slumber, and give him a 10-franc fee. This fee will be reimbursed to the municipality by those who are able to afford it, but those who cannot pay will receive medical succor gratis. Some such arrangement would be of great service in London, where deaths too often occur owing to the difficulty and delay that arises when a doctor is suddenly wanted at night. If telegraphic communication were established between the police stations and the houses of such doctors as are willing to undertake cases of emergency, the advantage would be two-fold. The police would be able to tell the public where to find the doctors, and the doctors would be able to tell them where to find the police. By thus blending the medical and constabulary services, physical and moral diseases would be treated on one system, and, a double force being brought to bear upon each of them, their total extirpation would probably be merely a question of time

Death from Drinking Water Poisoned by Dead Toads.

Some days ago Mr. Alexander Higbie, a prominent resident of Springfield, town of Jamaica, Long Island, noticed a pimple coming upon his upper lip, near the entrance to the right nostril. It grew rapidly in size, and the adjacent parts soon began to swell. Some one who pretended to medical knowledge assured him that it was only the effects of a cold, that there was no danger, and treated it accordingly. At last it was determined that the affection was erysipelas, and the family becoming alarmed sent for Dr. Beldin, of Jamaica, their regular family physician, who at once determined it to to be a case of malignant pustule. The patient's head was in a frightful condition, and the brain was already affected so that he was delirious. Under the circumstances it was impossible to save him, and he died on Friday. In making inquiry as to the probable cause of the attack, Dr. Belden found that for some time past the water of the well had had a peculiar taste, and investigation proved that it was polluted by a number of dead toads in various stages of decomposition. Mr. Higbie was in the habit daily of drinking large quantities of water, and he continued to do so after the taint was discovered and even during his illness. Dr. Beldin has no doubt that this was the cause of his death.—New York World.

Transatlantic Navigation.

Forty-six years ago an enterprising Nova Scotian, Samuel Cunard by name, conceived the idea of establishing a line of mail steamers between England and America. Seven transatlantic voyages had already been made by steam. Mr. Cunard went to England, and in due time associated with himself two small shipping firms, the Messrs. Burns, of Glasgow, and the MacIvers, of Liverpool. In 1840, by their united enterprise the Britannia, the first vessel of the famous Cunard line, was placed in commission. She was bark rigged, and of 1,100 tons burden. From this beginning has grown up the most successful steamship line the world has ever seen. In the forty-six years of its existence it has comprised over 150 large steamers, of an aggregate of over 150,000 tons. These steamers have made over 4,000 trips, traveling a distance of about 12,000,000 miles, and have carried over 2,000,000 passengers, and all without ever losing a single life, or even a letter in the mails entrusted to them. The secret of their success has been thorough, careful, prudent management for which they have from the first been noted. Nothing is ever risked that can be made sure.

Russian Iron.

Some fields of iron ore have been recently discovered in the South of Russia. They are situated partly in the Verchni-Dnieprovsky district of the Ekaterinoslaw Government, and partly in the Elizavetgradsky district of the Cherson Government; iron ore is found here on the rivers Sacksagane and Ingouletz, near the village Krivoy-Roff. About twelve miles from this place on the river Sacksagane, near the village Tchervonnaia Balka, large quantities of red hematite are found. Immense layers of hematite, 100 feet thick, are situated near [illegible] Mr. [illegible], of St. Petersburg, says that it is estimated that these new fields contain altogether 90,000,000 tons of ore.

The Tramp's Murderous Revenge.

The house of Jeptha Hazard, in Berkshire county, Mass., was recently the scene of one of the most unprovoked and utterly atrocious crimes ever committed in Massachusetts, the victim being Mrs. Hazard, an inoffensive old lady of 35 years. Mr. and Mrs. Hazard, an old couple living in a house by themselves in a little-frequented locality, have not been accustomed to entertain strangers, but when a tramp, who now calls himself Charles Wood, rapped at their door and asked for shelter from the rain they did not turn him away, although when the storm was over they requested that he seek a lodging-place for the night elsewhere. No hard words had passed between the Hazards and the stranger, and they had no reason to suppose that he bore them any ill-will, but, as he started from the house, he seized a club near the door and commenced a violent assault upon Mr. Hazard, who, being an old man, was no match for him, especially against the disadvantage of such a weapon. Mr. Hazard had noticed his neighbor, Mr. Tillotson, a teamster and a powerful man, drive by but a short time before on his way home, and he obeyed his first impulse, which was to escape from the scoundrel, and by obtaining Tillotson's aid secure the fellow's arrest before he should flee, and never thinking for a moment that he would re-enter the house and attack a harmless woman. Tillotson, on learning from Mr. Hazard how he had been beaten, ran to the house, and there, to his inexpressible horror, found Mrs. Hazard upon the floor and the tramp swinging an ax above her with the energy of a maniac, having already probably struck her four or five blows. Tillotson, at the risk of his own life, rushed upon the murderer, and, after giving him two blows on the head with a hammer, succeeded in overpowering and holding him until further assistance arrived. Mrs. Hazard lived but two hours. The tramp was committed to jail at Pittsfield without the privilege of bail, to await the action of the Grand Jury. He says he had no provocation for the crime, and does not know what possessed him to commit it.

All the explanation he can give is that, as he passed the door, he saw the club, and something made him seize it and impelled him to attempt the murder of the two old people.

The criminal came from France nine years ago. He says he has no friends in this country and wishes he was dead.

Frightful Scene at a French Railway Station.

A frightful scene took place at the Vaise railway station, Lyons, on the 2d inst. A superb Nubian lion, intended for the Bidel Menagerie, which had just arrived, was left in the station awaiting orders from its owners. The Superintendent took the precaution of removing the truck in which the animal was brought to Lyons into a corner off the line of the ordinary traffic, and put a barricade around it to prevent the accidental approach of strangers. All these steps, however, afforded only a stimulant to the curiosity of some persons who happened to be in the station. Among them was a cattle-merchant, who was seized with an insane desire to go up to the wild animal and caress it as he might do a cow or a sheep that he had just purchased. He put his arm inside the cage for this purpose, but in another moment horrible cries were heard, and attracted all the workmen and officials to the spot where the lion had been safely placed out of the reach of doing harm to all but those who might willingly seek danger. The sight presented was a frightful one. The infuriated animal had the limb of the adventurous cattle-dealer between his teeth, and was dragging the whole body between the iron bars. The spectators immediately armed themselves with picks, shovels, and crowbars; but before they succeeded in forcing the lion to loosen his hold he had torn the man frightfully. Medical assistance was soon procured, and it was found necessary to perform an amputation to save the life of this victim of his own recklessness.

Mrs. Partington knowingly inquires if a man who dips a can in a tank of water should be regarded as a can-tank-erous man.

T. C. MAYS, PUBLISHER.

SOLID TRUTHS.

Proclaimed by Hon. Lyman Trumbull.

Why the Ex-Senator Turns His Back on the Republican Party.

The Specious Pleas of the Bloody-Shirtites and Machine Politicians Demolished.

At a mass meeting of the friends of Tilden and Reform, held in Farwell Hall, Chicago, a few days ago, ex-Senator Lyman Trumbull spoke as follows:

When an individual is sick and sends for a physician, the first inquiry is to ascertain the nature of the complaint; so when the body politic is in disorder, and the people are called to the rescue, the first inquiry is to ascertain what is the matter. If an examination shows that the patient or body politic is in a sound, healthy condition, no remedy is necessary, for "the whole have no need of a physician." The people of the United States are now being called upon to examine the body politic, ascertain its condition, and either suffer it to continue on as it is, or, if it be found out of order, to apply the proper remedies. The first inquiry is, what is the present condition of the country? Is it satisfactory? Do prosperity, peace, and happiness everywhere abound? Does the laborer receive steady and remunerative employment? Does industry everywhere meet with its just reward. Do trade, manufacture, and commerce flourish? Does the machinery of government, State and national work harmoniously in all its parts? Are the people of the States lately in rebellion peaceful, prosperous, and happy? Is the public service free from dishonesty and corruption, and do officials everywhere perform their duties with fidelity and integrity? Are the limitations of the constitution and its guaranties of protection to life, liberty, and property everywhere and at all times observed? In a word, are the people satisfied with the present condition of things? If so, there is no need of excitement or change, and we should thank our public servants for their honesty and fidelity in the collection and disbursement of the public revenues, for their strict observance of the constitution, and for having so managed public affairs as to secure to the people such great prosperity—such unalloyed felicity. If in this assembly there are any who take this rosy view of public affairs, and are satisfied with the present situation, to them I have nothing to say till the scales fall from their eyes, and they see the corruption which everywhere abounds in public life, and their ears are opened to hear the cry of distress coming up from a whole people whose liberties are endangered, whose peace is disturbed, and whose industry is paralyzed by the usurpations, hate, and dishonesty of those in authority. I should have no hope of awakening them to a sense of their own or their country's condition.

DISHONESTY IN PUBLIC LIFE.

I shall not attempt to place before you in detail to-night the profligacy, corruption, and disgrace of the constitution and laws which have pervaded the public service the last few years. It is a sickening spectacle to see members of Congress prostituting their positions to advance Credit Mobilier and railroad schemes in which they have a personal interest; to see a Secretary of War selling offices for money, a Private Secretary of the President indicted as a whisky conspirator, and, what is more, as a conspirator to have a burglary committed that he might charge the crime upon an innocent man; to see a Secretary of the Navy using the public money for partisan purposes, paying it out by the hundred thousand dollars to twice paid contractors, in direct violation of the law; to see a Postmaster General allowing bogus claims, and enriching himself at the public expense. I do not mean Jewell, who was driven from the Cabinet for his honesty. To see a Secretary of the Interior and his son John, fattening on the money appropriated to the Indian service and other public objects; to see the whisky and Custom House thieves reveling in ill-gotten gain all over the country.

But why enumerate these things? There is not a child in the land who does not know of the monstrous frauds and corruption which pervade the public service. Here in Chicago the whisky trials disclosed the robbery of the Government to the extent of hundreds of thousands of dollars, and an appropriation of the money, either by the thieves, or to the corruption of the ballot-box, and the bribery of voters in order to sustain the party in power.

REFORM.

The necessity for reform in the public service is admitted in the Republican platform, and by Gov. Hayes in his letter of acceptance. The promise to reform admits that there is something to be reformed. Gov. Hayes says in his letter of acceptance that offices in certain cases "have become not merely rewards for party services, but rewards for services to party leaders," and he declares that "the reform should be thorough, radical and complete." With this confession of the prostitution of the public service to party and personal ends, I need not stop to furnish the evidence of the corruption and degradation which obtain among officials under the present administration. Usurpation, the disregard of the law and the constitution by the corrupt combination which has ruled the country the last few years have been as flagrant as its corruptions.

It has appointed and retained in civil positions military officers in direct violation of law. Under the pretense of enforcing the Fifteenth amendment, which simply prohibits discrimination in the right to vote between citizens on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, it has passed enforcement acts for supervising and controlling elections. The Fifteenth amendment does not confer or pretend to confer the right of suffrage on anyone. It simply prevents discrimination on the right to vote, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. This is the extent of the power of the National Government over elections. It has no right to interfere with the elections of the people for any other purpose. The features of the Enforcement acts which undertake to regulate elections, except so far as to prevent discrimination, have been held invalid by the Supreme Court of the United States.

In the State of Louisiana, the party in power set aside an election of the people and set up a Government by military power, which has been maintained by force of arms the last four years.

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY AND NOT GRANT ALONE RESPONSIBLE.

Who is responsible for this corruption, these usurpations, and the present depressed condition of the country but the Republican party? Some say Gen. Grant, and the evils complained of are all chargeable to Grantism, and will all be remedied by the election of an honest man—Gov. Hayes—to the Presidency. Not so. It matters little who is President so long as he is the mere instrument of the party which elects him. Grantism and Republicanism to-day are one and the same thing. The Republican platform indorses Grant and its candidate, Gov. Hayes, indorses the platform. Grant, unless backed by the Republican organization, would amount to nothing.

The control of this organization has fallen into the hands of corrupt, bad men, who use it for their own selfish purposes and to perpetuate themselves in power. All the corruption and stealing of the last four years has been carried on by Republicans, who have generally been sustained by the corrupt combination which has governed the country. Prior to the election of the present opposition House of Representatives, whenever committees of investigation were called for, they were invariably packed by the friends of the parties to be investigated, and the result was that iniquity was covered up, and rascality went on. Witness the investigation set on foot four years ago. In every instance the corrupt leaders of the organization calling itself the Republican party came to the rescue, and white-washing reports were made justifying palpable violations of law and covering up the grossest iniquity.

REPUBLICANS WHO SEEK TO REFORM ABUSES DENOUNCED BY THE PARTY.

Not only so, but the persons who set on foot the investigations were denounced as enemies of the country who sought to bring disrepute on the Republican party. Its trusted leaders in the days of its purity, they who organized the party and carried forward the measures which gave it its renown, were denounced as recreant to the party, simply because they sought to preserve it from dishonesty and corruption. Where are the great men who surrounded Lincoln in the days of trial and danger to the republic? Seward and Chase, the greatest of them all, went down to their graves under the disfavor of the party they had done more than any other two men to build up and sustain. Three members of Mr. Lincoln's first Cabinet still survive, and where are they to be found? Two of them, Montgomery Blair and Gideon Welles, both thoroughly honest and upright men, about whose garments there is no smell of corruption, are in the opposition. Who is the third one, and where is he? His name is Simon Cameron, whom President Lincoln dismissed from his Cabinet in the early stages of the war and banished to Russia. He is now to be found, as might be expected, among the leaders in the Republican camp, while his son Don fills the War Department, from which his father was ejected.

REPUBLICAN CLAIMS UNTRUE.

The leaders of the present Republican organization lay claim to all the great deeds of the Government during the last fifteen years, and particularly do they claim that it was the Republican party which carried the country safely through the late civil war and suppressed the rebellion, and they represented all who did not belong to that party as in sympathy with the rebellion if not open rebels. Let us examine this claim and

SEE HOW MUCH TRUTH THERE IS IN IT.

At the Presidential election in 1860 there were four candidates—Lincoln, Douglas, Breckenridge and Bell. Lincoln received a little more than one-third of the popular vote, and was elected. To be exact, Mr. Lincoln received 1,866,352 votes, while the combined vote of Douglas, Breckenridge and Bell was 2,810,501 votes. So that Mr. Lincoln was in a minority of nearly 1,000,000 in the popular vote. Does any one suppose that 1,800,000 Republican voters could, or did, by force of arms, subdue and put down the 2,800,000 voters?

The idea is preposterous. Mr. Lincoln received but a trifle more than half the votes in the non-seceding States, and scarcely any in the States that seceded, while Mr. Douglas alone received more than 1,300,000 votes, nearly all of which were in the adhering States.

Most of those who voted for Douglas were as true and loyal to the Union as the supporters of Mr. Lincoln. Mr. Douglas himself, though a devoted follower of the Democratic party all his life, was a true friend to the Union. The last speech of his life was to rally his countrymen to its defense. Democrat as he was, he lived and died a patriot, and the great body of the one hundred and sixty odd thousand voters in Illinois who supported him for the Presidency in 1860 were patriots also. A few, I know, sympathized with the rebellion and denounced Mr. Douglas for his support of the Government, and of that few, some are now traversing the country breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the very men as Confederates whom they formerly denounced for adhering to the Union. In 1860 Mr. Lincoln received a majority of less than 6,000 of the votes polled in Illinois for President. How preposterous the claim that Republicans only fought for the Union! Does not every citizen of the United States know that the Illinois regiments which went to the field were made up indiscriminately of Republicans and Democrats—that it would have been impossible for Illinois to have sent 200,000 and more men to the field from the Republican ranks alone? To say that the Republican party alone put down the rebellion is untrue. That party had control of the Government at the time, and I would not detract one iota from its just fame; but in the suppression of the rebellion it had the assistance of hundreds of thousands of Democrats.

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY NOT THE SAME AS IT WAS.

The purposes and aims of the Republican organization of to-day have nothing in common with those which actuated the party in its formation and during the war. In 1856 both the old political parties, Democrats and Whigs, were disrupted and new parties formed, the cardinal distinction between which was slavery in the Territories. The party that opposed the spread of slavery took the name Republican, and was made up indiscriminately of Whigs and Democrats. They who insisted upon the right to carry slavery into the Territories, whether as a constitutional right or in obedience to a vote of the people of the Territory, took the name Democrat, and were composed indiscriminately of those who had before been Whigs and Democrats. The entire mass of voters in the slave-holding States who had before been Whigs took the name Democrat. Neither party at that day thought of the abolition of slavery in the States through the agency of the National Government; but both admitted the wane of power in Congress or the National Government to interfere with slavery in the States. The vital issue in the campaign of 1860 was the expulsion of slavery from the Territories. On that issue the Republicans triumphed in the election of Abraham Lincoln, though by a minority in the popular vote of nearly a million. Then followed the rebellion, in which eleven of the slave-holding States undertook to set up a Government for themselves. During the war the question was no longer one between Republicans and Democrats, but, as the lamented Douglas expressed it, between patriots and rebels. On the side of their country were to be found the great body of both Republicans and Democrats in the Northern States. The purpose for which the Republican party was organized was accomplished when slavery ceased, never to be restored.

The question before the country is no longer about the spread or existence of slavery. That was settled a dozen years ago. Nor is the question now as to the suppression of the rebellion; that was put down by the patriotic efforts of Republicans and Democrats nearly a dozen years since.

It is true that patriotic Democrats did not always approve the measures of the Republican administration, but they responded to their country's call and shed their blood as freely for the preservation of the Union as Republicans. I was with the Republican party at its birth, stood by it through the bloody conflict with secession, and for years afterward I gloried in its principles and rejoiced in its triumphs; but God forbid that I should be so false to history and to truth as to claim for it all the patriotism in the land.

WHY A REPUBLICAN OF 1860 IS NOT REQUIRED TO SUPPORT THE PARTY NOW.

Perhaps some one may ask, How is it, if you once belonged to the Republican party, gloried in its principles, and rejoiced in its successes, that you now find fault with it? I have already told you that the object for which the Republican party was formed was accomplished long ago. I will now show you that from being a party of purity and principle, it has become an instrument, in the hands of the men who now control it, of fraud and corruption, a cheat and a lie. Do you ask for the evidence? I have it at hand. A little more than four years ago charges of corruption in the custom houses and other branches of the public service, the French arms, and San Domingo scandals, and the sale of offices for political services, became so open and notorious, and the disregard of the constitution and laws so flagrant and frequent, that an effort was made through such Republicans as Sumner and Schurz in the Senate, and Gov. Blair and others in the House, to have the charges investigated and a remedy applied if they were found to exist. You all know the result. The men who had got control of the Republican organization by means of intrigue and the very corruptions and abuses it was sought to expose and correct succeeded in packing the committees appointed to investigate; whitewashing reports were made, and the men who sought to expose and correct the abuses were denounced as recreant to the party. I do not wish to be personal, but how much do you suppose you would ever have learned of the stealing by whisky officials in Chicago from a committee composed of Congressmen who were friends of the officials implicated, and who had had them appointed? The attempt in 1871-2 to reform the Republican party within itself was a failure. It could not be done. Then followed the Liberal Republican movement which resulted in the nomination of Horace Greeley for the Presidency. No sooner was the nomination made than Mr. Greeley, one of the earliest, and, through his great paper, perhaps the most impartial Republican in the land, was denounced by the men who had got control of the Republican organization, as a traitor to the party, and as in league with Confederates and rebels to undo the results of the war, which he had done so much to sustain and bring to a successful issue—and they slandered him to his grave. By means of the regular army in the South overawing the voters, the use of the public money in the North to bribe and corrupt voters, the army of office-holders and the whole power of the Government, the corrupt combination succeeded in re-electing Gen. Grant to the Presidency in 1872. Are not these things so? But do you want other proofs that the Republican organization of to-day is a cheat and a sham? Four years ago it assembled in convention at Philadelphia and nominated Gen. Grant for re-election. In its platform it declared "it suppressed a gigantic rebellion." Was not that a lie? Was it not the patriotic people of both parties, as I have shown, that upheld the Government and crushed the rebellion? What else did the Republican party declare? It said: "The revenues have been carefully collected and honestly applied." Was not that a bold, open lie? Go ask the juries who indicted and found guilty the whisky thieves of St. Louis and Chicago what they think of the declaration. How many of you believe the revenue was carefully collected and honestly applied in 1872, when this declaration was made? We all know that the convention which nominated Gen. Grant for re-election was composed largely of office-holders; very likely McDonald, Joyce, and a host of other whisky and official thieves were in the convention with stolen revenues in their pockets at the very time it was proclaiming that the Republican party "carefully collected and honestly applied the public revenue." What more did the platform of 1872 claim? It claimed that through the agency of the Republican party "a great financial crisis has been avoided and peace and plenty prevail throughout the land," and that "this glorious record of the past is the party's best pledge for the future." How did it keep the pledge? Why, the very next year, by its mismanagement, dishonesty, and corruption, it brought upon the country a financial crisis the like of which was unknown to this generation; claiming credit for having avoided a financial crisis, the very next year it brought one upon the country from the effects of which the people are still suffering and may never recover unless this party of false pretenses is driven from power.

Another resolution of the platform declared that "any system of the civil service under which the subordinate positions of the Government are considered rewards for mere party zeal is fatally demoralizing, and we therefore favor a reform of the system," and the party appealed to "its glorious record of the past as the party's best pledge" that it would make the reform. Here is an acknowledgment of the demoralizing effect of bestowing offices as rewards for party zeal and a promise of reform. How has the pledge been kept? Was there ever a time when office was so universally bestowed as a reward for party service as within the last four years? Did not the Republican leaders, as soon as the election of 1872 was over, openly scout the idea of civil-service reform, dismiss the commission appointed to devise rules for that purpose, and proclaim the present demoralized, corrupt system the best in the world? And yet my excellent friend, Carl Schurz, after this shameful violation of its plighted faith again and again by the Republican party, is now willing to take the promise of its candidate to the same office; as if it were possible for Gov. Hayes to introduce a reform which the party that elects him openly repudiates.

Another declaration of the party four years ago was that the "franking privilege ought to be abolished," and yet the Republican Senate at its last session voted to restore it.

In 1869 a Republican Congress declared that "the faith of the United States is also solemnly pledged to make provision at the earliest practicable period for the redemption of the United States notes in coin."

The party in its national convention in 1872 reiterated the declaration, and now, after all these years, having done nothing to carry out the pledge which it gave, it has the effrontery to come forward in 1876 and reiterate the promise, and, strange as it may seem, some sensible people who, like Gen. Schurz, saw and denounced the pledges of the Republican party four years ago as a sham and a cheat, now propose, after being deceived four years longer, to put faith in its promises. How any right-minded man can expect that a party which promised a speedy return to specie payments in 1869, and has done nothing in seven years to accomplish it, is still further to be trusted to bring it about, passes comprehension. Why, with the Republican party in power as now controlled, we will never have a reform of the civil service or a sound currency. We were nearer to specie payment in 1871, when gold went below 109, than we have ever been since. The promise of the Republican party speedily to restore specie payments is an empty cheat and has been a standing lie these seven years. I could go on multiplying instances of violations of faith by the Republican party the last five years, but I have said enough to show it to be a sham and a cheat. It is no more like the Republican party of fifteen or twenty years ago than is Satan since his fall to the angel that he was before. It is its record of the last five years with which we have to do, and not the glorious record of fifteen or twenty years ago, which it is now falsely seeking to appropriate. As was said by the Republican party which nominated Abraham Lincoln for the Presidency in 1860, so say I now: "That a return to rigid economy and accountability is indispensible to arrest the systematic plunder of the treasury by favored partisans, while the recent startling developments of frauds and corruptions at the national metropolis show that an entire change of administration is imperatively demanded."

Having given reasons satisfactory, as I think, why no honest, well-informed voter, and particularly no Liberal who denounced the corruptions of the Republican party in 1872, should now support it, the next question is, is there any other party whose candidates we can support?

THE PRESENT DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

The Democratic party of to-day is no more the same party known by that name in 1856 than is the Republican party of to-day what it was in 1856. The main issue between parties in 1856 has been settled, and settled forever. Neither the purposes, nor the persons comprising the political parties of 1876 are the same as they were in 1860. More than two-thirds of the population of the United States to-day were unborn or children under 15 years of age. This is shown by the census. What are the purposes of the present Democratic party? Unlike the Republican party it has not been on trial to the same extent the last five years, so that we can judge it by its acts; but it professes to be for reform, and for the observance of the constitution and laws. Are the professions put forth in good faith? We know by experience that the Republican party is false and faithless to its pledges, that it is thoroughly corrupt, and does not possess the power to reform itself. The Democratic or Opposition party may be no better, but we have some evidence that it is better. The present House of Representatives is in the Opposition or Democratic side if that suits anyone better. It has brought to light and exposed abuses, corruption and dishonesty in almost every branch of the public service, and thereby done much to correct them. This could never have happened had both branches of Congress been Republican, as the experience of 1871-2 shows. The Democratic House succeeded in reducing the expenses of the Government for this year about $30,000,000, and would have made a still larger saving but for the opposition of a Republican Senate. This great reduction was made by dispensing with numerous useless officers and refusing useless and unnecessary appropriations. So much good has already come from an opposition House during one session of Congress. I know it is charged that it was a Confederate House, and high officials when detected in prostituting their offices for mercenary and personal ends thought it a sufficient answer to reply that the villainy was exposed by a committee of Confederates, as if it were allowable to use official position for mercenary and selfish purposes, and steal the public moneys, provided no one but Confederates exposed the iniquity. A prominent candidate for the Presidency thought it a sufficient excuse for his disreputable acts when exposed, that the exposure was made by a committee consisting in part of persons who had been in the rebel army. And, strange as it may seem, the very fact that he charged that he had been detected and exposed by Confederates was given as a reason why he should receive the Republican nomination for President. He was extolled for the gallant manner in which he advanced upon the men who had exposed him, and compared to a knight of the olden time advancing lance in hand upon his enemies. Such a person was a fit candidate of all those who believe dishonesty in Republicans commendable unless they tell of it themselves. It is no wonder that a party controlled by such influences should drive honest men like Bristow, Jewell, Pratt, and others from office. I by no means intend to charge that all persons voting with the present Republican party are hypocrites, or that all officials are corrupt. Far from it. I believe the great body of the people of all parties are honest and mean to do right. Even in the Cincinnati Convention there were some few good men who tried to nominate Bristow, and save the party; but, as in the case of Sodom, there were not good men enough in the convention to save it. The machine politicians constituted five-sixths of the convention, but, being unable to agree among themselves, they nominated a good, easy gentleman, not of their number, as I understand, but whom they expect to control.

But have we any reason to suppose the Democratic party will be truer to its professions than the Republican? We have tried the Republican party for the last five years, and know it to be a delusion. Judged by its own standard, its "record" of the last five years, it is a fraud and a cheat. The Democratic party can do no worse. Nothing certainly will be lost by the change and much may be gained. Reform is its watchword, and we have the action of the House of Representatives, which with a hostile Senate and executive has accomplished great things in a single session. If Gov. Tilden is elected President, it will be in the power of his administration to bring about the reforms promised in the St. Louis platform, because the same vote which elects him will return to Congress members in accord with him. While if Gov. Hayes is elected President, however honest may be his intentions to purify the Government, reform the civil service, and restore a sound currency, he will have no power to do either because five-sixths of those elected with him, and who will control the party machine, are opposed, as we know by trial, to all such reforms. Suppose ye that the combination which nominated Hayes at Cincinnati, and to whom he will owe his success, if elected, who drove Bristow, Jewell, Pratt, and other honest men from office because they sought to purify the public service, will allow Hayes to investigate and turn out of office their thieving friends, who have used their positions and the public funds to continue the party in power? The election of Gov. Hayes will be but the continuation of the present order of things known as Grantism, and how any independent voter familiar with the fraud, deception, and shame of the party in power the last five years, can hope for anything else is a marvel. You might as soon expect to hatch chickens by setting a new hen on rotten eggs.

THE CANDIDATES.

I have said nothing of the personal qualifications of the representative candidates. They are both men of pure lives and high character, so far as I know. They have both had the confidence and respect of their fellow-citizens for many years. I make no account of the accusations started now for the first time since they have become candidates for the Presidency, by persons who delight in defamation, and who have been nosing through the records of the past twenty years to see whether they have always paid taxes upon all they possess. For my part I do not propose to be governed in the selection of chief magistrate for this great people by any such petty considerations; nor do I propose to lose sight of the corruption, usurpation, and dishonesty of the Republican party by reason of any such false clamor.

It is part of the tactics of the party in power, instead of undertaking to deny or explain away the evidences of its dishonesty and corruption, to reply by vilification and abuse of the men who make the exposure. Horace Greeley, the candidate of the reform party in 1872, a man of pure life and unblemished character and a patriot, was hounded to his death by the foulest of slanders and the most unmitigated of falsehoods. Charles Sumner was vilified, traduced, and abused by the party in power the moment he undertook to expose and correct its misdeeds. Carl Schurz, while advocating reform four years ago, was caricatured and held up to ridicule all over the country.

So now every man instrumental in exposing the iniquities of the party in power is set upon at once by its instruments, who do not hesitate to vilify, slander, and traduce him without stint, as if this was an answer or an excuse for the iniquities of the party. After the experience of four years ago, in witnessing the false accusations against Mr. Greeley and others advocating reform, it should seem that no sensible man ought to be misled by the personal attacks upon Mr. Tilden and his supporters. In intellectual capacity and form of character, I suppose it will hardly be questioned that Mr. Tilden is the superior of the Presidential candidates, and he has given some evidence of an ability and determination to expose iniquity and reform abuses by his exposure of the New York city and canal frauds, and by his course as Governor of New York, where, through his instrumentality chiefly, the State taxes were reduced to $8,000,000, or more than one-half in a single year. But I do not purpose to dwell upon the personal character of either of the candidates. One, if elected, will have it in his power to reform abuses, purify the public service, restore specie payments, and give peace and prosperity to the country. The other, however pure his motives, will have no power to control the party organization which elects him, and will be unable to carry out any of the promised reforms, and we shall simply have a perpetuation of Grantism for another four years, with all its attendant evils.

There are some persons who hesitate to support the Democratic ticket, lest its success should place the Government in the hands of the Confederates, as they are called. A few facts to be gathered from the census-tables ought to dispel all apprehension on that score. According to the census of 1870, 25,979,620 of the inhabitants of the United States, or more than 67 per cent. of the entire population, were under 30 years of age. It it is now 1876, more than fifteen years since the civil war broke out, and more than eleven years since it closed. Every person, therefore, now under 30 years of age, was unborn or under 15 in 1861, and a minor at the close of the war. Less than one-third of the population of the insurrectionary States are now over 30 years of age, or could, by any possibility, have taken part in the rebellion—of this one-third nearly half are colored persons, none of whom took part in the war against the Union, so that now, assuming that every white person, man, woman, and child, over 15 years of age in the rebel States when the war broke out, took part against the Union, they to-day constitute only about one-sixth of the population of the States in which they belong. What folly to talk about the Confederates or those who fought against the Government getting control through the ballot-box when all who could, by any possibility have taken part in the rebellion, constitute about one-sixth of the people of the late insurrectionary states, and less than a fifteenth of the population of the Union. It is by no means true that every white person in the rebel States, over 15 years of age, was a rebel. Nor is it true that those who engaged in the war against the Government now seek to destroy it. We have the testimony of Gen. Grant, given ten years ago, that "the thinking men of the South at that day accepted the then situation of affairs in good faith, and regarded slavery and State rights, or the right of a State to secede from the Union, as having been settled forever by the highest tribunal—arms—that man can resort to. But if this fraction of the people of the South, the survivors of the war of the rebellion, were still rebels, as the political demagogues going about the country flaunting the bloody shirt would make you believe, their numbers are too insignificant to create alarm. How manifest it is, when you come to look at facts and figures, that this cry of danger lest the Government fall into the hands of the Confederates, is a false alarm raised for the purpose of frightening timid voters from the support of men and measures which will drive thieves and plunderers from power and restore constitutional government.

I have endeavored to show you, fellow-citizens, that the Republican party of to-day is not composed of the same material, nor are its purposes and aims the same as the Republican party of fifteen or twenty years ago; that it is not the inheritor of the grand old principles which gave the party its fame, nor of anything belonging to it save its name; that it has degenerated and become venal and corrupt, and that there is no reason why any independent man should support or oppose it simply because it is called Republican.

I have endeavored to show you that the Democratic party of to-day is not composed of the same material, and does not have the same purposes and aims as the Democratic party of fifteen or twenty years ago; that it has inherited the name without any of the pro-slavery views which distinguished the party at that day, and that there is no reason why any independent man should support or oppose it simply because it is called Democratic.

I have endeavored to show that the Republican party of to-day is controlled by corrupt influences, and incapable of reforming itself; that the present Democratic party is avowedly for reform, and so far as it has had an opportunity to act has proved itself in earnest.

In the States of the South where it is in the ascendency, peace and good order obtain. It is for the people to determine which of these organizations they will support. The success of one involves a perpetuation of abuses, of corruptions, of malignity and hate—in a word of Grantism with all its attendant evils. The success of the other involves reform of abuses, constitutional government, peace and good will, and I trust better times.

INDEPENDENCE IN VOTING.

A Dispassionate Estimate of the Two Candidates.

Why Prof. Sumner, of Yale College, Cannot Support the Republican Nominee---Samuel J. Tilden's Genuine Statesmanship.

[From the New Haven Palladium.]

I observe that most of the public discussions turn upon the antecedents, the acts, and the characters of the one and the other party. These considerations have no force at all for my mind. I know my neighbors. One of them is a Republican by habit, and the other a Democrat by habit, and neither of them can define his party name. When, therefore, I read the descriptions that party newspapers and party orators give of the opposite party, I look around me for the demons who seek the national ruin, and I do not find them. I find neighbors, some of whom are under one banner and some under the other, but in their general tone and will and intentions those of one party are just as good and just as bad as those of the other. Especially when I remember that the social distribution of the two parties in the Northern States is exactly opposite to what it is in the Southern States, it seems to me that the national parties are very equally adjusted in regard to the social, intellectual and moral elements which they contain. Now, an historian or a foreigner, reading the accounts which the parties give of each other, must infer either that these accounts are all false, and that they simply constitute a depraved method of electioneering which obscures the issue and prevents the people from really using sound judgment, or else that they are all true, in which case the people of the United States are so unpatriotic, corrupt, disloyal, unjust, murderous and venal that it makes little difference what is the result of any political struggle.

I regard the good sense, sound patriotism and correct intention of the masses of the people in either party as substantially equal. I regard the evil elements in the parties as substantially equal, and I turn from my grounds of judgment to the consideration which I think genuine. I find these in men. I cannot trust a party. I can trust a man. I cannot hold a party responsible. I can hold a man responsible. I cannot get an expression of opinion which is single and simple from a party. I can only get that from a man. A party cannot have character, or conscience, or reputation. It cannot repent, nor endure punishment or disgrace. I know very well that we are in the habit of predicating all these things of parties, but I should think our experience had offered the fullest proof that we cannot properly predicate any of these things of a party, except in a half-metaphorical sense, under which all the sharpness and efficiency necessary to practical politics are lost. The proof is, at any rate, satisfactory to me.

I have no information other than what the newspapers have given, us all. From their story I do not see how any one can feel respect for the candidature of Gov. Hayes. It appears that Mr. Cameron was piqued because some members of his delegation violated a sacred political tradition and did not throw the State vote a unit, and he therefore refused to give the State vote as a unit for their candidate at the decisive moment. The Senatorial aspirants could not see the prize go to either one of their own number, and agreed only that it should not go to Blaine. These two things combined gave it to Hayes. I, at the time, expressed the opinion that this course of events, when one reflected that the business in hand was the selection of a chief magistrate of the nation, was a "farce." I did not then, and do not now deny the possibility that Hayes may be the man for the crisis. I cannot deny the possibility that, if you shake up the names of 8,000,000 voters in a box, and draw one by lot, you may get the one out of the 8,000,000 who is best fitted for the Presidency, but you are assumed to be rational beings, making a selection on rational grounds, and I think we did ourselves little credit on that occasion in that point of view. Some of the gentlemen there came home rejoicing and triumphing over the party machine. They defeated the machine in its first intention, but it doubled upon them with its well-known suppleness and activity. Mr. Hayes seems to be the creature of the machine, and to have no other public claim to the Presidency. He must feel that his selection is arbitrary, that he has everything yet to do to justify public confidence, that he is the recipient of an "honor." He cannot act with the assured independence of a man who has advanced by well-earned steps, to whom the Presidency comes as the highest trust at the end of a career, to whom it is less an honor than a recognition and a concession.

Mr. Tilden's nomination was opposed by all the worst elements of his party, and was supported by as honest, pure, and intelligent men as ever led in any political convention in this country. They were many of them young men, representing the hope, strength, faith, and purpose of the younger half of this generation, to which I turned long ago with all my confidence for the national future.

The question of the currency, to me, stands before any other. It appears to me that Mr. Tilden has shown a more correct, detailed, statesmanlike knowledge of the evil, the remedy and the process of cure than any other public man who is eligible.

I am, of course, utterly opposed to the repeal of the Resumption act or any part of it, and I disapprove of any concession on that point, in form or substance, by Mr. Tilden or anybody else.

I know that the soft-money Democrats have claimed that Mr. Tilden has surrendered on the currency question, and the Republicans have hastened to accept their authority as conclusive on that point. Mr. Tilden's opinions on this point are not new, nor were they first placed before the public in his letter, but if he does not in that document lay down hard-money doctrines, then language has no meaning, and I could not express hard-money doctrines myself. The soft-money men have, within a year or two, begun to use some hard-money phrases in forced, artificial, and impossible applications. They find those phrases in Mr. Tilden's letter, and that is the ground on which they claim his surrender.

Mr. Hayes has made a very distinct avowal that he will resist the repeal of the Resumption act unless something better is put in its place, and if he is elected I shall certainly await with generous confidence a fulfillment of that pledge. The difficulty is just the one which seems to me radical in his candidature. Between two candidates, one of whom is recommended to me on the opinion of his friends, the other of whom has a record of action and achievement, under my knowledge and inspection my most rational expectation of such a performance as I desire attaches to the latter.

I put next in the canvass the matter of administrative reform. Mr. Tilden has been Governor [illegible] has led in the demoralization of our politics since the beginning of the century. He has had the hardest position for beginning reform, perhaps, which there is in the Union. He has made the only positive and successful steps toward it, at the risk of his own political fortunes, which I know of in the country. The newspaper exposures of the Tweed ring would have made no more impression on that body than the pattering of rain on the hide of [illegible] and the [illegible] ring [illegible] stolen [illegible] Tilden [illegible] demonstration, available in a court of law. The canal ring fight is known to everybody.

I have in mind, however, not only these "reform" efforts, but also administrative reform. I will take a single case which floated in a paragraph through the newspapers, occasioning, so far as I ever saw, very little attention, but which had an immense effect on my mind, and which I have often urged in private conversation.

It was stated that the politicians of the Southern tier of counties of New York were bitterly hostile to Gov. Tilden. The reasons were given, two in number: 1. Mr. Tilden had refused to remove the Republican Superintendent of the asylum at Elmira in order to appoint a Democrat. 2. Mr. Tilden had removed, for cause, the Corporation Counsel of Elmira, who was a Democrat, although the Common Council of that city was Republican, and could elect a Republican successor. These were good grounds for the opposition of the "politicians," but they were an imperative demand on me, if I was an "independent," and meant what I had been talking about for years, to give him my full, hearty and efficient support if it ever came in my way.

That Mr. Tilden is politician enough to be available is only an advantage, since we cannot get an angel with a flaming sword, and I think that we independents have cast worse reproach upon ourselves than our most sarcastic critics, since we have failed to seize upon a chance which offered itself to our demand, and have chosen to trust to a groundless faith and a hope for which we cannot give a reason. In this latter light I must be allowed, without offense, to regard the support of Gov. Hayes.

I received a letter a while ago from a friend of Gov. Hayes, who declared that Gov. Hayes was a very modest man, whose modesty prevented him from accepting the United States Senatorship. I quote it as an instance of what seems to me wrong reasoning on these matters. If Gov. Hayes is such a man as is now claimed, it seems to me, he is just the man we have sadly needed in the Senate for the last few years, and, if he refused to go, he turned his back on the call of public duty. I do not deny his right to refuse, although in general I hold it sound doctrine that a man of good health and independent fortune ought to serve the State when duly and honorably selected; but if Mr. Hayes was ever to be a candidate for the Presidency, he ought to have pursued a public career in the subordinate places which opened to him; he ought to have allowed us to see him in those places, and he ought to have made a record on which we could form a judgment to-day, and not be thrown on the say-so of his friends. If he is to be elected, I shall certainly not prejudge him, nor allow any prejudice to rise in my mind; but when I look back on former cases in which the campaign enthusiasm has surrounded an untried man with a halo which has subsequently faded into something worse than obscurity, my imagination refuses to act.

Another point in this canvass which very deeply interests me is the condition and future of the South. The campaign seems to be turning more and more to that issue after all, and it seems to be found that distrust of rebels and the old war spirit are still so strong as to be the best available campaign capital. If that is to be so, then I must take sides against any further administration of the affairs of the South by the North acting through the General Government. I have had occasion within a year to review the whole history of reconstruction. The effect upon my mind has been shame and blame to myself for the share which I, as a Republican, have had in helping to build up the worst legislation of the nineteenth century. I have been shocked to realize by what successive stages we have built up here a system of restrictive and coercive legislation which very few Northern Republicans know in even its broadest features, and I can only recognize in disorder, riot, misrule, irresponsible official tyranny, industrial loss, the results of which have followed everywhere inevitably from coercive legislation enacted by one community against another. The Republican candidate for the Vice Presidency devoted his letter of acceptance almost exclusively to the Southern question. He believes that the Southern States are not civilized up to the standard of the Northern States, and he wants to bring them up. I agree with him that they are on a lower grade, but I submit that it is not his business nor ours to civilize them by any political measures.

I therefore desire now, as regards this political question, that the South be left to work out its own social problems under no arbitrary political coercion, but simply under the constraint of social and economic forces.

Finally, in regard to another matter which I have very much at heart, but which is hardly an active issue in the campaign, whatever hope there is for free trade lies in the election of Tilden.

If, then, a decision is forced upon me, I simply judge, on all the information I possess, that Mr. Tilden has more knowledge, ability, skill and will to do what I want to see done in politics than Mr. Hayes. Nevertheless, I am not called upon to bind or pledge myself in any way, and I hold myself free to take any course which may, upon further information or reflection, seem best. However the election may result, I shall be guided in my relations to the next administration entirely by the performances in regard to the matters I have here discussed.

W. G. SUMNER.

NEW HAVEN, Sept. 11, 1876.

A Lake Under the Soil.

At the Dickinson place, on Bullard creek, near Six-Mile Station, is a ten-acre field which is nothing more or less than a subterranean lake, covered with soil about eighteen inches deep. On the soil is cultivated a field of corn which will produce thirty or forty bushels to the acre. If any one will take the trouble to dig a hole the depth of the spade-handle he will find it to fill with water, and by using a hook and line fish four or five inches long may be caught. These fish are different from others in not having either scales or eyes, and are perch-like in shape. The ground is a black marl, alluvial in its nature, and in all probability at one time it was an open body of water, on which has accumulated vegetable matter, which has been increased from time to time, until now it has a crust sufficiently strong and rich to produce fine corn, though it has to be cultivated by hand, as it is not strong enough to bear the weight of a horse. While nooning, the field hands catch great strings of beautiful fish by merely punching a hole through the earth. A person raising on his heel and coming down suddenly can see the growing corn shake all around him. Any one having strength to drive a nail through this crust will find, on releasing it, that it will disappear entirely. The whole section of country surrounding this field gives evidence of marshiness, and the least shower of rain produces abundance of mud. But the question comes up, has not this body an outlet? Although brackish, the water tastes as if fresh, and we have no doubt but that it is anything else but stagnant. Yet these fish are eyeless and scaleless, similar to those found in caves. It is a subject for study, and we would like to have some of our "profound" citizens investigate it.—Montgomery (Ala.) Bulletin.

It seems that in December, 1863, Gov. Tilden, like the rest, made a return under oath of his income for the year 1862 That return showed that he received in 1862, subject to taxation under the law, a little over seven thousand dollars. In a suit now pending on behalf of the St. Louis, Alton and Terre Haute Railroad, the Governor swore that he received in 1862 twelve thousand dollars for services which was "commenced prior to the year 1859, and were rendered from time to time during a period of three years." These are the simple facts and the whole of them,, and on them the charge is made of perjury, "assuming or jumping over entirely the one further premise necessary for a conclusion—and that is, whether, under the law, the twenty thousand dollars received from a railroad should be included, while the instructions of Internal Revenue, Commissioner Lewis, issued at that time, state clearly and positively that it should not be included.

Judge Sinnott, of the superior court of New York, who was the managing lawyer in Tilden's office during the war, has, at the request of Mr. A. S. Hewitt, examined the items of Mr. Tilden's income in '72, and explodes in a sentence the absurd stuff fabricated by Decoy Bliss in the Zach Chandler organ. The delay in giving the statement to the public, Mr. Hewitt explains, was caused by the refusal of the Grant officials to make any response to the request for the documents in the department bearing on the income tax, though the Bliss paper was enabled to procure such documents to print in garbled form with interpolations of its own, intended dishonestly to convey the impression that they were official documents to justify its clumsy fabrications.

The statement of Judge Sinnott shows just what every man of any intelligence knew from the first, that Mr. Tilden paid his just dues in '62. That after that year he followed the law to the letter, and as his business was in a condition in which his receipts could not be readily ascertained, he paid on the valuation fixed by the collector, which was in many cases above his real income. The judge shows that the pretended amount of income dishonestly imagined and set forth in the Grant presses, were never received—with the exception of $1,000 which was counted in the income tax.

A more scandalous perversion of facts has never been fastened upon a public libeler than this brought home to the Bliss paper. The most abject confession it can make will not relieve it of the loathing and detestation of decent men. That the scoundrels who made up the pretended returns and the presses publishing them knew they were unmanly lies, there can be no shadow of a doubt, for without the authoritative refutation of Judge Sinnott, the very document from which the main staple of the invention came, the answer in the Terre Haute suit showed the exact status of the case. The indecent hypocrasy of the business is perhaps best shown in the rigorous seal put upon the records in Washington, so that the charge made up of threds and patches of fact and fiction may fill the public mind as though really covering a case where there is not the vestige of a fact in them. Mr. Tilden should have given himself no trouble. The charge now exploded, will be followed by something else equally as dispicable and baseless.

An Acute Case of Parallel Columns.

[N. Y. Times Sept. 8]	N. Y. Times Sep [illegible]
The False Income Return of Sam'l. J. Tilden—Some Items of the true Statement. Fees during the year from the Toledo & Wabash R. R. Co. $15,000	In Judge Sinnot's letter is it asserted that the Toledo & Wabash Railroad Com. never was a client of Mr. Tilden and that neither in 1862 nor at any other time did he receive any fees from it. THAT WE MUST ACCEPT AS CONCLUSIVE. Proof of our charge was promised from authorities in which we had confidence, but in its absence THAT ITEM MUST BE WITHDRAWN.

What can exceed the baseness of charging an eminent citizen with perjury upon mere rumor or malicious gossip about a transaction which never took place.

When President Grant entered office in 1869, the office holders on the civil list of the United States numbered 54,267. In 1874 they aggregated 94,119, being an increase of about forty thousand in six years only of Grant's administration. Many of these render no service to the country, but are merely political pensioners on the treasury, who, in return for the money they draw, are expected to work for the perpetuation in power of the corrupt Republican organization. It is this immense army of placemen who seek to usurp the control of our government, leaving the people no voice in the conduct of affairs. It is the officeholders who constitute and manage all Republican nominating conventions; it is the office holders who dictate the policy of the administration it is the officeholders who conduct political canvasses, and are relied upon to manipulate, and, if necessary, to falsify election returns. Mr. Hayes, in opposition to the old Democratic principle of rotation in office, which has always been held to the only effectual barrier to the creation of an officeholding aristocracy, proposes to give a life tenure of office to these men, and thus render them entirely independent of public opinion.—This will account for the enthusiasm they manifest for his election All of these officeholders, on the occasion of every important election, are compelled to contribute money for political purposes, and thus enormous corruption funds are raised to use against the people who wish to reform the Government.

William A. Wheeler as a Trustee.

From the New York Sun, Sept. 27,

Some time prior to 1860, William A. Wheeler, John S. Eldridge, of Boston, and Geo. W. Brown, of Odgensburg, were appointed trustees of the Ogdensburg, St. Lawrence and Lake Champlain Railroad. The annual salary of each trustee was fixed at five thousand dollars. In 1865 the stockholders of the company, realizing that the trustees were grossly mismanaging the road, instituted proceedings in the Supreme Court for their removal. In 1866 an order was granted by the Court, empowering the stockholders to reorganize the company. Mr. Wheeler, knowing that a reorganization would remove him, and learning that under the code of practice in this State no appeal could be taken from the order of the court, secured the passage through the Legislature of an amendment to the code of procedure that rendered such orders appealable. Armed with a copy of the law, he threatened to appeal from the order unless the stockholders would compromise with him by paying to him and his co-trustees $20,000 each, their salary for four years. The stockholders desirous of getting rid of the trustees, and unwilling to submit to the delay consequent on an appeal from the order consented to Mr. Wheeler's terms, and paid him and his associates $60,000. After the company had been re-organized, a suit was brought against Messrs. Wheeler, Eldridge and Brown, to recover the $60,000. One of the company's counsel was Edwin Pierrepoint. The Justice before whom the case was brought was a relative of one of the trustees, and it was therefore removed to the United States Supreme Court, where it is still pending. Since the suit was begun Mr. Eldridge and Mr. Brown have died.

Where the Money Comes From.

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 30, 1876.

SIR: The approaching Presidential Campaign will be warmly contested and will call for the earnest efforts and efficient aid of all Republicans.

The National and Congressional committees will endeavor by effective speakers, the circulation of documents and other legitimate means, to promote through organization, an active canvass and a successful result in November, and will be glad to receive such contributions in aid of the contest in behalf of Hayes and Wheeler as the friends of the cause may feel desirous and willing to contribute.

"Remittances may be made to Jacob Tome, (of the Citizens National Bank,) Treasurer of Republican Congressional Committee, Washington, D. C., for which acknowledgment will be returned.

"Very Respectfully,
E. CHANDLER.
"Chirman Republican Committee

"SEC.—That all executive officers or employes of the United States, not appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, are prohibited from requesting, giving to or receiving from any other office or employ of the Government, any money or property, or other thing of value for political purposes; and any such officer or employee who shall offend against the provisions of this section shall be at once discharged from the service of the United States; and he shall also be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $500.

"1. It is seen from the above that all officers appointed by the President, by the advice and consent of the Senate, are exempted from the provisions of the law.

"2. That in its application to other officers or employes, of the executive branches of the Government not so appointed, the law simply prohibits one officer or emplyee from paying to or receiving from any officer or employee of said branch of the Government any money, property or other thing of value for political purposes.

"Committees will be glad to receive from you $30 or more, according as your inclination and ability may lead you to contribute.

"It is particularly desired that in responding to this letter the Date and Name of the Writer, together with his address and Official Position, should be written Clearly and Legibly, in order that credit may be properly given."

Accompaning these papers is a stamped envelope bearing the address.

"JACOB TOME, Washington, D. C.

If we take $30 as the average amount of the assessment, we have $2,550,000 raised from 85,000 office-holders alone.

To show that the peculiar wording of this law and the peculiar use made of it are the result of a plot matured some time ago, we need only go back to the action of the last Congress taken to secure purity of elections. When the bill prohibiting political assessment of office-holders was reported to the House and strenuously passed by Mr. Blaine, of Maine, at once offered an amendment similar to the British law applying to members of Parliament, by which it was made illegal for Senators or members of the House to contribute to election funds, or to receive such contributions. The object of Blaine's hypocritical move was to kill the bill, but Mr. Caulfield accepted the amendment, and the Democratic House passed the law. Under its provisions not a dollar could be collected from any office-holder for political purposes. It struck consternation into the hearts of the Radical leaders, who had already matured their plans of corruption, and were determined not to be blacked in the execution of it. For nearly three months the Senate took no action on the bill; at the very end of the session, it was sent to the House amended in such a manner as to render it inoperative, as the circular above explains, thus proving that it was so amended with a view to the details of the villainous scheme they had already concocted. They managed to appear as the advocates of reform, while preparing the means of official plunder. But their cunning has overreached itself Their devices have only resulted in making their lawlessness more plain, and the manhood of the American people will revolt at and resent their sneaking vallainy. It is time for the downfall of the party that blackmails the people's servants to corrupt the ballot-box.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

DURING a fight between a number of Molly Maguires, near Plymouth, Pa., a few nights ago, John Brannigan, Peter McNamara, and Bradley O'Neil were clubbed and stoned to death. The tragedy occurred near where the O'Donnell family were murdered some time ago. The occurrence has created intense excitement. Although the murderers were pursued, they managed to escape.... Jacob Huntzinger, late President of the Miners' Trust Bank of Pottsville, Pa., has been arrested on five distinct charges, covering alleged misdemeanors by false pretenses and embezzlement to the extent of upwards of $200,000. He was sent to jail in default of $225,000 bail.

BURGLARS entered the store of Franklin Horton, No. 42 Fulton street, New York, a few nights ago, broke open the safe and secured $20,000 worth of jewelry. No arrests....A horrible domestic tragedy was enacted in New York city the other night. Julius Blank, a blind professor of music, residing on the top floor at No. 201 West Thirty-third street, shot his wife, Mary, inflicting a mortal wound. He also shot his child, Amelia, 3½ years old. She died soon after. He then shot himself, the shot killing him instantly.

A CONVENTION of women, lasting three days, was held in Philadelphia last week, Prof. Maria Mitchell presided, and Alice C. Fletcher acted as Secretary. This is the fourth Congress held under the same auspices, its object being to meet a pressing demand for an interchange of thought and harmony of action among women interested in the advancement of their own sex....

IN a drunken row last week, at Taylorsville, a suburb of Scranton, Pa., Ruse James killed a saloon-keeper, Edward James, and a man named Cernew, by stabbing them with a jack-knife.

THE WEST.

THE amusement outlook in Chicago is more peculiar than at the beginning of any season since the city laid claim to metropolitan taste and experience. The efforts of the past toward building up several houses for the drama have now all condensed themselves to a single, substantial focus, and McVicker's Theater is the only legitimate Thespian haunt in the city. This veteran institution has outlived a score of years and double that number of rivals, and starts in for the season of 1876-7 stronger and better than ever.... The delay in carrying into effect the order for disarming and dismounting the Indians at Cheyenne Agency has resulted in the unprovoked murder of the Rev. Mr. Fennell, in Episcopal missionary. He was shot through the heart and head by a fiendish redskin who had been confined in the guard-house for some misdemeanor, and had sworn to take revenge on the first white man he met after his release.... The large and extensive establishment in Toledo, Ohio, known as the Milburn Wagon Works, was destroyed by fire last week. Over 1,000 finished wagons, besides a large number of unfinished ones, were burned. The loss is about $400,000, on which there is an insurance of $135,000. Several of the firemen narrowly escaped death from falling walls, and one had an arm broken. This disaster throws about 350 men out of employment. The fire is supposed to have been caused by spontaneous combustion.

A TERRIBLE explosion of a threshing-machine boiler occurred in Marshall county, Ind., a few days ago. Thomas Jones, aged 12, was blown 100 feet, his clothes torn off, and himself instantly killed. Thomas Wort, aged 24, band-cutter, died soon after; he leaves a wife and three children. William W. Johnson, aged 22, was thrown 100 feet, and died. William Hughes, aged 35, was blown 110 feet, his right leg broken, and his body badly scalded; he will probably die. David Logan's skull was fractured and one of his arms broken. A number of other persons were maimed and bruised in a shocking manner. The boiler was thrown 200 feet, striking the separator and going over a stack twenty feet high in its flight. Fragments of iron and wood were scattered in circuit of 170 feet.

A horrible gallows scene was enacted at Coshocton, Ohio, last week. The victim was Henry Ept, who, in November last, murdered Abraham Wurthsimer, of that place. "At 1 o'clock," writes a correspondent, describing the tragedy, "the lever was touched and the drop fell. Then followed a horrid and repulsive scene. The drop had not killed the unhappy man, nor was the noose strangling him. His body swung to and fro violently. From his lips came terrible moans and cries. He frantically struggled to free his limbs. His agonies continued. The witnesses of the execution turned sick at the awful scene. Finally the platform was brought back to its place, and the poor victim of an executioner's bungling work was drawn upon it, and the rope readjusted, the poor half-strangled wretch groaning and wailing and begging not to be hanged again, all this while held in the arms of the officials and waiting another attempt. Four minutes from the time of the first fall the half-killed man was launched into the air again. This time the rope and the fall accomplished the law's decision. The man's neck was broken, and the poor fellow died without a struggle."

THE Springfield (Ill.) Register of the 2d inst. says: "By the crop reports for Sept. 11, received at the office of the State Board of Agriculture, it appears that the prospect for corn is better by about 10 per cent. than on Aug. 11, the date of the last previous report. According to the estimates the crop in this State will be about 270,000,000 bushels, or about 78 per cent. of a full crop."

MISS LAURETTE YOUNGER, who is described as a prepossessing young lady of 20 years, paid a visit to her brothers, in jail at Faribault, Minn., last week. "On first going to the jail," says a St. Paul paper, "she went straight to Jim Younger, who was lying inside the cell with his head close to the bars, through which she kissed him repeatedly, sobbing and shrieking the while, saying, 'Oh, Jim, this is too bad. If it had not been for Bob and Cole you would never have been here. They've enticed you to this. Oh! dear brother, what shall I do now? There's no one to care for me when you're gone. Oh! what shall I do?' Cole was uneasy when he heard she was coming to him. She bowed, shaking hands, but speaking no word except of greeting, and to Bob the same. They have always said Jim was the pet of the family, and appeared more anxious about his condition than their own."

ELBERT A. WOODWARD, the Clerk of the old New York Board of Supervisors, under the Tweed regime, who has been wanted for several years, was arrested at the Palmer House, in Chicago, last week. He was traveling under the assumed name of A. Wallace, and represented himself as an Englishman. Woodward was Tweed's confidential man in the division of the proceeds of the ring thieving, and was deeply involved in all the rascalities of the ring. He has been taken back to New York to answer for his crimes....The Chicago Tribune reports "the freight business on the various roads leading to the East has greatly picked up during the last week or two, and an immense amount of grain is going forward. There has been no change in rates—20 cents per 100 pounds still being charged on grain to New York. These rates, however, are not strictly maintained, and it is known that contracts are being made as low as 16 cents per 100 pounds to New York."

THE Chicago papers report that the great religious movement in that city, under Mr. Moody's ministrations, is increasing daily. The immense tabernacle, with a seating capacity of 10,000 or 12,000, is filled every evening, and thousands are turned away for whom there is not even standing room....Chicago elevators, as per official figures, contain 1,185,419 bushels of wheat; 1,745,142 bushels of corn; 365,402 bushels of oats; 120,347 bushels of rye, and 470,588 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 3,876,848 bushels, against 3,332,096 bushels at this period last year.

THE SOUTH.

ADVICES from Northern and Northwestern Texas report a grasshopper invasion. In some counties they are destroying vegetation. Wheat-sowing is to be delayed until it is ascertained whether the 'hoppers will remain long enough to deposit their eggs.

A SPECIAL from San Antonio, Texas, to the Galveston News says a detachment of Capt. McNelley's company under Sergt. Armstrong attacked a party of outlaws on Espantosa lake, near Eagle Pass, killed five, wounded one, and captured fifty horses and a large number of cattle.

A KILLING frost, extending as far southward as Vicksburg and Shreveport, spread over the Southern country on the night of Oct. 2. The tobacco throughout Western Kentucky and Tennessee is badly nipped and seriously injured. The tobacco prospect, previously very unfavorable, is cut short more than one-third by this calamity. The cotton crop is mature and will not be hurt. It is the earliest frost experienced in the South for eleven years.

THE thirty-first annual meeting of the National Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows (colored) was held at Memphis last week. Forty-six delegates were in attendance.

WASHINGTON.

THE mints are now running to their full capacity to supply the demands for subsidiary silver coin. Last week $500,000 was received from Russia to be converted into American gold coin. There is an active demand for silver for export to China.

THE trial of Gen. O. E. Babcock on the safe-burglary indictment was brought to a conclusion last week. The jury, after an absence of two hours, rendered a verdict of not guilty.

A. B. MULLETT, former Supervising Architect of the Treasury, has been appointed by Secretary Morrill to superintend the construction of the public buildings now in process of building throughout the country....Hon. Philip B. Fouke, formerly a Representative in Congress from Illinois, and a warm personal and political friend of the late Stephen A. Douglas, died in Washington last week.

THE total coinage at the mints during September was $7,000,000, including $4,500,000 in gold coin, $500,000 in trade dollars, and $2,000,000 subsidiary silver....The Comptroller of the Currency has called for reports from the national banks, showing their condition at the close of business on Monday, the 2d inst.

GENERAL.

BETTER prices are expected for American grain because of the short crop in England. The market in New York, says the Tribune, shows the effect already, but happily there is no wild speculation started, and the improvement in prices promises to be of a substantial character.

THREE men fell from the scaffolding of a church in Montreal last week. One was instantly killed, and the other two fatally injured....James Lick, the San Francisco millionaire, breathed his last in that city on the 1st inst., leaving in trust for various public, patriotic, and charitable purposes a sum estimated at $5,000,000.

"LEAVE your trunks at home" is a suggestion of Philadelphia newspapers to the multitude about to depart to the Centennial Exhibition. Mountains of trunks rise in every railroad depot, and travelers are frequently delayed in obtaining them. A hand valise is far preferable. The fashionable garment in the Exhibition and on the streets is the one every person has worn in traveling.

THE annual session of the National Pork-Packers Association was held at Indianapolis last week. About a dozen Western and Southern States were represented....James K. Hill, one of the Indiana whisky ring, who was sentenced to two and a half years' imprisonment in the penitentiary, has been pardoned by the President....The steamer Leopard, at St. Johns, Newfoundland, reports the loss of thirty-seven fishing vessels, with their cargoes, on the Labrador coast. No lives reported lost.

A PASSENGER train on the Great Western railway of Canada ran off the track with fatal results near Paris, Ont., a few days ago. The train rolled down a high embankment, the baggage car took fire, and in a very short time it, together with two passenger coaches, was consumed. Driver Cooper, fireman Irving, baggageman Wright, express-messenger Andrews, and a man supposed to be named McBride, in the employ of Hendrie & Co., at Detroit, and who was riding in the baggage car at the time of the accident, were killed. None of the passengers were hurt, beyond a few scatches.

POLITICAL.

THE Republicans of the Fifth Massachusetts District have renominated Gen. Banks for Congress. Dr. George B. Loring has been nominated in the Sixth District, formerly Butler's. His Democratic opponent is Thompson, the present member. In the Seventh District there are three candidates, namely, Gen. Butler, the regular Republican nominee; Judge Hoar, nominated by dissatisfied Republicans; and Mr. Tarbox, the Democratic nominee.

FOREIGN.

DURING the suspension of active hostilities in Mexico the Government is reorganizing the army, in the hope that the next battle will be the last and end the revolution. Yet it is never the last revolution in Mexico, but always the latest. Still, that progress has been made in that country since the expulsion of the French aroused national pride cannot be denied. The Congress is now in session, and it is probable that arrangements will be made for the payment of a part of the English claims.... The misery which the Cubans apprehended will extend throughout their island is painfully apparent at Puerto Principe. In this inland city, which once enjoyed great prosperity, real estate is almost valueless, and 4,000 impoverished people are fed at the public expense. Heedless of this ruin, the Spaniards are sending more troops to the island and erecting coast defenses at Cienfuegos against some imaginary foe.... Reports received in England confirm the settlement of difficulties between England and China, growing out of the Yunnan murders. The British Minister, Wade, and the Chief Foreign Secretary of China have signed a convention disposing of the case....Hostilities have been resumed between Turkey and Servia, the latter having rejected the proposed extension of the armistice....Sir Thomas White has been elected Lord Mayor of London.

THE 142 stonemasons who sailed from New York to Scotland have arrived and been set to work on the new parochial buildings at Greenock. They get ten pence an hour, and are guaranteed work for two years....The Pope is again grievously ill....Armed Russians continue to pour into Servia by the thousands. ....A cable dispatch announces the death of the great German sculptor, Ernst Von Bandel, the founder of the colossal statue of Arminius which was placed upon the summit of the Teutoburger Wald last August, amid the rejoicings of the whole German people, and which spread his name and fame far and wide. He was born May 17, 1800....A ferry boat was recently swamped in Youghal Harbor, Ireland, and nineteen persons, nearly all farmers and their wives, were drowned.

THE Servian army has again been overwhelmingly defeated by the Turkish forces near Alexinatz. The London Times' correspondent at the Turkish headquarters telegraphs, under date of Oct. 3: "Thursday's battle, both as regards the losses and numbers engaged, was decidedly the greatest in the whole war. In the front, towards Moravia, the Servian attack was merely directed against the Turkish bridge. The main attack was against the Turkish left wing, under Hafeiz and Ali Pasha, to order to cut off the Turkish retreat to Nisch. Sixteen Servian battalions also crossed the Moravia at Drashevco, and advanced by way of Jesica against the Turkish right, under Fazli Pasha. This double flank movement completely failed, and the Servians, by noon, were driven back at all points with great loss. They subsequently renewed the attack against the Turkish left three times, but were on every occasion repulsed with great loss. A dispatch from Berlin says that "considerable portions of the Russian army have received orders to be ready for immediate concentration. Cavalry and field artillery are now on a war footing, and the infantry are ready to march."

A CORRESPONDENT at Constantinople telegraphs to a New York paper that the situation there is really critical. The incendiary character of the articles in the public prints, he thinks, renders it urgent that an American fleet be sent to the Bosphorus to protect the lives and property of Americans....A Vienna dispatch says there are now 7,000 Russian volunteers in Servia, including 1,800 officers, and 3,000 more volunteers are enlisted....The Emperor of Russia has written a letter to the Emperor of Austria, in which he declares himself still in favor of peace. If Russia should eventually intervene, it would only be with the entire agreement of the powers, and that intervention in any case would be preceded by a conference.

ANOTHER unsuccessful attempt has been made to assassinate the President of Hayti.... The failure of the fish yield in Iceland has caused much suffering and privation, and many of the people are emigrating to Canada....Russia offers to compel Servia's submission to the will of the great powers, if England and Austria will induce Turkey to agree to a truce. On the strength of this promise, England urges the Sultan to agree to an armistice for twenty days. The Turkish Government pretends to be apprehensive of popular violence, if terms not satisfactory to the people are agreed to, but it is suspected that there is little reality in this pretense. Nevertheless, the position of foreigners in Constantinople is decidedly unpleasant, on account of the prevalent religious excitement, and there is a general disposition among them to get out of the way of possible developments.

LATE news from Cuba is to the effect that the insurgents are beginning an aggressive campaign that foreshadows trouble to the Spanish authorities the coming winter. There are heavy desertions among the Spanish troops, which are exposed to privations and misery, whilst a great many officers who walk the streets of Havana appear to be living well. It is said that the Government intends not to harass the troops any longer, but garrison all places, and use the soldiers to arrive from Spain to protect all estates during the next crop. This policy would only increase starvation and strengthen the insurgents, whose cause would gain immensely by another fruitless winter campaign.

A Runaway Locomotive.

Last Monday, at noon, the locomotive on the Smyrna Branch railroad ran away and nearly killed itself. After bringing the noon train into town, and after Engineer McConaughy had started to dinner, the fireman, John Shorts, cut the locomotive loose from the car to shift it to the other track. He turned on steam, and as he did so the pin fell out of the throttle bar. He could not shut her off after that, and away she went at break-neck speed through Commerce street to Clayton. Shorts made a perilous leap from her as she whizzed by Union street and saved himself, though he was flopped over and over in the dusty street when he struck the ground. In just about one minute from the time Shorts "pulled out the stopper" here the locomotive was a ruined mass at Clayton. The distance between the two points is one mile and a quarter. As quick as possible a telegram was sent to Clayton to "switch her off," but she beat the telegram by about two lengths, and had spread herself pretty well over the depot ground when the dispatch reached there. She did not obey the curve at Clayton at all, but shot off in a straight line across the grounds. She jumped off with such force as to throw herself flat on her side, and in this condition she smashed into the platform along the main track, near the north end of the depot. She slid along sideways for 100 yards or more, snapping bolts and rods as if they were ropes of sand. Her wheels that were uppermost whizzed round like a top, and the raging steam hissed like mad from every aperture. Fortunately the exhaust pipe broke, or she might have burst her boiler. The whole affair was over almost as quick as a wink.—Smyrna (Del.) Times.

Arctic Voyagers.

The British Admiralty have a letter from Allan Young, the commander of the steamer Pandora, making a voyage to Smith's sound to bring to England dispatches deposited there by the Arctic expedition under Capt. Nares. It announces his arrival at Upernavik on the 18th of July. He reports all well on board, and says that he would proceed northward July 19. The winds during the summer had been from the southward, and were therefore not calculated to clear the ice from Melville bay, but, as far as was visible from Upernavik, the sea was clear. There was no news of the Arctic expedition.

Served 'em Right.

The managers of the New York State Fair lost money this year, and men who bought the privilege of selling certain articles were not repaid for their ventures. The chief cause of the loss was the placing of the admission fee at 50 cents. Hundreds of farmers who had come with their teams many miles refused to pay the price demanded and returned home. On the last day the price was reduced to 25 cents, but this action was too late to be of benefit.

LINCOLN.

Some More of Ex-Secretary Welles' Reminiscences.

[From the Springfield Republican.]

Mr. Welles is writing his papers on Abraham Lincoln in the Galaxy to show that Mr. Lincoln, notwithstanding his jesting remark, had a good deal of "influence with the administration," and was, in fact, most resolutely personal in his action. It will be valuable inside history of those times. In the October number, he describes the embarrassment and difficulty the President and heads of departments suffered in the matter of Federal offices. In that immediate and most perplexing strait of the nation's life, "a host of ravenous partisans, from Maine to California—a large proportion of them Whigs, long excluded from office—filled Washington, and, backed by their Senators and Representatives, besieged the White House and departments, demanding for themselves or their friends the local appointments, regardless of the patriotism or merits of the incumbents." Mr. Welles observes that the Secretary of the Navy made fewer removals than the rest; many secessionist officials had resigned and gone and he felt it necessary to retain as many experienced persons as possible. But one of those he kept proved treacherous. But, such a hullaballoo was raised about the eccentric behavior on Mr. Welles' part—which was charged to the fact that he had been a Democrat, and naturally didn't like to turn Democrats out—that the President felt compelled to ask him to remove a very few clerks; one in each navy bureau and one in the department proper. President Lincoln had a more difficult task in this respect than Presidents commonly have, for great changes were absolutely necessary, yet never were care and deliberation so imperative. Mr. Welles gives a very interesting account of Mr. Lincoln's construction of his Cabinet. He treats Mr. Seward's character severely with regard to his optimism, and still more with regard to his attitude toward the rebellious South; declaring him ready "to acquiesce in almost any change of the fundamental law itself to get over a difficulty." He was prepared to surrender Sumter and other forts in the seceding States, and to call a national convention to revise the constitution and reconstruct the Government. Mr. Chase was completely depressed and despairing, at this time, but did not share in Seward's views. He considered reconciliation impossible, civil war "a despotic exercise of power," and the best thing to do was to allow the States to withdraw. The other members of the Cabinet were a unit for every means to maintain the Union. Mr. Lincoln listened to each, but forebore to commit himself, with marvelous sagacity using all, refusing none, watching events, feeling the public pulse, and deciding at last with entire independence.

Bulgarians Starving to Death.

The correspondent of the London News writes as follows of the atrocities at Klissura: "But the dead are less to be pitied than the living. They have been reduced from ease and comfort to the condition of wild animals—without a home, without shelter, without bedding, almost without clothing, and living on what food they can pick up from day to day. There are women here who have known comfort, who are weak and ill, and who have three and four little mouths to feed. They go out in the fields, reap enough wheat for the day's food, painfully thrash it out with their hands, pound it into flour between two stones, and bake it into bread for their little ones day by day; and sleep, like the foxes in the corner of a ruined wall, on a little straw at night. There are little children here, haggard and thin and sickly, sleeping almost on the bare ground, and when it rains, on the wet ground. Nobody who has not seen it can imagine the misery caused by the burning of a village. The most systematic and conscientious pillage is a mere trifle as compared to it. The people in the case of pillage still have a roof over them; they still have their hearths and their fireplaces; they still have their homes, in short, though stripped and denuded. After everything valuable has been taken, there remains in every household a mass of objects that are not worth carrying away—bedding, clothing, furniture, cooking utensils, even food, among which the family will find enough to replace, however poorly, whatever has been taken, enough for the first necessities of civilized life. But if, after pillage, the match is applied, these homes are annihilated; these poor worn-out objects—the cast-off clothing, the ragged bedding, the broken cooking utensils, which are so worthless and yet so precious, are all consumed, and the people are reduced to the condition of wild animals.

The Hog Product.

It is noticed as a matter of considerable importance to Wisconsin and Minnesota, in view of the fact that the wheat product is something of a failure, that the hog product is one of the largest ever known in the country.

Last year the number of hogs packed did not exceed 181,972. The number during the previous year was 248,197. From the statements made by the largest packing establishments in Milwaukee, it is estimated that there will be not less than 300,000 hogs of the finest quality packed during the ensuing season in this city. Messrs. Plankinton & Armour informed a reporter this morning that the product is the largest and of the best quality ever raised in the Northwest, and that the facilities for fattening were never so good.

The abundance of the corn crop will be found to be a great aid in fitting the pork for market, and between this and the extra production of hogs the agriculturist is likely to be fully compensated for all loss on his wheat crop. As Milwaukee contains some of the largest packing houses in the country, this intelligence is of particular importance to us. Of course, one effect of this will be to cheapen the price of pork.—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

How He Trapped Her.

A gentleman who was obliged to ride over the Woonsocket branch of the New York and New England railroad, and had been greatly annoyed by having packages stolen from him in the cars, concluded to trap the thief. He procured a long, striped snake, put him in a collar box, and, on entering the cars, laid it on the seat beside him. Soon a portly old lady came puffing into the car and took a seat beside the gentleman in question, who was apparently absorbed in reading an evening paper. It wasn't long before the box disappeared under her shawl, and her curiosity soon led her to open the box to look at her prize, and the snake glided into her lap. The scene can better be imagined than described, but that man never lost any more packages.

Vagaries of Silver.

The attempts of the political economists to ascertain why silver is bobbing up and down, as though it were quicksilver, are not helped by any recent statistics. It has been supposed, for instance, that the great production of the Nevada mines caused the decline in silver; but the latest returns show that while in the first eight months of 1875, we exported to England silver to the value of £9,060,000; in the first eight months of 1876, we sent thither only £1,901,000 worth. It was said again that the failure of the demand in India caused the decline; but in 1875 England exported to British India £2,809,000 worth of silver, and in 1876, £4,547,000 worth—a great deal more, that is to say.

The Silver Commission, appointed by Congress, has not yet got fairly to work. The public will look for its conclusions with great curiosity; but we note, meantime, a singular recommendation in a London journal that the United States shall demonetize gold and make silver the only standard of legal value. The English, although they have demonetized silver, are naturally anxious to keep it in use as a part of the coin of the world, because it is the only standard of value in British India; and the fall in the price of silver has already caused very serious commercial troubles in India, and even threatens, if it continues, to produce industrial disorganization. Hence, we may suppose, their anxiety that we shall not demonetize silver, and the suggestion that we should rather make it the only standard. If we did this no doubt it would temporarily relieve the panic.—New York Herald.

The Late Dr. Winship.

The demise of Dr. George B. Winship, of Boston, at the early age of 42 years, removes the most celebrated liftist of the century. In early life he was weaker than the average of young men, and subject to infirm health. As such he entered college in 1850, but soon after, being grossly insulted by a student whom he was unable to chastise on the spot, he was so angry with himself that he resolved to gain strength enough to do it or die. Accordingly he entered Peter Stewart's private gymnasium, and went into training under that colored disciple of the famous English Bendigo, and Pete in due time, brought out his muscles to his own astonishment. Visiting his former antagonist, he coolly informed him he could apologize for that former insult or be handsomely thrashed, and the fellow came down with a handsome apology, and peace continued. Winship discovered that certain parts of his body needed strengthening, and that lifting only could do it. Accordingly he organized a lifting exercise, which he used regularly for many years, till he reached the enormous result of raising 2,700 pounds from the ground by his own powerful strength. Out of his experiments has grown the present system of health-lifting. Dr. Winship probably carried lifting too far, for some time ago he began to be afflicted with incipient paralysis, which has increased in spite of all remedies, and he has fallen at last, as do most all athletes who forget that caution is the parent of safety. He leaves only a wife.—Fall River (Mass.) News.

A California Incident.

Such incidents as the following are still common in stage-coach traveling in California: "The coach contained eight men and four women, all unarmed. When the coach reached a part of the road lined by a thick growth of brush, in which it is impossible to turn a loaded wagon or even a light one, two men sprang up and commanded the driver to stop and throw out the express boxes. Both of the men wore white cloths under their hats, one end being thrown up over the front of the hat and the other, with eye-holes, covering the face. One man, held a double-barreled shot gun, aimed at the driver, and the other at the body of the coach where the passengers mostly were. After a short parley two boxes of treasure were thrown out, and the driver was compelled to drive on, the shot gun covering him until he was hidden by a turn in the road."

Her Feet.

"George, my darling George, promise me one thing," said the young bride of a month, as she threw her arms around her husband's neck and gazed anxiously into his face. "What is it, precious?" he asked, as he drew her to his bosom. "Promise me, George, dear, that you will not become a Presidential candidate."

"Why, my dear, that is asking a good deal," and his countenance darkened. "There are Jones, Smith, Brown, and, in fact, all the best people—they are candidates. You want me to be somebody, don't you?"

"Yes, yes, George, I do, I do," said the wife, bursting into tears; "but all the newspapers will tell how big my feet are, and you know folks never think that anybody's feet may be good shaped if they are large."

The Pressure of Sunlight.

Prof. Clark Maxwell says: "The mean energy in one cubic foot of sunlight is about 0.0000000882 of a foot-pound, and the mean pressure on a square foot is 0.0000000882 of a pound weight. A flat body exposed to sunlight would experience this pressure on its illuminated side only, and would therefore be repelled from the side upon which the light falls. Calculated out, this gives the pressure of sunlight equal to about two and a half pounds per square mile. Between the two and a half pounds deduced from calculation and the fifty-seven tons obtained from experiment the difference is great, but no greater than is often the case between theory and experiment."

INDIAN ELOQUENCE.

Spotted Tail's Oration to the Commissioners, Upon the Signing of the New Treaty of Peace.

You have come to visit our land, and we now ask you how many years there are for us to live. My friends, you who are before me are traders, are merchants. You have come here to trade; you have not come here to turn anything out of the way without payment for it. When a man has a possession that he values, and another party comes to buy it, he brings with him such good things as he wishes to purchase it with. My friends, your people have both intellect and heart. You use them to consider in what way you can do the best to live. My people who are here before you are precisely the same. I see that my friends before me are men of age and dignity, and men of that kind have good judgment, and consider well what they do. I wish that you were here to consider well what shall be good for my people for a long time to come. I think each of you has selected somewhere a good piece of land for himself, with the intention to live on it, that he may raise his children. My people are not different. They also live upon the earth and the things that come to them from above. We have the same thoughts and desires in that respect that white people have. This is the country where they were born, where they have acquired all their property, their children, and their horses. You have come here to buy this country of us, and it would be well if you would come with the goods you propose to give us, and to put out your hand so that we can see the good price you propose to pay for it. Then our hearts would be glad. My people have grown up together with these white men, who have married into our tribe. A great many of us have learned to speak their language, and our children are with them in our school, and we want to be considered all one people with them. My friends, when you go back to the Great Father, I wish you to tell him to send us goods. Send us yokes of oxen, and give us wagons, so that we can earn money by hauling goods from the railroad. This seems to me to be a very hard day. Half our country is at war, and we have come upon very difficult times. This war did not spring up here in our land. It was brought upon us by the children of the Great Father, who came to take our land from us without price, and who do a great many evil things. The Great Father and his children are to blame for this trouble. We have here a storehouse to hold our provisions, but the Great Father sends us very little provisions to put in our storehouse, and when our people become displeased with our provisions and have gone north to hunt, the children of the Great Father are fighting them. It has been our wish to live here peaceably, but the Great Father has filled it with soldiers, who think only of our death. Some of our people who have gone from here in order that they may have a change, and others who have gone north to hunt, have been attacked by the soldiers from this direction, and when they have got north they have been attacked by the soldiers from the other direction; and now, when they are willing to come back, the soldiers stand between them, and keep them from coming home. It seems to me there is a better way than this. When people come to trouble, it is better for both parties to come together without arms, talk it over, and find some peaceful way to settle it. You have mentioned to me two countries. The Missouri river country I know. When we were there we had a great deal of trouble. I left hundreds of my people buried there. The other country I have never seen, but I agree to look at it with fifty of my young men. When this trouble commenced, the Great Father stopped the sale of ammunition, which has caused great suffering among my people, notwithstanding we are all sincere to do what is good for our people.

I HAVE kept note of the temperature in England for the last ten years (daily), and my father before me has done the same for forty years. The result has been that we have not been able to discover any perceptible (average) variation in the direction of greater heat in summer. These last six years have shown milder winters and cooler summers than the preceding ten.—English Mechanic.

CAMPAIGN LIES.

Some Blunders About the House Nailed.

The Truth About Democratic Appointments.

[Washington Correspondence of the New York World.]

For originality and industry in the conception and circulation of campaign lies the New York Times undoubtedly stands without a peer. None of its inventions have been longer lived or afforded the Republican party organs more apparent satisfaction than those it has told about the Democratic House of Representatives. As Republican stump speakers are still quoting its assertions as facts it may be useful to furnish Democratic speakers with the facts as they are.

First:

Much of the delay in getting the House in working order, by which in the first two months of the session not a solid week's work was accomplished, is attributable to the greenness and inefficiency of the officers. In no department was the work well done. Frequent blunders were made in keeping the record, so that members for the first time in many years felt compelled to listen each morning to the reading of the journal.

It seems almost incredible that so astute a newspaper as the Times would make so stupid a blunder. During those first two months, when, according to the Times, "not a solid week's work was accomplished," owing "to the greenness and inefficiency of the officers," when "frequent blunders were made in keeping the record," that veteran Republican Journal Clerk, Mr. Barclay, made up the record, and he and his assistants were "the officers" whom the Times accuses of being "inefficient" and "green." As the record will show, Mr. Barclay did not resign until February. J. W. Clayton, the old Assistant Journal Clerk, was retained until February. Ferris Finch, the File Clerk, was reappointed by Mr. Adams. J. H. Bonebrake was not displaced until March. Isaac Strohm, the old Engrossing Clerk, served throughout the session, and Almot Barnes, his assistant, was retained until the end of February. The Times says that they were "inefficient and green." Mr. Adams insists that they did their work as well as usual, and that the affairs of the House ran smoothly, so far at least as the Clerk's department was concerned. If they were as inefficient and green as the Times asserted, Clerk Adams evidently ought to have found good Democrats to fill their places before he did; but the Times has ridiculously blundered in its hot haste to formulate a campaign lie.

Second:

Blunders, not to use a harsher term, have been common in all the branches of service, and it is only a few days since one of Clerk Adams' subordinates enrolled a bill which had been passed by both houses—an important bill on straw-bidding—in such a manner as to render the action of Congress null and void.

Here again the blunder is on the part of the Times, and not on the part of the officers of the Democratic House. In the particular instance cited the charge is simply false. Both the statement of the Clerk and an examination of the bill in question reveal the fact that it was enrolled, verbatim et literatim et punctuatim, as it came from the committee. Furthermore, only one mistake in enrollment has been made during the present session. That was the leaving out of an item for the contingent expenses of the Department of Justice in the Legislative bill. Such papers as the Times have made a great noise over this error, and more than one has insinuated that it was intentional. The fact is that this sole error was by Isaac Strohm, the veteran Republican Enrolling Clerk, whom Clerk Adams retained out of abundant caution. That it was his error is proven by the statement of Mr. Adams, by the handwriting on either side of the omitted item and by the statement of Mr. Strohm himself.

Third:

One of the most striking facts shown by the record is the utter abhorrence which the Democratic party, through its representatives, exhibits for the Union soldier, and the love of those who bore arms against the republic.

On this text the Times preaches a very curious sermon. Under the heading "Officers Removed and Appointed by the Democratic House," it prints what purports to be an accurate showing of the appointments, and which really is quite as false as the article itself. It gives the names of Union soldiers discharged and Confederate soldiers appointed with some degree of accuracy, but it does not give the number of Union soldiers appointed or the number of Union soldiers and Republicans retained. The only inference is that this statement, which alone shows the real spirit of the House to the Union soldiers, was purposely omitted because it did not show what the Times wanted it to show. The Times' table also gives the appointments to the Capitol police, which are not made by the officers of the House, but by the Sergeants-at-Arms of the Senate and House and the Architect of the Capitol (two Republicans and one Democrat) acting as a board. As this campaign lie about the turning out of Union soldiers seems to have as many lives as a cat, the official list has been made out to settle the question once for all with all who care to know the truth; and here it is:

The World published on the 2d day of August a full official list of every appointment made by the Doorkeeper of the House, giving name, State, political status, and the oath taken. From this statement the following recapitulation is published:

Whole number of appointments made by L. Fitzhugh, Doorkeeper House Representatives, Forty-fourth Congress	132
Number new appointments from Union army	86
Number new appointments from Confederate army	16
Number new appointments from Mexican war	2
Number new appointments taking iron-clad oath	109
Number new appointments taking modified oath	14
	123
Number new appointments that are colored	11

The iron-clad oath is taken by Union soldiers and Union men. The modified oath is taken by those who were in the Confederate army, or who were in connection with the rebellion.

For January, 1874, there were on the pay-rolls of the former Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives 132 appointees. Of these, from the best information to be had from a reliable soldier of the old appointment, and now a new appointee, there were eighteen Union soldiers of the 132 appointments.

To further show the unfairness of the Times' correspondent. In the Clerk's department he publishes the names of nineteen Union soldiers who have been displaced, and opposite he gives the names of individuals purporting to be appointed in their several places, without stating whether they were in the Union army or not. To illustrate:

L. REINBURG..... I. H. Francis.

Reinburg's name in small caps; Francis' is in italic.

The writer says that Reinburg, a Union soldier, was turned out, and his place given to Francis, a Confederate. This is not true. Reinburg's place was given to Joseph M. Brown, of Michigan, who served in the Union army from 1861 to 1867.

Again:

L. T. MILLER..................... Geo. C. Ellison.

The assertion here is that Miller was in the Union army and Ellison was not, when the truth is Ellison, who took Miller's place, was also in the Union army. Again:

J. P. SIMMONS.............................T. Safferty.
F. BALLINGER..............................T. McKay.

Simmons' place was given to Henry C. Boland and Ballinger's to L. J. Reilley, both Union soldiers.

These facts speak for themselves, and show that the Times' table was simply a cunningly devised falsehood, which was spread broadcast for the sole purpose of stirring up sectional strife in the interest of the party. The figures prove that in the Clerk's and Doorkeeper's departments the Democratic House appointed the same number of Union soldiers out of a smaller number of appointments, and that a larger percentage of all their appointments were Union soldiers than the appointments of their Republican predecessors.

Fourth:

The Clerk, Mr. Adams, has been under investigation, and of the charges of corruption has been acquitted, no doubt deservedly. A committee still has before it a resolution of inquiry whether Adams has not labored to oppose the legislation of the House relative to the reduction of his own salary. This he admits in a way, but the committee has not reported any condemnation of such action.

This fling at Mr. Adams is about as mean as it could well be made. Forced to admit that he was acquitted of the charge of corruption, it still seeks to leave the impression that Mr. Adams had done something wrong, and had especially labored to prevent the reduction of his own salary. This charge is utterly false, and the writer ought to have known that no such resolution of inquiry as he put forth for a fact was ever introduced.

Mr. Adams never opposed nor authorized, neither requested any one to oppose, the reduction of his own salary. He did oppose the reduction of the force in his office to the extent proposed at first by the committee, because he was of the opinion that the public service would suffer thereby. This was the height of his offending, and the committee, through its Chairman, Mr. Waite, a Republican, reported that Mr. Adams did no more than his duty therein. But if Adams did wrong in opposing the reduction of his force from sixty-two to thirty-eight, it ill becomes the Republicans to complain. For, if he was wrong in opposing it, they were certainly wrong in retaining twenty-four men on their pay-rolls more than were needed. McPherson and the Republican House thought that sixty-two men were necessary in the Clerk's office, and retained and paid that number, while Mr. Adams recommended a reduction of eight in his force and also in the expense of his office.

Fifth:

The veteran journal clerk, John M. Barclay, who had held the position for thirty years, and was still a most valuable officer, was forced to resign, and his assistant, J. W. Clayton, was dismissed. One C. H. Smith, of New Hampshire, was appointed to succeed Barclay, and proved to be not only incapable but dishonest.

The only trouble with this charge is that its two sentences contain two falsehoods. Barclay was not forced to resign, and Smith was not proven either incapable or dishonest. Clayton was dismissed for good and sufficient cause; so also were some others of Barclay's old associates, whereat Mr. Barclay took umbrage and resigned. So far as he himself was concerned, Mr. Adams not only did not intimate to him that his resignation was desired, but, on the contrary, gave him to understand that he would be reappointed. Mr. Smith was appointed from New England on high recommendations, proved himself honest, capable and courteous, and was acquitted by the committee which investigated him of all charges of corruption or even of wrong intent. He simply committed an indiscretion, and had manhood enough to resign as soon as he found out his mistake, in order to avoid any reproach upon his office.

Sixth:

The successor of Clinton Lloyd as Chief Clerk in the office of the Clerk of the House is Green Adams, the uncle of the Clerk, Adams—a case of nepotism reversed. Green Adams was formerly Auditor of the Treasury for the Postoffice Department. While in that position, the Chief Clerk, Sharretts, sold waste paper to the value of $5,392.76, and paid to Green Adams out of the amount $3,617.52. Neither Sharretts nor Adams ever accounted for the money till both were out of office. When the facts were partially discovered through the man who bought the paper, Sharretts refunded $2,845.24, and turned over Green Adams' receipts for the remainder to the amount stated above. Adams makes a long statement, which is in effect that he was informed by Sharretts that this money had been kept by the Auditors because there was no fund into which it could be received in the Treasury Department, and Sharretts said, "If you pay it to any person, pay it to your successor in office." But Sharretts had never heard of this money being paid over except by one Auditor. Adams had intended to pay the money over to his successor, but went home before his successor was appointed. These facts appear in the public records, and show that the present Chief Clerk is either not a very honest man or not a very competent officer. Adams is also an ex-member of the House.

Here, again, the Times man has egregiously blundered. He ought to have known, and if he did not, ought at least to have printed the explanation with the charge that when the charge was first made, Mr. Green Adams sent the following full explanation in a letter to Speaker Kerr:

In the year 1864 I resigned the office of Sixth Auditor of the Treasury for the purpose of accepting the office of treasury agent for the purchase of products of insurrectionary States, at Nashville, Tenn., and hurriedly left for the performance of the duties of the new office to which I had been appointed, without making or pretending to make any final settlement of my accounts with my successor, who had not then been appointed, and who I had good reason to believe would not be appointed for some time thereafter; leaving, however, on file in the Auditor's office, over my own signature, receipts for all moneys received by me on account of waste paper or otherwise.

After the lapse of some time an Auditor was appointed, who found on file my receipts, and, reported to the then Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Fessenden, that there was a balance due from me to the office, and thereupon, my attention being called to the fact, the amount due from me to the office was promptly paid over to my successor and his receipt taken therefor.

From that time to this I am not aware that any one has ever seriously charged me with anything improper in connection with this matter; and, whatever may be the suspicions of others, it is certain that Mr. Fessenden, who was then Secretary of the Treasury, and was cognizant of all the facts, never charged or even suspected me of any impropriety or attempted impropriety in this connection, but on the contrary manifested his entire confidence in my integrity and uprightness of character by retaining me in the responsible office of purchasing agent, and placing to my credit large sums of money to be used by me for the Government.

I have thought proper to state this much in explanation of the matter thus alluded to, and respectfully request in justice to myself that this communication be laid before the House of Representatives.

I am not conscious of ever having appropriated to my own use any money belonging to the Government, and will esteem it a favor to have thoroughly investigated any charge of this kind which anyone may see proper to make against me.

Very respectfully, GREEN ADAMS.

Furthermore, Mr. Adams, although now a Democrat, was at the time he was appointed Sixth Auditor a Republican, a warm friend of Abraham Lincoln, a trusted official under Secretary Fessenden. By the latter he was made Special Treasury Agent to purchase supplies, and by him was retained in that important office and allowed to handle large sums of Government money, after Fessenden knew all about the matters referred to in these charges. As the case stands, therefore, the Republicans have their choice of either horn of the dilemma. They must either allow that Mr. Adams is both capable and honest, or that Lincoln and Fessenden, two of the purest and greatest party leaders they have ever had, condoned and retained in office a dishonest member of their own party. The Times chooses the latter horn, perhaps from force of habit.

Seventh:

The engineer, Ellison, is under investigation on various charges, and no report has been made. It would require more space to set forth the nature of the charges affecting his character than is warranted by the importance of his position. The greatest trouble with him is his incompetence. Mr. Hewitt, who originally recommended Ellison, withdrew his recommendation on discovering, by inquiries of his own, that Ellison did not know there was any difference between a high-pressure and a low-pressure engine, and could not explain what he would do if he found the water in the boiler had become too low. Ellison was afterward put through a competitive examination, and came out at the head, and was appointed. It is commonly supposed that he was "crammed" for the occasion, and knew what questions to expect. That he was incompetent was shown by the condition of the air in the House, which never was so bad before, though the machinery remains unchanged. The result of the investigation is unknown.

As the Times intimates, this game is hardly worth the powder, but small as it is it was not too small to form the foundation for three or four campaign lies. Clerk Adams, not being a practical engineer, wrote a short note to Mr. Wood, Chief Engineer of the Navy, a man whom he did not know and a Republican, asking if he would examine the candidates. Mr. Wood kindly consented. Ellison with several others was examined, and here is the official result:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF STEAM ENGINEERING,
WASHINGTON, January 26, 1876.

Hon. Geo. M. Adams, Clerk House of Representatives:

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that the following persons have been examined—having presented your authority therefor—for the position of Engineer of the Heating and Ventilating Department of the House of Representatives.

. . . .

The examination was written and partly oral, and after its conclusion was submitted to four competent engineer officers, unacquainted with the candidates, and their values determined in each case. The averages of the marks, after being ascertained, have determined the values of the several examinations (in each case) to be as follows, the lowest numbers opposite the respective names having the greatest value:

Geo. C. Ellison, 1; C. W. Geddis, 2; Chas. A. Stewart, 3; Jas. McGlensey, 4. Capt. Tucker declined examination.

It will, therefore, be seen that Mr. Geo. C. Ellison was found, of all the candidates examined, to have been best qualified for the position of Engineer of the Heating Department of the House of Representatives. I am, sir, respectfully your obedient servant,

WM. W. W. WOOD,
Chief of Bureau Steam Engineering Navy Dep't.

Mr. Hewitt had said to Clerk Adams that some replies made to him by Ellison had caused him to distrust somewhat his ability, but he also said that if he could pass a successful examination before Mr. Wood his (Hewitt's) recommendation should stand. If Ellison was crammed, Wood, a Republican officer, crammed him. If any fault attaches, it cannot be to Adams, who did all that any honest, prudent man could do

A French Opinion of America.

The French workingmen delegated by the trades-unions to visit our Centennial show have been banqueted on their return to Paris, and treated to letters from Louis Blanc and Victor Hugo, and a second-hand greeting from the now decrepit Papa Raspail. They gave their opinions of America and the Exhibition without reservation, and these opinions are not flattering. We learn from the speeches of Citizens Desmoulins and Damil and Prudent and Barodet that the Exhibition is a failure, and that American industry is a misnomer—there is nothing of the sort, all our designs, all our productions, being either copies of French originals clumsily done, or the work of French artisans, drawn here by the supposed industrial advantages of this country. These advantages, moreover, are overrated. The workingman has no liberties; negro slavery has been abolished, but more than replaced by slavery of the whites. The workingman is deplorably ignorant—he has to labor fifteen hours a day in order to live miserably, and, after that, he has no leisure to run to the libraries. The workingman has no part in the values he produces—they reinforce the tyranny of capital. The gloom of the general view, in short, was desperate; while, as to the shameless way in which we have stolen French ideas and methods, "the spectacle was desolating to every serious spectator." And Citizen Desmoulins warned his brethren that the time was coming, when, by means of this robbery, American markets would be closed to even the articles of luxury of which France has hitherto had a monopoly, as they are already to some of its industrial arts (the work of the carriage-maker, for instance), and as they are to English cottons, coal and iron. There seems to be a trifling incoherence in this mention of cottons, coal and iron, which can hardly have been affected by our vicious robbery of French skill—but perhaps Citizen Desmoulins can trace a connection. Finally, cried the orator: "Let us show ourselves the sons of the French revolution, by which the entire universe profits in spite of itself. Let us instruct ourselves; we perish by ignorance; we have to repair the ravages made by fourteen centuries of clerical obscurantism." Which sounds like a faint echo from another Desmoulins, friend of Danton and tribune of the people.

Pipe-Laying in Pennsylvania.

A letter from Harrisburg, Pa., says: There is a very strong probability of a war between the railroad monopolies of this State and the seaboard pipe line, the enterprise that has been undertaken by the Pennsylvania Transportation Company. The railroads have received for carrying oil between $70,000,000 and $80,000,000, and it is believed that they will attempt to prevent the laying of the pipes along and under the tracks, employing an armed force if necessary.

The contracts for the pipe through which oil is to flow to the seaboard have been given out. The line will have a capacity equal to one-fourth the present production, or about 30,000 barrels a day. Mr. Henry Harley, President of the Pennsylvania Transportation Company, says that it is proposed to borrow from manufacturers the entire capital for the project, and $200,000 more, the $200,000 to be expended in paying the debt that the existing company is unable to pay. The company will require 286 miles of four-inch pipe. The work is to be completed by the 1st of December next.

"REBEL INTIMIDATION."

The Unreasonable Standards of Criticism Applied by the Republican Party to the South.

A True Expose of the Situation.

(From the Nation.)

We print elsewhere two letters which have a good deal of bearing on the Southern question, both in this canvass and probably in many canvasses to come. The first is from a Northern man who has been long settled in the South, and whose interests and sympathies are naturally all on the side of good government. We have no doubt the explanation he gives of the peculiar turbulence of the States in which the blacks are in a majority is the true one, as far as it goes. But he might have added that, government being worse in those States than elsewhere, in some almost unbearably bad, the temper of the whites, as the bulk of the property-holders who pay the taxes, is constantly revolutionary, and they are only restrained, as we here in the North should be under like circumstances, from armed rebellion by the fear of the overwhelming power of the United States. The case is without parallel in history. Always, hitherto, even under the Turks and Tartars, bad government has been carried on by those who possessed the physical force and the intelligence to use it with effect. In this instance, however, it is carried on by persons who would, if let alone, be incapable of retaining power for a day, and under leaders who are only remarkable for their vice and ignorance. Therefore, no misgovernment has ever before been so irritating as well as exacting. People submit with sullen resignation to a ruler who can thrash them if they do not submit; but to have to submit to a government which we despise as well as hate, and which if left to itself we could overturn in half an hour—surely this is a new form of political misery. The nearest approach to a parallel we have for it that we can remember is the way in which the Pope and the small Italian Princes were enabled to harass their subjects by the support of Austria. We take no account here of the bad character, real or alleged, of the Southern whites. The worst men on earth are entitled as a natural right, as the only indisputable natural right, to good government. The very convicts in jail are. No human being can sink so low as to justify us in handing him over to thieves or rascals to be tortured and despoiled. If every white Southerner deserved to be flogged once a week and fed on bread and water, the sentence should be pronounced by an upright Judge and inflicted by a respectable jailer, and no frauds on the part of the baker should be allowed.

That we should have to recall these things in every canvass in which the Republican party finds itself at all hard pressed is very sad; and although there are many signs in this one that a more enlightened and nobler temper with regard to the South begins to prevail, yet when one sees Mr. Wheeler, the Republican nominee for the Vice Presidency, who wrote the letter of acceptance that we all thought so wise and moderate, going up to Vermont and opening the canvass with a fierce and bitter denunciation of the Southerners, in which he described them as conquered enemies, feeling toward us as the Alsatians feel toward the Prussians, and needing to be met at the polls in the same spirit in which they were met on the battlefield, one feels that there must still be a considerable change in the spirit of the ruling party at the North before we can have permanent pacification or real prosperity. The usual reply to all pleas of this kind is that all the South has to do in order to secure peace and unity is to adapt itself to the situation; that the North is ready to be good friends and forget the past if the Southern whites will only respect the rights of the newly-made colored voters. But this answer is always made by those who, while acknowledging the magnitude and difficulty of the negro problem, have got rid of it as far as they are concerned, by drafting and adopting two or three constitutional amendments, the operation of which never touches them in the least. We can recall nothing in history equal in complexity and peril as a social and political revolution to the sudden conversion of the Southern blacks into voters. It touches every portion of the social fabric from foundation to apex. No such experiment has ever been made. It may have been well to make it, but it is not well for Northern orators and politicians, after having ordered it, to throw the whole burden and risk of it on the South, to refuse to contribute anything to its solution but "troops" and invective, and treat every manifestation of impatience and vexation or fury on the part of the unfortunate people whose liberty and property have been staked on the result, and whose social and moral and mental preparation for such an experiment was probably the worst in the world, as simple malignity. We do not know of a more devilish sight than Southern whites with twenty centuries of Christian civilization behind them, tormenting, abusing, or killing the poor blacks of whom fate has made them fellow-citizens; but the one we should place next it in point of wicked absurdity is that of an orator up in Connecticut or Vermont, whose property and liberty, and the future of whose children, and the peace and order of whose home are protected by the votes of men of his own race and creed and civilization, glibly telling Southerners fifteen hundred miles away how easy it is for them to live and prosper under the rule of the constituencies of Moses and Whipper. When you ask such a man, "What have you done to settle this great contention? wherein have you contributed to make the negroes good citizens, good neighbors, intelligent and far-sighted politicians?" all the reply you will get is that he voted for the constitutional amendments, and votes the Republican ticket every year on his way to his business, just to show those fellows down there that they must adapt themselves to their situation. But that is not what the Prussians do with the Alsatians, to adopt Mr. Wheeler's illustration. When they conquered them they did not hand them over to a pack of jail-birds and defaulters, at the head of the most ignorant peasantry in the world. They gave them the government of as good judges, assessors and legislators as Western civilization provides. They gave them schools and colleges and libraries and roads, and they made life and property as secure as the force of a great empire ever makes them. They did not, in short, ask for order and obedience until they had given everything which any conquering government can give in return. What is the Republican party that it should take the airs and use the language of a conqueror toward the South, without performing one of a conqueror's duties?

It would be an inestimable blessing if this canvass produced something clearer and more definite and distinct with regard to the South than the vague declamations of the letters of acceptance and the vapid commonplaces of the stump-speakers. When these latter tell us, as several of them have done, during the past week, that the Republican party, be its sins what they may, must be kept in power until voters of all colors are as free and independent in South Carolina or Mississippi as they are in Vermont or Maine—and we know that this sort of talk impresses the imagination of the voters, and furnishes a ready cover for endless rascality and a good excuse for every legislative or administrative shortcoming—we feel more than ever the importance of spreading at the North a distinct and rational conception of the possibilities, both near and remote, of such a society as that of the South. That men should think so little of the various agencies which have made the Vermont voter what he is as to call for a reproduction of him among the blacks in South Carolina within ten years of emancipation, and get angry and threaten "troops" if it cannot be supplied, shows an ignorance of the condition of political freedom which is dangerous to the North itself. We ought to know by the experience of many ages and nations that giving a man the suffrage does but little toward giving him the power of using it independently. The history of the electoral franchise in every country shows that the use a man makes of it, when once the security of his person and property is provided for, depends on the degree of his education and his pecuniary condition. English and Irish and Scotch farmers were "intimidated" by their landlords into voting with them as long as their tenure was insecure. The landlord could not beat or rob a voter, but he could direct them at the polls. The artisan in hard times is ready to vote with his employer, though he will not submit to abuse at his hands. The French peasant votes with the maire and prefect. Wherever poor and dependent men have votes, and where the social conditions are unequal, there is that kind of subserviency in voting which we call "intimidation" at the South. Where there is a voting proletariat, the sale of votes in some form is almost a certainty, for we can not expect men to place more value on their electoral freedom than on their daily bread. Nay, we have now ourselves for forty years recognized in our administration the duty of a man's voting with his employer. The 80,000 officeholders of the United States have for the most part to vote the administration ticket on pain of dismissal. The voters who groan and inveigh over the political subserviency of the negroes at the South know this; many of them are ardent and unblushing supporters of the very system which they find so abhorrent at the South.

For our part, we consider the state of things in which the negro votes with his employer, and thereby secures himself good-will, security, fair wages, and light taxes, or, in other words, most of the results of good government, though by no means an ideal or thoroughly healthy state of things, still a great step in advance and a gratifying result of the experiment. It is a state of things in which he obtains more or less political education, gets acquainted with the machinery of government, acquires the habit of acting with white men in politics, and the reputation among them of being of their party; and, as long as his vote is not cast against popular education, he can, under his employer's advice, hardly, in the present condition of Southern society, make a bad use of it. Casting it against his employer, under the guidance of rascally adventurers, may seem to some people a sign of a growing spirit of independence; to us, it is simply a sign of social disorganization and political corruption. The real independence of the South will come, as elsewhere, slowly, through education, the acquisition of property, and the mutual respect which results from long-continued order, prosperity and general intelligence. It is thus, and in no other way, through centuries of trial and endeavor, it has been brought about in New England, among the men of the race which has taught the art of government to the modern world. Why, in the name of all that is reasonable, should we expect it to come in any other way, or suddenly, among the Southern negroes? Have we really to put up with Conkling and Morton and Logan until newly-emancipated slaves show the spirit which charged at Naseby and held the redoubt at Bunker Hill?

A WORD FOR THE FLY.

Also for the Festive Mosquito, Whose Roundelay has Not Yet been Encored.

A respected correspondent, not satisfied with the entomological opinions of the physicians, has peered through the lens of a microscope to learn more of flies. He has ascertained that they are lovers of gum, and that they buzz through the air in pursuit of that luxury. The gum does not come ready-made to the fly, but is at first the invisible animalcule, or lice, of the air, which gather to the glutinous wings, limbs and trunks of the little insect, and are worked over into shape for mastication. "The fly," repeats the correspondent, "is a useful scavenger, and a good deal better one than the doctor, since it never brings in a big bill for his services, and the doctor never fails to do so." "Watch a fly," he continues, "that has been soaring around your room, gathering in air lice; wait till he settles upon a lump of sugar, and then see him hoe himself down with his feet and eat gum, air lice and sugar with equal gusto." "'Tis true," sadly admits the investigator, "if you will allow plenty of garbage around, the fly will gather on it just as bummers crowd up to the bar of a gin mill, and they will get lazy and good for nothing, and 'whittle' on withered cabbage and cheese rinds, instead of eating gum. They force the slovenly housekeeper to a certain degree of cleanliness to escape annoyance from them, for if she keeps her apartments perfectly clean and sweet, then there will be no animacule to make gum of, and no flies to eat, you see. On the contrary, if her house is untidy and unsavory, the fly will go through a deal door and a pair of stairs, you see, to get his gum, and he will use her face or the sugar-bowl as a dish to eat it out of."

The correspondent enforces his opinions by quotations from the English chemist, Mr. Emerson, who first discovered the fact that flies eat gum, and who ciphered out the problem by the algebraic formula of Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and n. Mr. Emerson saw a fly on a lump of sugar. Instead of "damning a fly," he set to work to find out why "the insect's minute trunk or proboscis, which is perfectly retractile, and which terminates in two large lobes that are spread out when the fly begins a meal on sugar (and gum), should be passed over its body so frequently while the fly dined, or, in other words, why the fly should lick itself like a cat, since its trunk was not made for licking, but for grasping and sucking." The chemist fell to thinking. He caught the fly and put it under the microscope, and saw the insect was covered with air lice. Here was something to be looked into. "Why is the fly lousy?" mused Mr. Emerson. He caught another fly with a like result, and in this case found the insect eating the vermin which had been worked over into gum. "A glance through the microscope," said the chemist, "showed that the operation was not one of self-beautification, for wherever the air lice were, thither the trunk went. The lice were disappearing into the trunk!! The fly was eating them!!!" The chemist grasped a paper, waved it frantically and mysteriously through the air, put it under the lens, and found it thickly covered with the same kind of vermin that he had discovered on the flies. "Here is something definite," said he. "The puzzle is solved. Eureka! The fly is a scavenger." Mr. Emerson made investigations with flies taken in filthy and unhealthy places, and found them fat and saucy, while insects caught in clean and well-ventilated apartments where they could get little gum, were as lean and lonesome as a park bummer after a night in a bar-room.

The fly correspondent closes with the glowing peroration: "One word for the mosquito. When the summer sun dries up the stagnant marshes, he sends the gay and festive mosquito to warn you to close your windows against the miasma that will bring chills and fevers, and if you will not listen to his gentle roundelay, he inserts his little bill as a gentle reminder of the doctor's bills that will follow, compared with which it is as Titania's wand to Goliah's club."

THE first marriage in Deadwood took place in the theater, at the close of the regular performance, Sept. 1. Fortunately for him there were lots of doctors around.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Kankakee (Ill.) Gazette soliloquizes on the Centennial as follows:

To go or not to go—that is the question;
Whether it is better to lay up nickles for that rainy day,
And suffer the slings and arrows of regret
Till 1976; or to gather up the shekels,
Buy a through ticket, go down to the big show
And have a grand good time? To gather—to buy—
To go—to see; and, by so doing, make an end
Of all regrets—'tis a consummation devoutly to be wished.
To gather—to buy—to go, and then to see—
Ay, there's the rub; 'tis easier said than done.

NEAR Cairo, Egypt, the ceremony of opening the Nile took place this season in the presence of the principal ministers and officials and several thousand persons. This ceremony is held when the river attains a certain height. An opening is cut to admit its fertilizing waters to the numerous canals spread all over Lower Egypt. The effigy of a woman in gorgeous apparel, and bedecked with jewelry, is floated down the stream, and money is distributed to the natives present, in token of the riches and abundance that will result wherever the Nile flows.

Cultivate the Willow.

Two-thirds of the willow for the manufacture of willow ware in this country is imported from Europe at a cost of $5,000,000. The cultivation of the willow is contemplated by some Americans, they thinking that, by cultivating superior grades of the basket willow, they can make a profit per acre of $150. A manufacturer asserts that fully 5,000 articles are constructed from willow shoots—chairs, sofas and baskets being the most common.

Democratic National Ticket.

For President,

For Vice-President,

THOS A. HENDRICKS.

WHAT THE REPUBLICAN PARTY IS DOING.

The records prove that the public expenditures during the six years of President Grant's administration, ending June 30, 1875, have been four billion dollars.

The records prove that the defalcations by Republican office-holders during the last six years of Republican administration amounted on June 19th, '76, to $5,5000,525.

The records prove that the robberies of the whisky rings, for attempting to break up which Bristow was driven from the cabinet, amounted to fully $1,000,000.

The records prove that the number of corrupt rings and combinations surrounding the Republican administration far exceeds anything previously known in the history of this country, and that, notwithstanding this, every Republican convention, state and national, in the past eight years, has fully endorsed that administration.

The records prove that the number of office-holders has been increased during President Grant's administration from 54,207 to 94,119, or at the rate of more than 6,000 a year; that during almost the whole of this period the country has been suffering from great commercial depression, and nearly every home has felt the pressure of hard times.

The records prove that the Republican party has pledged itself to civil service reform in every national and state convention since 1868; that President Grant has asked congress to aid him in bringing it about, in almost every message he has ever written; and that not the first step has ever been taken towards the fulfillment of that pledge, except the unimportant one of appointing a board of commissioners, which aroused so much opposition among Republicans that it was abandoned; that Gov. Hayes has again promised it eight years ago.

The records prove that the Republican party has pledged itself to bring about specie payment in every national and almost every state convention since 1868; that President Grant has asked congress to aid him in bringing it about in every annual message since that time, and that not the first step has ever been taken towards the fulfillment of that pledge save by the passage of a so-called resumption act, which was originally framed as an inflation measure, but which worked somewhat differently; that the Republican national convention did not dare to to commend this act, and the Democratic house found itself compelled to vote to repeal it; that Gov. Hayes has promised specie payments now just as Grant did eight years ago.

The records prove that President Grant's reconstruction policy has resulted in the increase of the debts of Southern states, which were almost nothing at the close of the war, to an aggregate of $194,000,000, and in the almost complete confiscation of property by local taxation; that the lists of estates and farms to be sold for taxes fill column after column and page after page of the Southern newspapers; that this condition of things affects the blacks equally with the whites, and is the direct result of the enormous thefts of Republican officials.

Tilden in Michigan.

A gentleman of this city, received a day or two since, a letter from Hon. Alfred P. Swineford, Marquette, Michigan, and editor of the ablest mining journal published in the United States which puts at rest forever the unscrupulous charges against Samuel J. Tilden, of having swindled, through alleged shin-plaster issues, the miners in the Lake Superior region. This we have not now before us, but are promised more detailed and definite statements within a few days.

It was highly creditable to Mr. Tilden that he never himself authorized any contradiction of this and other kindred slanders that have been fulminated against him by some unprincipled Republican editors, who may be justly characterized as "curs of low degree."

This triumphant refutation comes from a truthful and disinterested source and states that the county of which Marquette is the seat of justice, four years ago gave General Grant eleven hundred and odd majority—while this year it will not fail to give Mr. Tilden less than one thousand majority. This shows the estimation in which Mr. Tilden is held by the people whom it is charged he plundered. On the good authority of Mr. Swineford, it is stated that Mr. Tilden made a disbursement during one year, of upwards of a million dollars for the benefit of the toilers in the mines, and that their sense of gratitude for these favors will certainly be manifested at the November election —Toledo (Ohio) Democrat.

The election has passed off quietly, and in a manner entirely creditable to both parties.

Jos. E. Bugnot has added a lunch room to his saloon. Joe. will keep it in first-class style.

Married, on October 10th, by Rev. Mr Welsch, Mr. C. C. Schlatter, and Miss C. A. Zimmerman.

There were two hickory poles raised last Monday. One in Butler township and one in Jackson.

Smithfield township takes the belt for the largest increase, and Fairfield is still the banner county.

The Stave factory is in good running order notwithstanding the election. Don'dt it Charley.

V. A. is constable now. Look out boys where you get on a peanut drunk. He'll gobble you sure.

Bill Zern and Phil Realing, of La Otta, were in town on Thursday. We find them the same old boys.

Joe Miller was electioneering hard on Monday night. He says beat one candidate "a hundret votes ou-et."

Over twenty-five Republicans voted the Democratic ticket Tuesday. They were laboring men and want Reform.

The colored voters of Butler voted the Democratic ticket. This is a stickler for our Republican friends in that locality.

The saloons were all closed on election day, but it strikes us that a good deal of "budge" was taken in nevertheless.

Fairfield Center run short of tickets, and were compelled to write them on "fools-cap." They counted all the same.

Some of our Republican friends took a "lay down" on the corner of Main and Sixth streets the night of the election.

The new brick building of Mr Williams' to be used for his grocery and provision store, has reached the second story.

There will be a Township Sabbath School Teachers Institute, held at Sedan, Ind., November 4. Let there be a large attendance.

Mark Barney and several of his pards, of Spencerville, was on the streets today. The Barney boys are straight Democrats.

Sickness is abating somewhat. The "ager" leaving this neck o' the woods gave relief to many a care worn and lean looking Yank.

All the men on the B. & O. Road voted at Garrett Tuesday. It resulted a Democratic victory of over 90. Rah for we'ns.

We are glad to know that a number of Republicans in this town and county voted a part of the Democratic ticket. It shows good judgment on the part of the gentlemen.

Mrs. E. D. Hartman will entertain the Presbyterian social next Wednesday afternoon, mite in the evening. All are cordially invited.

Mrs. K. Elson, Sec'y.

Butler township voted straight, and gave a Democratic majority of 31. If there is anything we like it is straight voting—on the Democratic side.

Election day was a most beautiful one and God's congenial sun shown down brightly upon the democracy. Early in the day the corrupt and wicked party could see "the hand writing on the outer wall."

Mr. John Hebel met with his death last week. We learn that his decease was "water dropsy." The funeral services were delivered at the German Reform Church and guests from Ft. Wayne and other places were present.

Our genial, clever, liberal-hearted friend, Major Badger, who, with his accomplished lady, are now guests of the Swineford House, will leave in a few days for Washington to be placed on the retired list, he having suffered several strokes of paralysis. Our friend is the gallant major of the celebrated 22d regiment, regular army, and has won many laurels both during and since the late war. He participated in the great Indian fight at Antelope Hills in '68 and his regiment has since pursued the savage Sioux, and made him find his hole. Don't pronounce that Si-ux as we heard a fellow exclaim the other day.

Majorities in DeKalb.

The following shows the majority each Democratic candidate received in the election Tuesday, in this county:

J. D. Williams, Governor,	188
Freeman Kelly, Congress,	198
H. S. Tousley, Judge,	111
D. D. Moody, Prosecutor,	152
J. C. St. Clair, Sheriff,	104
Dan'l Gonser, Treasurer,	248
M. Boland, Recorder,	283
J. J. Latson, Coroner,	219
J. J. Van Auken, Surveyor	232
S. S. Shutt, Senator,	230
W. H. Madden, Representative,	139
G. H. Duncan, Commissioner,	468
B. F. Blair, "	5
A. D. Goetschius, "	69

Game Supper.—The M. E. Church will give another game supper in about three weeks. All will remember the good time had last fall on a smiliar occasion, and we hope to see a greater interest than before.

The Auburn Silvert Cornet Band visited Waterloo to-day. They volunteered themselves and we hope our sister town will appreciate the generosity of our boys and use them courteously, and in the future, when in need of good music, give them a chance in.

Wolcott contended until very recently that the great issue of the campaign was money matters. He has suddenly experienced a chance of mind, and has come to the conclusion that the bloody shirt is the real issue. So it would seem that his financial issue was settled by Sickles.

There are two generals in the Radical camp trying to lead the party to victory As they do not act together, defeat is inevitable. Friendly commands one army and Ministerto-Mexico Foster the other. The office-holders train under the letter, and Sitting Bull belongs to his camp.

The election is past, and the tearing, wearing, jarring discomforts of the campaign are over, for which we are thankful. All will settle down quietly to the new orders of things, and while they are doing this, we hope they will not forget to come in and settle up for the Courier. We need money, and must have it.

Ensley and Williams new brick over the ruins of the old Woolen Factory, is going to add largely to the good looks of that part of town. This is an improvement in the right direction. Mr. Ensley has assisted in building two splendid blocks already to our town, and if we did not have three or four such men, the others would see the town go to the d—estruction.

STOVES.

We are authorized to say that D. D. Snyder, has just received a fine lot of parlor heating stoves, which will be sold very low. The lot consists of many different patterns, among them the "Garland," a neat, elegant and durable stove for little money. He also keeps a large variety of cook-stoves and tinware. Now is the time to make your selections, and get ready for cold weather.

Wooden Wedding.

Mr. M. F. Long and lady gave a wooden wedding last week, wherein some of our most prominent citizens participated. The parties were presented with a splendid sofa, by the invited guests, and Rev. J. W. Welsh, pastor of the M. E. Church made a brief, but eloquent presentation speech. The party went to their several homes about 11 o'clock P. M.

A splendid hickory pole was raised last Monday afternoon at the corners near Freeman's School House, in Jackson-tp. In the evening a respectable number of the citizens gathered at this school house, and were addressed by A. J. Little and Lyman Jackman, of the place. The meeting was enthusiastic and cheered the Democratic candidates in the onward march to victory.

For the Ladies.

Our lady readers will be interested to know that a most magnificient selection of shoes and gaiters for their particular wear has just been opened out at Ryan's and he can show you a fine stock and a more elegant assortment than you have ever seen here before. He is selling them very low, too, for cash, and guarantees good work. Keep this in mind when you want a neat new pair of shoes for winter wear.

"We know not how much we love until we try to unlove," and we may love the old Republican party, and it may be a hard job to unlove it; but the time has come when we shall take into account the "other hearts that will ache," and vote for a radical reform from President to pathmaster, and try for once if this government cannot be run for less than half the present figures. It can be done, and let us give it a trial.

For some time our correspondents in various parts of the county have not kept us posted as fully as we could desire. The election is over and we will have more room to devote to local interest, and are of the opinion that at least one person can be found in every village who will devote a few evening hours to compiling the neighborhood news. We hope those who have been furnishing us with news will call at this office when they come to town, and have a talk about the subject and see if we cannot make arrangements with you to keep the columns of The Courier full of the best reading local news, of any paper in the State. Fall in to line boys, fall in.

Children sometimes get together in their nursery and tell ghost stories to each other until they discover a hob goblin in every object around them, and shriek at the noise. The Radicals have so stirred themselves up with self manufactured scares on the subject of visiting roughs and repeaters and ballot box stuffs, that the most respectable stranger is arrested on suspicion, and Tuesday the whole family connection seemed to vie with each other in making apes of themselves and subjecting people to annoyance who were about as much connected with such a Republican line of occupation as the man in the moon. The solid relation of the officers to their party masters in this city give them unusual prerogative, and every man will be annoyed or arrested wherever a shadow of pretext can be discovered, or whenever there is the slightest reason to suppose a Radical vote will be gained by it.—Ex.

The Great Question of all.

After all, the greatest question to be settled in the approaching election of President and Vice-President, is whether or no the self-government of the people can be maintained in the United States.

If, in spite of all revelations of the corruption and incompetence which characterize the Republican party and its leaders; If, in spite of Belknap's bribe taking, Robeson's robbery, Fish's dishonorable complicity with Spain, Grant's and Babcock's relations with fraudulent distillers, and all the rest of that long and terrible catalogue of crime and misgovernment, the Republican party can still carry this election, the fact will prove that the officeholding machine is too strong for thy people, and that the party in power can never be turned out by the regular method of an honest election.

In comparison with this question, all the other questions on which men are to vote on the first Tuesday of November are of inferior moment.

Hayes to Grant.

Long Branch, Aug 29.—Prior to the invitation extended by President Grant to Governor Hays and his wife to spend a few days with the President's family at the Branch, Governor Hayes addressed a frank, manly letter to the President, denying that he had any intention in his letter of acceptance to put any slight upon the President, or to reflect on the policy of his administration.—The Governor says in his letter that he has no idea that there is any necessity to make the denial, as he is confident the President could never have harbored such a suspicion. But, inasmuch as in the heat of a political campaign partisan papers have pretended to place such a construction on the letter of acceptance, he cannot resist the desire to make this distinct denial. He writes to the President, he says, not as a politician, but as a brother soldier, and is warm in his eulogy of President Grant, both as a military leader and as a civic ruler. The letter is said to have been very highly appreciated by the President.

Millinery Store!

Our Millinery Goods are Abundant and Cheap; And None but those of the Best Kinds do we Keep.

We want all to know that we're living in town,
In Auburn, Indiana, that place of renown;
We invite all the ladies to give us a call,
And we'll try to supply the wants of you all;
Our goods have arrived, our stock is complete.
The material is good, and the workship is neat.
We want all to come and see for your selves,
What we have on the counter and up on the shelves;
We have good hats and bonnets and trimmings to suit,
And fine flowers and ribbons to make you look cute;
We've neckties and plumes and beautiful switches,
Which will make you appear as handsome as peaches;
Then come right along whatever your age,
Your wants can all be supplied we'll engage;
Whether married or single, we have what will please you.
And to purchase our goods we shall not have to tease you;
We pay cash for our goods and select them with care,
They're as good and as cheap as you'll find anywhere;
And we say to you all, both young and old,
We'll not refuse greenbacks, silver nor gold.

DE KALB DEMOCRATIC.

Every Man on the Ticket Elected.

A CLEAN SWEEP.

A GAIN OF 156 VOTES.

TOUSLEY ELECTED!

MOODY AND THE COLT DEPART FOR SALT RIVER!!

SHUTT MAKES A GALLANT FIGHT!

Steuben too Much for Him!

Kelly is Slightly Snowed Under!

And a Mighty Close Thing on the State with Chances in Favor of Blue Jeans!

OHIO PROBABLY REPUBLICAN.

We are glad to record the fact that DeKalb has wheeled into line with an increased majority of 156, giving Blue Jeans 188 majority. The majorities on the county ticket will range from 40 to 250, or 300.

The election passed off very quietly all over the State, and an immense vote was polled. There is a large increase in DeKalb county. The Democracy have carried their entire ticket in DeKalb county. Baker is elected in the District by an increased majority. Steuben county gives a large Republican majority, the greenbackers seemingly supporting Harrison. This elects a Senator and Prosecutor. Tousley claims his election by a small majority, although Steuben gives Rose 1,170. At this writing the State ticket is still in doubt, and a small majority will elect the next Governor. Ohio has probably gone Republican by a small majority. West Verginia has gone Democratic.

Blue Jeans Elected.

Later—The election of Williams is now conceeded by from 2000 to 5000.

Tilden—Then and Now.

Previous to the St. Louis convention the Chicago Tribune contained the following paragraph concerning Mr. Tilden:

"Mr. Tilden is a man of acknowledged intellectual ability; he has a fair personal reputation, and owing to his services in prosecuting the Tweed ring he was elected Governor of New York by a grateful people. Since he has been known to the whole country as a reformer and as a vigorous prosecutor of official frauds. He, as a Democrat, stands before the people in somewhat the same popular light that Bristow does a Republican. The great moral sentiment of the people is in favor of electing to the presidency not only a man with clean hands and free of all participation in past corruption, but also a man who has a record as a practical reformer of government, a weeder out of the rotten and criminal from the public service, and the will elect such a man, no matter by what party he is nominated."

How has it come to pass that since the St. Louis convention, Tilden has been discovered to be a wrecker of railroads, a fraud, a cheat, a speculator in stocks, an oppressor of the poor, an associate with miserable vagabonds? Will these leading journals reconcile their diverse utterances, and help us out of a quandary?

GRANT AND JEWELL.

What the Late Postmaster-General Might Tell About his Removal.

Hartford, Conn., Oct. 7.—A gentleman of somewhat conspicuous standing in Washington has lately been here, and given some proof of his knowledge of the causes which led to the summary removal of our distinguished fellow citizen, Mr. Jewell, from the post office department. In the first place he confirms public sentiment in Hartford to this extent—that the President originally appointed Mr. Jewell out of personal motives, and removed him for personal reasons. Beyond this he gives certain alleged facts, the more important of which is that the President had unquestioned proof of the insincerity of the friendship professed for him in the post office department, this proof embracing an open charge of dishonesty against himself by the Postmaster General in the presence of two reputable witness. Mr. Jewell has been very reticent concerning this whole matter; but if he can substantiate the charge with the President is very sure he made he owes to the people, being as he is a practical reformer, to explain, and he should do it before November or retire from the stump. There may be difficulties in the way, however. It is barely possible that there was unpleasant things associated with the sudden recall from Mr. Jewell from St. Petersburg, dating from his unfortunate private letter to a friend at home, in which he carelessly alluded to the dignitaries to the Russian Court as "flap-doodles," and it may be that an open quarrel with the President would lead to the divulging secrets in the State Department not so pleasant to have spread before the eager eye of the American people.

Tilden and his 'Sham Reform."

It pleases the Republican politicians to say, or rather the stress of circumstances compels them to say, that Gov. Samuel J. Tilden is nothing but a sham reformer—that under his inspiration the State taxes in the State of New York were not reduced any considerable amount, nor did he give the people any relief from the voracious gormandizing of the Canal Ring.

Let facts be submitted to a candid people.

In 1874, the last year of Gov. Dix's administration, the State tax levied in the State of New York was $15,727,482.08. The State Tax levied in New York this year, the second year of Governor Tilden's administration, is $188,572.85—a saving of $7,538,909.23!

That's sham Reform, is it?

For the ten years ending with 1874, the people of the State of New York paid an annual average Tax for Canal Repairs of $2,279,615. For this purpose there was levied $2,587,812.05 upon the taxable property of the State in 1874. That was the last year of the administration of Gov. Dix the Republican.

At the instigation of Gov. Tilden this tax has been totally abolished.

So in the matter of State Tax there has been a decrease of $7,538,909.23, under the administration, and at the instance of Gov. Tilden, and by the abolition of the Canal Tax, which was likewise at the instance of Gov. Tilden. There has been a further decrease of $2,537,819.04 in the Taxation of the people of New York—amounting in the aggregate to $10,076,728.27.

Is this sham Reform? If it is, had we not better have some of it in the Administration of the Federal Government?

A Word to the Workingmen.

This campaign is yours. It is for your families, and your action at the polls in November will give evidence of the fact whether or not you care more for your wives and children than for mere party. What is your situation now? If you have employment, does the mere pittance you receive for your hard labor suffice to furnish you with the necessaries of life? Are you able to raise money enough at the end of every month to pay your rent without depriving your children of bread?

Now is the time for action. Let your voices be raised for a change; let your votes be cast for a change. Reform is the watchword, and to effect a reform a change in administration is the first step. Your condition cannot be made any worse under the guidance of Uncle Sammy Tilden than it is to-day, and you have the assurance of history that change of rulers after a panic always restored confidence and brought good times in its train.

Can you longer hesitate? Look at your fellow men, in great numbers, discharged every day. Look at Altoona where the Penn'a R. R. Co. has been compelled to discharge over fifteen hundred men within the past two weeks and the end is not yet. A hard winter is approaching, and if the demand for a change is not ratified at the polls woe betide the sufferer. During the past three years you have hardly made money enough to keep soul and body together, and if Hayes is elected it will be but a continuance of the present administration present hard times and thieves in office.

Laboring men give this matter your attention! Wives of laboring men enlist in the fight; persuade your husbands to cast one vote for you and your children. Give them to understand that they have voted for party low wages and starvation long enough.

Working Men Read.

What party has controlled the affairs of the nation for the last 16 years? The Republican party. Who has levied and collected enormous taxes, given away millions of acres of our public lands, plundered the national treasury, squandered our revenues, paralized our industries, closed our mines, rolling mills, furnaces, forges and work-shops and brought our people to starvation, bankrupt and ruin; thrown thousands of honest men out of work and banished them from their homes to "tramp" upon every thorougfare and highway in the land in pursuit of employment? Is it not the Republican party that is responsible for all this stagnation in business; for all this misery and woe?

Shall we give this party which has been guilty of these crimes, of this outrageous career, a new lease of power? Shall we vote for Hayes and Wheeler, and thus perpetuate the reign of Grantism? Shall we be drawn into a decoy movement and cajoled into the farce of voting for Cooper and Carey, who cannot possibly obtain a single electoral vote, and thereby aid in continuing the Republican party in power? Or shall we act the part of sinsible men, and vote in a manner that our ballots will count in the great battle for reform which will come off in November. It is not folly, it is not madness in us, who have suffered such deep wrongs at the hands of the Republican party to waste our strength upon this Peter Cooper movement, which can bring us no relief?

Shall we not act as wise men and vote with the army of reform that is now marching on under the leadership of those fearless, gallant and honest leaders Tilden and Hendricks? There is but one escape from our present difficulty; there is but one road which will lead us out of our fearful condition, but one course left for us to pursue, and that is to vote for Tilden and Hendricks. Business and working men shall we not do this, and achieve a victory decisive and complete?

In the event of the election of Tilden and Hendricks, a new era will dawn upon us, which will revive trade, set the industries of the nation in motion, giving employment to laborers, mechanics and artisans in every vocation and calling. Vote for Tilden, Hendricks and a restoration of our crippled industries and a general revival of business.

Governor Tilden's Character.

An admirable man for public office.—N. Y. Evening Post, (Rep.)

Personally he is honest enough.—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser, (Rep.)

Mr. Tilden has fairly earned the favor of his party.—Syracuse Journal, (Rep.)

Samuel J. Tilden we believe to be a thoroughly honest man.—N. Y. Journal of Commerce, (Rep.)

In public and private life, as a Democrat and as a citizens, his record challenges scrutiny.—N. Y. Mail, (Ind.)

We have nothing to say against Tilden as a man, an exemplary citizen, and a Democrat.—Lockport Journal, (Rep.)

No one will deny his eminent respectibility, or venture to cast any doubts upon his integrity.—Brooklyn Union, (Rep.)

Mr. Tilden is a gentleman of culture and refinement. His has been a busy life, useful, if not great.—Utica Herald, (Rep.)

We have respect for Mr. Tilden. We utter nothing in disparagement of his character or his worth.—Albany Journal, (Rep.)

His honesty and integrity lift him above the foul atmosphere in which they plan their nefarious purposes.—Brooklyn Argus, (Ind.)

Mr. Tilden's personal character is so far above reproach that it will reflect honor upon his associates.—N. Y. Tribune, (Ind.)

A man of unquestionable integrity and great ability, against whom nothing can be said on the score of qualification or experience.—N. Y. Express, (Ind.)

Mr. Tilden is a highly respectable candidate, and no man in the State who wishes to see the return of the Democrats to power need be ashamed to vote for him.—N. Y. Times, (Rep.)

We congratulate our Democratic friends on being led by so respectable a standard bearer as Samuel J. Tilden. It is a good sign of the times when even the Democracy can nominate such a man.—Poughkeepsie Eagle, (Rep.)

He is a man of ability and integrity, and his selection by the Democracy as their standard bearer is an evidence that character and capacity are still thought to be worth something as qualifications for office.—N. Y. Graphic, (Ind.)

He has always had the reputation of high personal character, and his opposition to the Tweed gang of thieves has even placed him in some degree among political reformers. Mr. Tilden is a man of great wealth, and is generally recognized, we should say as a thoroughly safe, conservative person.—Troy Whig, (Rep.)

F. D. Ryan has changed store rooms, now occupying the room which Lauferty used to occupy, next door to Davis' Hardware Store. And he has now room for the really extensive and beautiful stock of Boots and Shoes which he has recently put in.

KREE.

BY A. C. GORDON.

My boy Kree!
He played wid you when you was a chile?
You an' he
Growed up together—Well! lemme see!
[illegible] so I [illegible] in yer face—
Mas' George's smile!
Lord, love you, Marster!
Dar 'neath dat cypress is whar Kree lays.

Sunburnt an' grown!
Mas' George, I shudden ha' knowed you, son
'Count o' de beard dat yer face has on,
But fer dat old-time smile o' yourn.
"An' Kree!" you say—
Hadn't you heard, Marster,
He [illegible] de year dat you went away?

Kree an' you—
How de ole times comes back onst mo'.
Moonlight fishin's, an' hyars in de snow—
Squirrels an' jay-birds up overhead
In de oak-trees dat de sun shined through.
Look at me, Marster!
Here is me livin', an' Kree, he's dead!

'Pears to me strange,
Now, when I thinks on 'em, dose ole years,
Mas' George, sometimes de b'ilin' tears
Fills up my eyes
'Count o' de misery now, an' de change.
De sun dims, Marster,
To an ole man when his one boy dies.

Did you say "How?"
Out in de dug-out one moonshine night
Fishin' wid your baby brother—he
Wid de curls o' yaller-like streaks o' light
An' de dancin' big blue eyes. Dead, now.
Kree died for him—
An' yearnin' for Kree,
De Lord tuk him, Marster;
De green grass kivers 'em both from sight.

Heard o' de tale?
Didn't know Kree was de one dat drowned
Savin' Mas' Charley? Well, 'twere he.
De chile waxed weaker, his face mo' pale,
Arter de corpse o' poor Kree were found;
Two months later he went, you see.
God bless you, Marster,
Nine years has rolled over both underground.

Worn out an' gray,
Here I sits waitin', Mas' George, alone.
All on 'em's gone—
Marster an' Mistis, an' Charley an' he.
You an' me only is lef'. Some day,
When you've gone back to yer ship on de sea,
I'll hear him say,
Jes' as he used ter, a-fishin', ter me;
"Daddy, come over!" An' passin' away
Dat side de river, again I'll be Wid my boy Kree.

ONE MORNING.

A Tale of Reconciliation.

A small, pleasantly-furnished morning-room; long windows opening on the piazza; closed Venetian blinds, that kept out the heat and dust, and gave a soft, quiet light to the room; an open piano, with music on the rack; some pretty pictures on the wall; cool lace curtains at the windows; books, papers and magazines on the tables; easy cane-bottomed rocking-chairs scattered around; a low sofa in the corner; a French clock on the mantel, pointing toward 10; a general air of utility about the whole department—this was the setting for two figures, one bright summer morning.

The lady was leaning very lightly back upon the sofa, with some dainty pretense at work in her lap—a handkerchief to be embroidered, I believe—her white fingers occasionally taking a lazy stitch. Dressed in some white, cool stuff that fell in graceful folds around her, a dash of red at her throat, and long, flowing sleeves, showing her finely-rounded arm, she made quite a pleasant picture. She would scarcely have been called handsome—her features were too irregular—but she possessed to a marked degree that nameless charm we designate as "prettiness." Blue eyes and rippling brown hair, rather a wide forehead, a nondescript nose, a good complexion, and a large mouth redeemed by beautiful teeth, were the main and striking features. But a mere catalogue of a person's features gives about as much idea of the real living appearance as piles of brick and mortar of the structure to be erected.

For all that she leaned back so carelessly, and toyed so lazily with her work, there was a look of annoyance about her eyes, and her lips were shut tight, in a way that argued well for a strong tinge of firmness—obstinacy, her girl friends would call it—in her character. Evidently the cause of that annoyance was before her—a tall, athletic young fellow of about 23, neither positively handsome nor ugly, yet negatively good-looking; dark hair and eyes, and skin burned to a deep bronze by exposure to the sun, were the main points to be noticed. Angry, impatient, all but enraged, he certainly was. He had been tramping back and forth, and at length paused a few feet from her, his hand grasping the back of a chair, and looking down with admiration plainly struggling with his provoked feelings.

"So, Nell, you are the same willful, stubborn, obstinate girl you were three years ago. In return for all my patient faithfulness you seem determined to thwart and cross me in every thing. It is unjust of you, ungrateful, cruel! Here I'm not home three days, and there hasn't been a single solitary instance in which your ladyship has deigned to see any thing pleasant, any thing to accord with your singularly turned mind, in whatever I may have advocated. Just so sure as I propose any thing, you espouse its direct opposite; if I make even the simplest request, you refuse it point-blank; and every thing I may happen to do is diametrically opposed to what, in your captious eyes, I ought to. And yet, all this time you still love me! Love me! If this is love, I prefer hate—for you certainly could not torture me more, nor make me more uncomfortable, were I your bitterest foe."

"And has your highness really done?" she drawled, without looking up, in a peculiarly mocking and exasperating manner. "If Mr. Arnold has ceased to desire to tramp up and down the room, and lash himself into a frenzy, after the proverbial manner of caged hyenas, and if he really has poured forth all the vituperative abuse he for the moment desires to, and if he will sit quietly down at a safe distance, and stop chewing his mustache, he may hear of something to his advantage."

"Nell, you'd provoke a saint. Are all girls like you?"

"You have had quite good opportunities to judge. You seem to have selected me as not being of the general run of modern young ladies—as one peculiarly suited to the requirements of your fastidious taste. But, sir, pray be seated; the exertion of standing during this hot weather may be highly deleterious in your present questionable condition; and, ah!—really, you weary me by clutching the chair so tightly; and then I'm afraid lest, in your present frame of mind, you might be tempted to annihilate me."

"By heaven!" he burst forth, throwing himself into a chair, "I verily believe the seven devils that were cast out have taken possession of you this morning."

"Many thanks," she murmured. "If I were equal to the exertion, I would sweep you a courtesy. But since you have condescended to yield to my request, listen to my very mild and depreciatory justification. Well, then, you say you have been home three days, and in those three days I have thwarted you in every thing you have proposed. You certainly have made three requests—commands, if you will—which I have seen fit to refuse; three questions so manifestly absurd that no one but your royal highness could have evolved them from the depths of his inner consciousness. Pray don't interrupt or get excited. Your first request was that, on the hottest of summer mornings, I should leave my guests entirely to their own devices, and take a wild gallop with you under the fiercest of suns, on a horse I had never mounted, and which is reported to be a very ugly brute. Result of my veto, you go off enraged, and sulk for the greater part of the day. Last evening you endeavored to persuade me to slip quietly away from the company it was my duty to entertain, to wander with you over the damp grass in thin boots, at the imminent risk of a sore throat; and this morning, with sublime assurance that really does you credit, you ask me to bundle off my guests as brusquely and unceremoniously as possible, and with auntie and your amiable self take a flying cruise on your yacht. How modest, how unassuming, how considerate of others! How impressed with the demands of etiquette and proper politeness to our visitors!"

"Perdition take the visitors!

"How refined and gentlemanly his years of absence have made Mr. Arnold!"

"I beg your pardon, Nelly; that slipped out accidentally. I see what a fool I have been to imagine that a young lady in modern society would retain the affection she perhaps once feebly felt during the absence of her betrothed; and how absurd it is in me to ask opportunities for the old friendly converse, the old interchange of thought and feeling, the old days of love and interest in each other. There was a time when the prospect of a cruise on the Titania would have elicited at least expressions of delight. But the dream has ended; I have been awakened."

"Don't be absurd, Frank," said she, a little softer and with a slight mist in her eyes, which in his blindness he did not see, as he arose and stood before the window. "We are not the girl and boy we were then, seeing nothing beyond each other, sailing about in an enchanted sea, and drinking deep draughts of nectar, with no thoughts of the morrow. Very delightful it all was, I will own; but you must remember we have now our duties to society to perform. I have social claims now that I had not then, and which to avoid would argue myself ill-bred. You have come back expecting everything at once to run in its old groove, and in your hot impetuosity making no allowance for added years and changed circumstances. It is you who is unjust, ungrateful, cruel. But what can one expect from a man? They are all alike—everything must yield to their selfish egotism; and if anything does happen to cross their humor, if we cannot yield them everything they desire, straightway, forsooth, they become children, fly into a passion, inveigh against everybody, and finally go off in a fit of the sulks."

"The tongues of mocking wenches are keen as is the razor's edge invisible," he murmured, sotto voce, then adding aloud, "Mr. Frank Arnold's compliments to Miss Elinor Durand, and his thanks, both on behalf of his sex and himself, for her very flattering opinion. And if Miss Durand has finished, and can spare the time, and if the heat is not too oppressive, and if there be positively nothing she thinks she must do, and if her attention to her guests can allow of a few moments more relaxation, Mr. Arnold would like to address her."

"Mr. Arnold has liberty to use Miss Durand's time as he pleases."

He turned from the window and stood before her. She looked up lazily, trying to appear nonchalant, but raging inwardly. He broke forth fiercely:

"Nelly, three years ago, when I was but a boy and you a bright, fresh, innocent, lovely girl, you won what there was to win of my heart, and you loved me in return. There were then no deceit, no bowing to fashion, no yielding to the heartless dictates of society; and when, after weeks of close intimacy, I told you I loved you, asked you to share my life, laid my heart at your feet, and urged you to return my affection, there was no hesitation, no coquetry in you. You didn't stop to think of prudence, of what Mrs. Grundy might say; but straight from the heart came the answer you could not utter, but spoken by your truthful eyes. We, a boy of 20 and a girl of 17, became engaged. Then followed some weeks of enchantment and delight, marred only by occasional exhibitions of your willful obstinacy. Over this, we had one or two quarrels; but you were kinder in those days, and we loved each other, and, somehow, they were reconciled. Then we had to part, and for three years we have talked to each other only on paper. And how these letters have cheered and encouraged and helped me! For you I have striven; for you I have become what I am. Your bright image has been ever before me; your memory has kept me pure in the midst of every temptation. Whatever success I may have had is entirely due to your influence. Your letters were like your old self, willful at times, but, on the whole, sweet and delightful. They gave me no hint of the change I was to find. I returned home with my heart swelling with pride and love; I came to you the very first moment, expecting to find my old, loving, fresh, bright Nell, and what do I find? Imagine my bitter disappointment when, instead of what I had fondly hoped for, I see a cold, polished, fashionable woman of the world, plunged and absorbed in the exciting whirl of society—nothing left of the old, playful, impetuous, innocent girl who won me—seeming to care nothing of me nor my desires, should they happen to conflict with the demands of society; worshiping fashion first, and placing everything in her affections before the man she truly loved. It is a bitter awakening! My belief in human nature is shattered. I think we had better part; we can never make each other happy—our tastes, our ideas, our requirements are too different. What pleases me most is your tete noir; and of all things, a fashionable existence is the most distasteful. Oh, my darling, my darling! Why is it so? Why are you not the fresh girl of 17? Why did I ever leave you? But, alas! what is the use of complaining? We are what we are, and it is useless to mourn!"

And the strong man dropped back in the chair, with a dry sob in his throat.

Her face had grown very pale, her eyes had lost their mocking expression, and she seemed transformed from the lazy, nonchalant, exasperating creature of a few moments before, who had drawled out her words with such insufferable accent. She sat upright with her eyes fixed before her, her hands clasped in her lap, and began in low, quiet tones, yet with an undercurrent of passion:

"Frank, you are not just—you are not fair. You are bitter, and say things you will some day repent. Since you have called up the past, let me do so also—let me, perhaps, explain much that to you seems wrong, and then, after you have patiently heard me—then, if it seems to both of us that we had better part—why, then, we can bid each other good-by at least, with a faint smile, in a quiet, untragic manner—and—and drift apart. The world is large enough for both to live in, without bitterness. Don't interrupt me, please; let me tell my story in my own way. You know you say I'm willful, so yield to me. Three years ago, when we—when we knew each other, I was, as you say, a fresh, innocent girl of 17. You were my first love, my first hero; on you I poured the whole wealth of a young heart. I lived in heaven when you were with me, and that summer was a long dream of delight, an idyllic poem, a bit of Mahomet's paradise. We had faults, as you say. If I was obstinate, you were impetuous, exacting, jumping hastily into conclusions—a fiery, uncontrollable boy; but, with it all, so loving, so tender! And then we really tried to soften the asperities in our characters, to become like unto each other, to understand and condone each other's faults and weaknesses, and to help each other to be better. Ah! we were enthusiasts in those days; we dreamed of love in a cottage, of a Utopia in which we would live a perfect life. Well, you had to leave me, and I settled down from romance to the prosaic business of life, cheered only be our frequent letters. I was very happy for a while—I think I remained about the same girl you left me—and then—and then—you know my mother died."

"Poor little Nelly!" Was it a whisper? He had not moved, and she did not look at him.

"Well, after those weeks of gloom I came to live with auntie, and then began another kind of life. She was one of the leaders in fashionable society, and I was forced into it. Of course the first year was quiet; but then I was caught in the vortex, and at first I was intoxicated. We went everywhere; night after night I spent in rounds of fashionable dissipation; I became a fashionable butterfly, with no higher thoughts or aspirations—except when I thought of you—than dresses, jewels, balls, parties and operas. I had a feeling you would not altogether approve of it, and so said nothing in my letters. After a while it palled upon me, and I became surfeited; but still I must keep it up—when you have once commenced, there is no escape, no chance to stop. Aunt enjoyed it to the uttermost. She found the care and superintendence of the house more than she could undertake, and still live up to the demands of fashion. So, gradually, I became almost the lady of the house. She resigned all details to me, and hence it is I am charged with all the care, the amusement and entertainment of the guests. Believe me or not, the artificial life has grown very wearisome to me. But que voulez-vous? I have had to live it, and it has changed me, apparently, a great deal. I have never felt it so much as while you were talking. But I do not believe my mind or my heart has been warped by it. You do not like my manner, and you judge of me by my superficial appearance. We meet almost as strangers. Three years of absence, just at the most critical period of our lives, has had the effect of making new people of us, and we have not yet had time to get acquainted. We should learn again, as we once did, to bear and forbear. We have both of us expected to find our old friends, and we have both been disappointed. But shall this part us? Shall all those old vows be as though unspoken? Shall three years' devotion to an ideal go for naught? Have we drifted so far asunder we can never be reunited? Are we each to live out our destinies alone and apart? Ah, dear! what shall it be? Shall we say good-by? Can we have no charity for each other's failings? Has the past taught us no lesson?"

She paused, and then for the first time looked at him. He rose and paced slowly across the room.

"I'm waiting, dear," she said.

He turned toward her; she rose, and they looked in each other's eyes. The next moment she had glided across the room, and was sobbing on his breast. What had she seen in his face? Pity, repentance, self-condemnation, hope, and, above all, a great yearning love shining through all.

"My poor little girl," he tenderly said, "what a brute I have been—how cross, unmannerly, boorish! But I have been long from ladies' society and I have much to learn. Will you forgive, and teach me? We will learn charity and forbearance together, and we will yet have our Utopian home?"

"Oh, Frank! you are too good—too good to me!"

"Hush, my darling!" he said.

And when, an hour or so afterward, the people returned from their ride, they found Nelly still demurely embroidering in the morning-room, while Frank was composedly reading a volume of poetry upside down.

Mrs. Durand's eyes were very sharp, and she cried:

"Have you named the day, you two humbugs?"

"The 21st of October," whispered Nell, with a happy blush.

A STRANGE OCCURRENCE.

Fighting with a Wild Boar—Narrow Escape from Death.

[From the Davenport (Iowa) Gazette.]

The premises of Mrs. Mary Burns, on the south side of Locust street, nearly opposite Chestnut street, were the scene of occurrences, yesterday afternoon, the account of which is enough to give one the chills.

It was about half-past 4 o'clock when Dr. R. F. Baker called at the house of Mrs. Burns to attend her son Ned, aged 7 years, who had been attacked and severely injured by a ferocious boar. The beast had wandered into the yard from somewhere, and when the child attempted to drive it out it turned upon the boy, knocked him down and put its tusks into his face, arms and legs, rolled him over and over and bruised him from head to foot. The boy's screams brought his mother to the door, and, nearly frantic, she went to the rescue of the child. Why the boar ran off when she approached she doesn't know; but it did leave the child, and she carried him to the house and sent for the doctor. This is chapter one of the fearful story.

Chapter two is more shocking still. Mrs. Burns thought of her other children, who would soon return from school, and made another attempt to drive the beast away, but soon retreated to the house. Then her little girl entered the yard; the boar rushed for her, and she fled. By this time the doctor was ready to leave. As he went out of the front door Mrs. Burns made another effort to expel the brute. The doctor saw her after he was seated in his buggy, and returned to assist her. He went to stoning the boar, which turned and rushed for him. The doctor picked up a ball-club, and made up his mind to let the beast come, to jump aside, and to strike it across the head as it passed. He struck the beast as it confronted him, but the blow fell upon its neck and shoulders and failed to halt it for a second, and it seized his left knee, threw him down, and then went at him with the fury of a maddened tiger. It put its tusks through his left forearm, through the inner part of his right thigh, inflicted several lighter wounds, and tore his clothes to ribbons. He was utterly powerless, so quick was the boar in its movements. When he attempted to rise it would dart at him, knock him down and "root" at him with furious strength. The woman looked on in terror. At last the doctor managed to get on his feet, seize the club again, and give the boar a terrific blow across the snout, at which it turned and walked off with a squeal and a grunt. The doctor hastened to his buggy and drove to his home, No. 629 Iowa street, a full mile from the place of the conflict. Before he arrived there, however, he was suffering intensely. He summoned medical assistance, and his wounds were attended to. The one in the knee caused terrible pain, the tusk having penetrated the bone.

Susie Loosey's Adventure.

The New York Express relates this incident: "Mrs. Van Buskirk, wife of James Van Buskirk, of Bayonne, while sitting at a window looking through a glass at the terrible storm raging on the bay on Sunday evening last, saw a skiff adrift near Robbins' reef light, with a little girl sitting alone in the stern of the frail craft. Mrs. Van Buskirk informed her husband, and, without a moment's delay, he with his brother Henry leaped into a boat, and, although the wind was blowing a gale and the rain pouring in torrents, pulled manfully for the distant skiff. It was nearly an hour before they reached the little one, and found her exhausted from fright and exposure. She was completely drenched, and the boat was half filled with water. She said her name was Susie Loosey, her age 7 years, and she lived at Stapleton, Staten Island. She had gone down on the shore in the morning to play with some companions, and while in a boat they playfully pushed her out. The strong wind and heavy sea carried her rapidly from the shore, and her frightened companions ran away."

Price of Clothing.

Leading clothing men think they have reached hard pan prices at last and express themselves as feeling better and safer than for some time past. They say that they are selling better goods at the present time than they sold for the same money before the war. The hard times have had another effect than to reduce the price of clothing. They have resulted in a very marked improvement in the quality of woolen fabrics of American manufacture. When thousands of young men who had been in the habit of buying suits made up of imported goods were obliged by the exigencies of the times to content themselves with articles of home manufacture, the cloth makers exerted themselves to turn out a fine quality of cloths and cassimeres, and the result is a better article of home manufacture than has heretofore been made; which will prove a benefit to both buyer and seller.

Indians as Soldiers.

Would the Indian make a good recruit for the army? Capt. C. E. S. McDonald, a Scotch resident of California, asked himself this question, and then suggested to the War Department that it should empower him to train several hundred Indians, promising to demand no pay for furnishing an excellent regiment within three months. The proffer was declined. McDonald was, apparently, not discouraged by the rebuff. He has recently been giving exhibitions in London, Eng., with eight Indians trained to execute military evolutions, and tells his audiences that he has 200 more on the plains who are equally well trained. The English newspapers state that the evolutions are executed in thoroughly soldier-like style, and suggest that "instead of being incapable and useless, these men might be rendered as serviceable to America as the Algerians were to France or the Sepoys to England."

FASHION AND ART

Hand in Hand at the Chicago Exposition—Western Supremacy Illustrated.

A CRYSTAL SALON,

Wherein Are Grouped Figures of Consummate Taste and Beauty.

From The Chicago Times, Sept. 21.

The great waves of travel are surging through Chicago, as the flood of visitors Centennialward reaches the climax of its flow. It is pleasant to note that a generous proportion of all the travelers, whether rushing toward or ebbing back from Philadelphia, take the time to make the tour of our Chicago Exposition. Pleasanter still is the fact that only good words in behalf of the display down by the lake shore are heard from all such visitors. The grand exhibit at Fairmount Park presents the condensed richness of the whole world, while the showing here claims modestly to represent only the capabilities of the West. Yet we have our points of supremacy, and oddly enough they come in just where, at first thought, one would hardly have looked to see us excel.

Think, for instance, of the great phase of art involved in the designing and finishing of feminine attire. Think of French predominance in this line; of the fact that Paris is the conceded fount of every blessing, from whence flows all that is new and autocratic in modes, and then think that French fashions have a peculiarly conspicuous showing at the Centennial. After remembering all this, is it not a matter to make even dull masculinity tingle with wonderment and pride to know that the Chicago Exposition presents an exhibit of toilet and dress goods considerably more elegant than is made by any single exhibitor at Philadelphia?

The writer, a dweller for three months during the summer in the Centennial city, and an almost daily visitor to the assembled contributions of nations, took a turn through the less pretentious display in Chicago early the present week. It was a revelation to discover in the spacious and airy crystal apartment, blazoned with the name of Charles Gossage & Co., was grouped a more comprehensive, varied and beautiful showing of ladies' costumes and dress material than could be remembered in connection with an exhibit at the great Philadelphia bazar. Knowing the facility with which individual judgment is apt to tumble into unconscious error, the writer took pains to fortify the opinion thus formed by obtaining the ideas of lady friends, art connoisseurs and others who had wandered through the corridors of the greater Exposition. There was solid comfort in recording an unvarying verdict in behalf of home sovereignty.

Within the charming precincts of this Chicago boudoir may be counted some 20 complete toilets. These embrace every variety of costume, from the rich and substantial promenade suits for fall and winter wear, to dazzling evening robes fit to grace the salon of an Empress. Robes for the house, for the opera, for the soiree and for the altar are shown, each complete, distinct and supremely artistic. In richness of material, elaboration of trimming, classical design and finish, harmony of colors, and that final indescribable something summed up in the word "style," there are at least half a dozen full-dress toilets in this enchanting glass house of Gossage & Co.'s which the visitor to Philadelphia's display will vainly search to equal. Better than all, there is a culture and refinement shining in every fold, every detail of ornamentation in these costumes which commend them to the unerring instinct of womankind as robes in which a lady would feel herself more of a lady than ever.

Of the æsthetic judgment which has guided the grouping of these superb costumes, hardly a word seems requisite. The most untutored art soul finds an enjoyment, even if it cannot tell why, in the stately elegance of these silent figures; the accurate blending of hues; the unerring taste which has so placed each figure that it heightens the effect of its sisters; the display of uncut goods magnificent in their scope and richness, and the careless yet carefully-planned strewing of cloaks, India shawls, costly fans, laces, et al., which serves as an admirable foil to the studied grace and imposing sweep of the completed toilets. To the lover of the beautiful, the understanding admirer of the artistic, the display is as substantial a treat as is afforded in the art gallery itself.

Viewing this superb exhibit in its matchless beauty, one does not marvel to see lady visitors from abroad continually catch up the cards of the firm who conceived and contributed it in order to send them in laudatory letters to distant friends, or to personally visit the great establishment from whence all this magnificence emanated.

The noble display, which, we learn, is to be supplemented on the 27th inst. by a still larger and finer one at their own establishment, is hereby commended, in all sincerity, to every lover of true art and faultless costuming sojourning permanently or temporarily in Chicago.

SCIENTISTS ON SPIRITUALISM.

The [illegible] British Association.

At Glasgow, on the 12th ult., in the Anthropological Section, Prof. Barrett read a paper on some phenomena associated with abnormal conditions of mind. The subject was one, however, in regard to which there had been a great change of opinion, and no better instance could be given of this change of front than that afforded by Dr. Carpenter. Prof. Barrett on one occasion took a card and put it in a book, and gave the closed volume to a girl. She held it close to her head a little behind the ear, and then said, "I see something inside the book with red spots on it." He then asked her to count the spots, and she replied that there were five, which proved to be quite correct, for the card was the five of diamonds, and yet he was the only person in the room who could possibly have known what it was. This appeared to him to be a clear case of clairvoyance, and the important point was that every care had been taken to prevent any unconscious muscular action giving any indication to the subject of what she was being asked about. In another case there was a lady who was in the habit of telling the time on a hunting watch after the hands been turned about in all sorts of directions. On one occasion they found, as they thought, that she was wrong. Returning the watch to her they told her so. She persisted, however, that she was right, and on examining the watch they found that such was really the case, and that it was they themselves who had made a mistake. In that case the thoughts of the mesmerist were against those of his subject. He had asked Mr. Maskelyne, one of the cleverest conjurors of the day, and a gentleman who was engaged in an attempt to disprove the reality of Spiritualism, to see some of these phenomena with him, and he had since received a letter from Mr. Maskelyne's manager in which he said, "In matters of this kind your best men of science are more easily deceived than the men of ordinary talent."

Mr. Crookes, speaking as a spiritualist, contended against the theory that people were deluded into the belief that they saw manifestations which never occurred. He maintained that a trained scientific inquirer was much more than a match for any conjurer, and that if it were a mere matter of hallucination the trickery would be found out long ago.

Dr. Carpenter said that there were some people who had a curious power of thought-reading. Detective policemen, he believed, had this power in a wonderful degree, and he referred to the Constance Kent case and others, to show that the officers frequently hit upon the truth by intuition. As to Dr. Slade, he frankly confessed that the gentleman had done things which had astonished him, and just before leaving London he had challenged him to repeat them in his own house, in the company of his own friends, and with nothing but his own furniture in the room. Dr. Slade had agreed to do so, and therefore he considered him on his trial and refrained from saying more of him at present.

Prof. Barrett charged Dr. Carpenter with changing his position.

Dr. Carpenter denied that he had done so, and in regard to what had been said about clairvoyants, referred to the instance in which Sir James Simpson had put a £500 note in a case, and said he would give it to anyone who would tell its number, the result being that it lay untouched for months.

During this exciting incident the Rev. Robt. Thomson was seen at the back of the platform flourishing a bank note, and apparently offering to submit it to the test, but no attention was paid to him.

Prof. Huxley on Evolution.

Prof. Huxley, the distinguished English scientist has just delivered a series of lectures in New York on "The Direct Evidence of Evolution." The following are the closing words of the last lecture of the series :

"When an inductive hypothesis is demonstrated by facts in entire accordance with it, and such as might have been reached by deductive processes, it is firmly established ; if the doctrine of evolution has not been fully established as firmly as and in the way that the Copernican system has been demonstrated beyond the possibility of cavil, nothing has ever been or ever can be proved. The only escape is to say that all these different forms were created separately and at separate epochs, a belief which can never be demonstrated and is not supported by any other evidence or pretended evidence. The time will come when such endeavors to escape the conclusion will be looked upon as are the views of those not yet wholly extinct writers who hold that fossils are no indications of animals, but either the sports of nature or, as has been recently gravely asserted, special creations to test our faith. All evidence favors evolution, and there is none against it. To the uninformed it seems an insuperable objection that geologists, astronomers, and physicists say that not sufficient time has elapsed since the earth grew cool enough to support life for all these changes of form. We look to the geologist and physicist for information in regard to the time necessary for the pro- ction of these forms, the existence of which we absolutely know. Let them set the time ; with that we have nothing to do. There is no foundation for the assertion that evolutionists demand an mpossible time ; the biologist has no ay to judge of time ; he takes his facts om the geologist, who tells how long it ook to lay the rocky deposits. If he ays 500,000,000 years, we suppose he as good grounds for saying so, and so ong it took for the development ; if he ays 15,000,000 years, that was the time which evolution performed its work. uppose Sir William Thompson says hat life could not have existed at such r such states ; evolutionists will tell im to discuss that question with the eologists—we take what they say ; it oes not concern us.

"I have now," said Prof. Huxley, "reached the conclusion of my task. y purpose has not been to enable the ading to leave this hall in a condi- n to decide as to the validity or in- lidity of evolution, but to put before u the principles and facts for judging at hypothesis, and to show you the lue of its evidence and its cogency. accomplish this end I have not hesitated to take you as students through arguments which, sometimes, must have tried your patience, or to inflict upon you details that cannot be avoided. I rejoice to have done you the greatest service in my power, if I have convinced you that so great a question is not to be dealt with in rhetorical flourishes and loose talk, but deserves the keenest attention of the trained intellect and observation. When I began I did not think it necessary to form a prologue as a stranger, for I have met so many friends in this country that to do so would have been out of place."

Suspected Duties.

We suppose that when Mr. Moody was preaching in the Hippodrome there were hundreds who suspected that they ought to imitate his life and labor. Perhaps some of them ought to do so; and the chances are that such of them as ought to do so will do so. They will be moved to it irresistibly, because the powers in them, corresponding to his, will clamor for their natural expression. But a man who is not moved to this is not convicted of being a poorer Christian than Mr. Moody by that fact. Mr. Moody has a gift for preaching—a gift for approaching men personally, and directing them wisely—a gift that has been greatly improved by use, of course, but still a gift, without which he could never have begun his mission. Most men have no gift for public speech, and therefore public speech is no part of their duty. They need not suspect themselves on this account, or blame themselves or in any way make themselves unhappy over it.

There are a great many kinds of work to be done in the world, and just as many varieties of men who are made to do it. No one man can do the work of another. The business of each is to find exactly, or as nearly as he can, the work he is best fitted to do, and to do it with all his might. This entire, overshadowing burden of suspected duties ought to be lifted, and the great world of dissatisfaction and self-condemnation that lies under it opened to the sunlight of peace. Our social and our religious teachers, especially the latter, have a duty in this matter toward their disciples which they need not suspect for a moment. They have no right to set a man to doing that which he can never do with profit to himself or others, or instill the feeling among those who listen to their instructions that their duty lies in lines outside of their conscious or proved abilities. The man who does his duty where he stands, with such implements as God has given him, has a right to the enjoyment of peace and satisfaction ; and to make him suspect that he ought to do something more and something else, is to do him a life-long injury and a great wrong. It is to make a pitiful slave of one who has a right to be free.—Dr. J. G. Holland ; Scribner for October.

Should Women Vote?

Why should not the women vote? asks Danbury Bailey. They are far more practical than are the men, and practicability is what we need in politics if we need it anywhere. Mr. Marshall's experience is illustrative of this phase of the female character. Mr. Marshall's regiment held its reunion in Danbury on Monday. The day opened with a clear sky and bright sun. Mr. Marshall was highly elated. After breakfast he made ready to go down to meet the boys as they came in on the train. He got out on the stoop, and, taking a look over the broad expanse of sunlight, exultingly said to his wife, who was standing in the door :

"What a glorious day, Maria, for the reunion of the gallant band. How anxious I am to see the boys, to look into their eyes, to take them by the hand, to listen to their dear voices. Again we shall in the spirit face the foe, again we shall storm the line of bayonets, again we shall press forward, shoulder to shoulder, in the glare of the fearful contest."

Mr. Marshall stopped speaking. His eyes were lifted dreamily to the horizon, beaming with a new light, while his face flushed with pride. Then his wife softly murmured :

"Don't forget to stop in at Merrill's, Tom ; there is not a potato in the house."

Success of the Centennial.

The Centennial Exhibition will, judging from present indications, prove to be the most successful of any international exhibition. Last Saturday was the 115th day. At that time 4,071,318 paying visitors had been present. The Vienna Exhibition was open 186 days, and the total number of paying visitors only reached 3,492,622. The Vienna proceeds at the gate were $994,025.25, while at Philadelphia, on Saturday, $1,884,534 had already been received—a sum nearly double the Vienna income. The non-paying visitors at the Centennial Exhibition down to Friday last numbered 1,368,509, making a total attendance of 5,439,822 in the 115 days. At London, in 1851, there were 6,039,195 visitors in 141 days ; in 1862, 6,211,103 in 171 days, and at Paris, in 1867, 8,805,969 in 217 days. The receipts at Paris were $2,203,675. The receipts at Philadelphia already approximate this sum, and there still remain thirty-one exhibition days.—New York Tribune.

In the forty years that the Merchant's Gargling Oil has been before the public, thousands of patent medicines have been ushered into the market and retired, while this old remedy has held on its way, increasing in popularity with each succeeding year. Merchant's Gargling Oil is known familiarly the whole length and breadth of the land, and the name of the Secretary, Mr. John Hodge, of Lockport, has a fame as wide as the medicine he dispenses. We have no data as to the number of bottles sent out from the manufactory last year, but the quantity must have been enormous. The company distribute two millions of almanacs and domestic recipe books annually, and when it is remembered that these are given away, some idea of the extent of the advertising enterprise may be formed. A medicine that will stand the test of forty years, as the Merchant's Gargling Oil has done, needs no special indorsement at this late day.—Buffalo Courier.

THE STATE OF TRADE.

An Encouraging Report from New York—A Marked Improvement in the Dry Goods and Other Lines.

[From the New York Times.]

The bottom has been reached after three years of unprofitable business, during which many traders had to give way to financial embarrassment, brought on in a great measure through a system of large and long credits to their customers, which in a great measure is now abolished. A large portion of the business of wholesale merchants is now transacted with cash, and the buyers seem to be of a more substantial class than those who came here three or four years ago. Business of all kinds, too, seems to be springing up in all portions of the country. Mills which have been idle for years are again in motion, and on the whole there is every reason to believe that the evil effects of the financial panic of 1873 are rapidly passing away.

Dry goods merchants say that the condition of their business has improved recently, that the improvement is steadily going on, and they look forward to a healthy and profitable fall trade. The boot and shoe dealers say that trade is very good, and that reports from all parts of the country are of a most encouraging character. The hide and leather trade improves as the autumn trade advances, and, as a prominent merchant said, "It is beginning to feel the invigorating effects of the improved business pulse." The export trade in leather is very good; the home demand is increasing, and a gradual and steady improvement is expected during the fall.

The carpet and upholstery trade has greatly improved during the past month; the demand has been very active, and business is in a healthier condition than it has been for many years. The wine and liquor dealers have no reason to complain of the dullness of trade. They say the prospects for the fall are very encouraging, and that a marked improvement has taken place since August in the volume of business transacted. The consumption of spirituous liquors is admitted to have fallen off, owing to the "depressed times," the patrons of corner groggeries not having money to spend in luxuries. There does not, however, seem to have been any decrease in the consumption of ale or lager beer, the tendency being rather in the opposite direction.

The grocery trade is in a very healthy condition, business during the summer having been good, and the fall prospects are considered encouraging, though at the moment operations in the wholesale line show some abatement of activity. The iron trade, which has been, perhaps, in a worse condition than any other branch of business, is showing signs of activity, and the prospects are regarded as hopeful. There is not much to be said at present in favor of the building trade, but the revival in other branches of business will no doubt be soon felt by this branch of industry; and, in some relations, even this interest is picking up a little. Considering that we have passed through three years of unexampled depression in the business world, the prospects, on the whole, are very favorable indeed, and will tend to cheer those who were beginning to lose hope in the future.

Things Worth Knowing.

Kid gloves are not kid, but are made of lambskin or sheepskin.

Arabic figures were not invented by the Arabs, but by the Indians.

Tube rose is no rose, but the tuberous palianth (palianthes tuberosa).

Black lead does not contain a single particle of lead, but is composed chiefly of carbon.

Turkish baths are not of Turkish origin ; nor are they baths at all. They are hot air rooms.

Prussian blue does not come from Prussia, but is the precipitate of the salt of protoxide of iron with prussiate of potassa.

Brazilian grass does not come from Brazil, or even grow in Brazil ; nor is it grass at all. It consists of strips of palm-leaf, and is chiefly imported from Cuba.

Whalebone is no bone at all ; nor does it possess any properties of bone. It is a substance attached to the lower jaw of the whale, and seems to strain the water, which the creature takes up in large mouthfuls.

Sealing-wax is not wax at all ; nor does it contain a single particle of wax. It is composed of shellac, Venice turpentine and cinnabar. Cinnabar gives it the deep red color, and turpentine renders the shellac soft and less brittle.

Burgundy pitch is not pitch ; nor is it manufactured or exported from Burgundy. The best is a resinous substance, prepared from common frankincense, and brought from Hamburg ; but by far the largest quantity is a mixture of resin and palm-oil.

Copperas contains no copper, but consists of sulphate of iron.

Cobalt, sold as a fly poison, contains no cobalt ; but consists of impure metallic arsenic.

Red precipitate or red oxide of mercury is not made by precipitation, but by heating the nitrate of mercury ; when precipitated it has a yellowish color.

New York Full of Strangers.

Within the past ten days over 60,000 strangers have come to New York, on the way to or coming from the Centennial Exhibition. The hotels are crowded to excess, and many applicants for rooms and board are necessarily turned away. Some landlords are paying for lodgings for the help, and guests are sleeping in the servants' rooms. The following figures show the number of persons registered in thirty-nine of the principal hotels in this city : Sept. 12, 3,920 ; Sept. 13, 2,600 ; Sept. 14, 2,558; Sept. 15, 3,000 ; Sept. 16 and 17, 4,350; Sept. 18, 3,900 ; Sept. 19, 3,720. Total in eight days, 24,048. These figures do not indicate the aggregate of what are termed "hotel arrivals," for there are hundreds of small hotels whose boarders are not recorded.—New York Sun.

WOOD'S IMPROVED HAIR RESTORATIVE
[illegible]

It restores, quickly, Gray Hair to its glossy Natural color. It has the effect of Restoring the Hair to prematurely Bald Heads. It Removes Dandruff, Humors and all Eruptions from the Scalp. It prevents Irritation, Itching and Scaly Skin. It Restores Dryness of the faded, dry, harsh and falling Hair. It renews, dresses, softens and gives vigor to the growth of the Hair. It accomplishes more desired effects in a short time than any Restorative ever made, always leaving the hair soft, lively and glossy, whether used as a Dressing upon the natural hair or upon the hair in an unhealthy condition ; thus rendering it, for the Old and Young, an article of unequaled excellence. No preparation offered to the public produces such wonderful results. Try it! Try it! and call for "Wood's Improved!" as it contains no injurious qualities.

It was originally introduced 20 years ago by Prof. O. J. Wood, but the recent change of ingredients in this article is making a demand for it in all parts of the United States, Canadas and foreign countries.

ANNOUNCEMENT TO CONSUMERS!

The great radical improvement introduced in this article has induced us to take the agency and advertise its virtues to the world. Its effects as a Restorative are what has been long sought for and wanted for many years, being more decided and satisfactory than has ever before been attained. No Druggist in the world knows its composition, and cannot when called for make it; therefore if "Wood's Improved," do not let any unprincipled dealer convince you that he has a Restorative or Renewer as good, or something similar, as there is none like it! Insist upon having "Wood's Improved," and take no other, for your money! It will not be long before all dealers everywhere will have it. If you should fail to find it, you can send $1.00 to us by mail for a bottle, or $5.00 for six bottles, and we will send it to you, prepaid to any [illegible].

Saving a Million Dollars a Week.

A nice economical party the Republican party is for hard times. They increased their estimates for running the Government, $25,425,698 over the appriations of last year. They asked for $208,099,025, or nearly a million dollars a day—an expenditure nearly on the scare of that of war times. The House cut them down to $120,611,881, and would have kept them down to $109,254,140 if it had not been for the obstinacy of a wasteful Senate. As it was, in spite of the resistance of the Senate, the Democratic House cut down the Republican estimates $55,880,650 In other words, the Democratic House saved the tax-payers of the country $161,725 a day, for a year to come; $1,065,012 a week for a year to come. This is the work of the Democratic party in one year in Congress. In two years of Democratic administration in New York, the taxes have been reduced one-half. The Democracy is the party for hard times.

The Outrage Mill.

The outrage mills are getting into full blast. The near approach of the elections renders longer delay in forwarding a large supply hazardous to the Republicans in those States. The operations at the chief outrage factories in the South having been commenced rather late, and carried on very tardily, orders have recently been given to put on a double head of steam, and send northward and westward immense quantities of the choicest grades of the sanguinary article, without delay.

And the order is promptly obeyed. Outrages are arriving daily, as witness all the Hayes journals from Massachusetts Bay to the Missouri river. And they are of the rarest quality, too! Peaceable negroes—so these newspapers tell us—while travelling on the highways, are seized and slaughtered. Industrious negroes, while at work in the fields, are driven into the neighboring bushes and their compelled to lie down and have their throats cut. Railway trains loaded with preambulating negroes, doubtless, [illegible] shot down. Scarcely a political meeting can be held at which a dozen or two of unoffending Hayes voters of the dark stripe are not put to death. The sum total of the victims of the past two or three weeks has not yet come forward. It must be very large, for a superintendent of one of the small mills in South Carolina informs the Northern and Western Republicans that within the previous three days, in a very narrow locality, "at least one hundred negroes have been killed." Taking this as a basis for a sweeping calculation, the whole number killed (by telegraph and by mail) in the entire South, within this present month, must be not far from twenty thousand. Though one of the accounts reveals the humiliating truth that "the Associated Press suppresses all mention of the facts," this ought to excite no doubt of the trustworthy characters of the reports, because the same writer tells us that "they are vouched for by the Congressional Committee"—meaning, we suppose, Zach Chandler's and Bill Kemble's council of select men, who manage the campaign below the Potomac.

Seriously, though, does any well-informed, unprejudiced, sensible person believe this bloody-shirt fanfaronade? A like series of ghastly tales was told four years ago, just previous to the Presidential election, and was repeated, with harrowing supplements two years ago, immediately before the elections which were to decide the political complexion of the next Congress. After the excitement of the last named canvass had passed away, some Northern and Western journals sent trustworthy correspondents into the South to inquire into the truth of the bloody stories with which the Republican managers had tried to frighten timid voters into the support of Grantism. In due time the real facts came to the surface. It turned out the great mass of these so-called bloody outrages upon negroes were sheer fabrications, or in other words, unmitigated lies; and that in respect to all the rest they were tissues of falsehoods, interspersed with a few feeble threads of truth. And yet, strange to say, some of the very journals that exposed the fabrications of two years ago are now so infatuated with the Hayes mania that they are turning up the whites of their eyes at the clumsy inventions that these same carpet-bag liars are trying to palm off upon us.

We should not be surprised to hear that Grandfather Taft, who is the legal adviser of the outrage manufacturers, does put full faith in these stories, for he is one of the most credulous old chaps in Ohio. Taft is always frightened at something. Last year, during the Allen and Hayes contest in Ohio, he was in extreme trepidation about the Pope. To hear Taft on the platform in that campaign, one would suppose that his holiness had already lauded and was at that moment skulking in the bushes on the margin of the Ohio or the Muskingum, ready to rally forth and bag the common schools of the State and bundle them off to the Vatican.

And Chandler and Taft are running the outrage mills in the South, and the bloody-shirt crusade in the North! Ought not sober, discreet, truthful Republicans to turn their backs on such leaders?

TIMELY POLITICAL MAXIMS.

From Authors who are not Unknown to American People.

There are no instance of the errors of a Government being rectified by those who adopted them.

PATRICK HENRY—1788.

There is a chance that in the quick succession of despots a good one will sometimes arise. But bodies of men continue the same, and have generally proved the most unrelenting of tyrants.

RICHARD PRICE—1776.

All men possessed of power may be expected to prolong it beyond the due time, and to increase it beyond the due bonds; neither of which can be attempted without danger to liberty.

Bergh's Political Disquisitions, published in Philadelphia, in 1774, under patronage of Congress.

Men in all ages and nations have shown an astonishing credulity in their faithless fellow creatures; they have hoped against hope; they have believed against the sight of their own eyes.

BERGH.

We know by infinite examples and experience that men possessed of power, rather than part with it, will do anything—even the worst and blackest—to keep it.

BERGH.

To take the character of man from history, he is a creature capable of anything, the most infurnally cruel and horrid when actuated by interest or passion, and not in immediate fear of punishment from his fellow creatures. Who would trust such a mischievous monkey [illegible] rs taking bribes, is enslaved.

RICHARD PRICE—1776.

[illegible]st shut the door against corruption [illegible] that place where it is most dangerous—the servants of the people.

EDMUND RANDOLPH—1788.

It is the experience of ages that professions of disinterestedness and of attachment of rectitude cannot solely be trusted to by an enlightened and free people. PATRICK HENRY.

Cæsar tells us he feared Pompy's tyranny if he himself resinhed the dictatorial power. BERGH.

Though Cæsar gave innumerable proofs of that lawless ambition which afterward overthrew the liberties of his country, yet too credulous people, with their own hands, put into his the sword with which he stabbed liberty to the heart.

BERGH.

The Romans had become slavesh enough to support the man who they knew, or ought to have known, was laying measures of subduing their country

BERGH.

Where there is honesty opposition necessarily arises to the government in all free States; therefore, a constant, unvarying legislative majority is a phenomenon which no natural or moral principle can account for. It is a monstrous and obscene birth from the prolific ferment of corruption.

THOMAS PAINE—1775.

Where the people are sufferers by their governors those governors have failed of the main design of their institution, and it is of no importance what other ends they may have answered.

BERGH.

In almost every age and country the Government has been the principal grievance of the people, as appears too dreadfully manifest from the bloody and deformed page of history.

BERGH.

The people must make their selection between economy and liberty on the one hand, and profusion and servitude on the other. JEFFERSON.

Economy and industry are essential to public happiness. Bad government takes away the incitement to industry by rendering property insecure and unprotected.

JOHN MARSHALL—1788.

Money To Loan.

C. A. O. McClellan, of Waterloo, Ind., has now completed his arrangements to loan an unlimited amount of money on five years time in sums of ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS and upwards, at nine per cent. interest payable semi-annually, on first mortgage security on improved farms. Pennsylvania Day at Centennial.

Morning dawned bright and beautiful. All nature seemed to have on her very best array, all for the great and glorious Pennsylvania day. With the first peep of dawn the noise and excitement began, and had scarcely subsided on the dawn of the 29th. Children were thronging the streets at six thirty to secure the earliest cars before the great mass began to move in that direction.

The schools were closed, and all the little folks were admitted for twenty-five cents. How thick they were. Big and little, rich and poor. Important in uniform and regalia, or saucy and independent in bare feet and patched clothing. The various homes were well represented.

By noon the crowd was immense and every one seemed in good spirits. Not a drunken person, no swearing or fighting, and scarcely an impolite or rude action did I see or hear of in all that vast crowd of 260,000 people. Every Philadelphian you meet is as jubilant over the immense throng. "Anything to beat New York," you would hear every where Suppose they were famishing with hunger with not the ghost of a chance to satisfy it. If they could only double the numbers on New York day, patriotism would keep them from fainting.

The buildings were so full it was impossible to see anything but people so the majority gave up all attempt to do so, and simply wandered around from place to place watching the crowd. You could find no place on the grounds that was not crowded.

Those who were fortunate enough to neglect to bring lunch suffered for it. Every restaurant on the grounds found it utterly impossible to supply the demand for food. The dairy always crowded, for there the hungry can appease it with a bowl of delicious milk and bread for the small sum of fifteen cents, was literally taken by storm.

The Pennsylvania House was a perfect jam all day, and let those who could get near describe the speeches of the Governor and others. The Governor's speech of welcome and the shaking the hands of the thousands of his ambitious citizens.

At five and one-half o'clock our party of seventeen met at the Soldier, between Main and Art Gallerys. The Captain gave command, and we wended our way slowly with great effort, to the foot of George's Hill to witness the fire works. Our accomodations was a very wet ground under foot, a six inch wide door-step for a seat, exchanged between us when we could no longer stand, and a chill wind to give us cheer. About three hours of this and we were ready for the next scene. The fire works lasted about six hours, commencing at 7:30. First, rockets; then the bust of George Washington which would have been finer had not the face almost disappeared before the head and cue come.

Balloons went up with rockets attached which exploded in the air. Immense showers of rockets of red, white and blue; rockets of every color, fountains, &c. The principle figure was a picture of Uncle Sam holding the American flag, a scroll above with "Welcome to all nations"; on the left, palm trees and the figures 1776 and 1876. This was quite a success. We felt repaid, yet somewhat disappointed. Could that be $50,000 worth of fire works?

The "tug of war" came when we started for home. The long walk to the main entravce was simply terible. It was a solid mass of human beings. All we could do was to form line, catch hold of the clothing of the one in front, take about two inch steps and drag out that endless length. Of course the man and carriage failed to put in an appearance as absolutely promised. Street cars were loaded, no, packed like herring in a box, steps, till not one more foot could find a resting place, and even they were hanging by the windows. How I pitied the poor horses.

After walking many squares toward home, searching for rest for our weary feet we met a coal wagon, high up in the air, with chairs in it; and never was a ride enjoyed more than our party enjoyed the ride to our boarding places through the most beautiful part of the city in the moon light. And if our beds were not down we were too thankful to creep into them as the wee sma' hours approached to question it. M. C.

A Majority of the Electoral Votes thus far for Tilden.

Let us cast up the accounts for the year. Within another week ten States all told, will have held State elections, during the present [illegible] seven; [illegible]ty-two; Oregon, three; Vermont, five; West Virginia, five. Only two of these States voted for the Democratic candidate in 1872, and he received but twenty-one out of their ninety-four electoral votes. These was Georgia and Kentucky. This year the Democrats have already carried, by majorities which admit of no doubt of the vote of these States for Tilden, Alabama, Connecticut, Kentucky and Oregon. All four of these States voted for Grant in 1872. They cast twenty-nine electoral votes, so that out of these ninety-four electoral votes, Gov. Tilden is already assured of forty, nearly one-half. But West Virginia is a certain to vote for Tilden as Kentucky, and its five votes give Gov. Tilden forty-five out of the ninety-four votes. It will be noticed that Ohio and Indiana are not ocnsidered in this calculation at all, and Colorado is omitted as a new State altogether. The Democrats have good reason to believe that they can carry both of the great October States, but, for the purpose of comparison, give Gov. Haye's State to him, and give Indiana to the Democrats. About this latter result there can scarcely be any question. This gives Gov. Tilden sixty out of the ninety-four electoral votes, or almost exactly two-thirds. These votes are more than one-fourth of the whole Electoral College. The gain for the Democratic vote is fourty one per cent. Equal gains throughout the Electoral College—and the marked decrease of the Republican vote in Maine and Vermont, indicates such a result—Gov. Tilden will have fifty-nine per cent. of the whole electoral vote, or more than 215.

CATARRH.—If you would avoid being rendered deaf, or unfit to mingle in society, on account of foul and nauseating discharges from gangrenous ulcers in the head, use Dr. Detchon's celebrated Catarrh Remedy. It is the greatest cure and control for the hideous destroyer, the world ever saw. It will save every life threatened by it. It immediately arrests its progress and if perseveringly used, will never disappoint in a cure. Go to Davenport's Drug Store, and get a sample bottle free. Sept. 30

August Flower.

The most miserable beings in the world are those suffering from Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint. More than seventy-five per cent of the people in the United States are afflicted with these two diseases and their effect such as sour stomach, sick headache, habitual Costiveness, palpitation of the Heart, heart-burn, water-brash, gnawing and burning pains at the pit of the stomach, yellow skin, coated tongue and disagreeable taste in the mouth, coming up of food after eating, low spirits, &c.—Go to the drug store of F. E. Davenport and get a 75c bottle, or a sample bottle for 10c. Try it. Two doses will relieve you.

BAWLING BELLA.

BY F. B. [illegible]

O dear! some cotton! what a fearful din!
Why, there she stands the sweetest elf alive,
Her hair untortured by a crimping pin,
The widest little shoes we could contrive,
No cruel corset there [illegible] to fear;
From a loose belt her light sash fluttering falls,
The very picture of little ease, and yet—
She bawls! our Bella bawls!

And how she bawls! just see those knotted scowls,
How the sobs struggle in her little throat;
What swelling gurgles, what tumultuous howls,
And then, at last, that long, wild, piercing note;
Poor Bridget trembles, faithless brothers jeer,
Mamma turns pale, "Who's killed?" her father calls,
And the wide eyes of startled guests say, "Hear!"
"She bawls! your Bella bawls!"

And all the world seems bawling in reply;
Nat barks like mad, the cross old parrot scolds,
The six canaries, sworn to do or die,
Shriek till a napkin every cage enfolds;
The robins wrangle where the cherries grow,
The horses whinny in the distant stalls,
The hens all cackle, and the roosters crow—
She bawls! our Bella bawls!

With angry hum the bees go buzzing by,
The sparrows bicker sharply on the eaves,
The ruffled peacock screams a fierce reply,
The rose-tree rattles all her fretful leaves,
The very winds of heaven, in pettish flaws,
Break from the frowning clouds in clamorous squalls,
The sleepy thunder growls, and all because
She bawls! our Bella bawls!

Why does she bawl? Dear me! I wish I knew!
Come see these lovely ladies in a row,
With yellow curls and eyes of summer blue,
From Paris, all complete from top to toe.
What if those two who've lost their wigs look ill,
What if that stupid Bid will call them "dawls," We'll say they're queens and countesses; oh, still
She bawls! our Bella bawls!

She's turning purple! Oh, what shall I do?
She'll split her little larynx in a trice;
Come, darling, look! your tea-things from Aunt Sue.
O pet! this milk and water is so nice,
The raisins must have come just fresh from Spain,
And these meringues, in melting foamy balls,
The sweetest things you ever ate! in vain—
She bawls! our Bella bawls!

Mamma, mamma! one choked and gasping cry,
Then shivering on that gentle breast she lies,
"Sing, sing," she sobs; the tempest passes by,
The starlight glimmers in the softening eyes,
And on that storm-swept little heart and brain
Falls the sweet voice, as David's harp on Saul's,
There is no charm like mother's singing, when
She bawls! our Bella bawls!

BY THE THICKNESS OF A BUTTON.

"Ah! there you come at last, do you? The punch has had a full head of steam on this long time," cried old Engineer Zimmermann to several sturdy figures, who, deep buried in thick furs, that left only red noses and gleaming eyes exposed, came puffing, and stamping, and covered with snow, into the engineer's room at Burglitz.

It is New Year's eve, and the table in the engineer's room is covered with an exceptional neat white cloth, and on it, next the stove, stands the mighty bowl, at which old Zimmermann is vigorously working, while the clouds of steam that rise from it, and the empty rum-flasks that stand by it, leave no doubt that its contents are devoted to go at high pressure into throats of boiler-iron—a genuine engineer's punch.

"The devil! Uncle Zimmermann; hard old Sylvester's day this, eh?" cried the new-comers, shaking off the snow, and pulling off furs, jackets, caps and outer boots.

"What do you sugar-babies know of hard days in your glass houses, on your machines that rock you with their easy springs as gentle as if you were in your nurses' arms? You ought to have served with us back to '39 and '40 on the little machines that went so hard and jolting you felt every jog of the rails, from the soles of your feet up under your caps, and that wouldn't budge a foot if the snow lay a hand's-breadth deep on the rails, and then we stood all out-of-doors, night and day, without screen or shelter, summer and winter, the hottest day in July and the coldest day in December, without any protection but our coats and a buffalo outside-coat, that had been well drubbed, I tell you, by the storms. That was something like hard times. But what do you know about it? For that matter, what's the worst you have to do to what they've put our Hennig through here to-day, who has come off A 1 from his examination? And here he is now."

"Hallo! old fellow. How was it? How did it go? Did they make you sweat? Come, sit down! Bring on the punch!" were the exclamations poured on the new-comer from all sides.

"Less noise there!" broke in the harsh voice of old Zimmermann. "Sit down! Yes! Punch? No! Hornig and Franz aren't here yet, that are coming in with the freight. It is twenty minutes behind now, and must be in in a minute or two more. Glass and glass about for all; that's fair play."

"Well, now," began the young candidate, wiping from his forehead the perspiration that broke out afresh at the recollection, "they gave it me well, I can tell you. I was examined by the new rules, you know. There sat a row of chaps, I guess a rod long, and nary one of 'em, except our engine-master, did I ever see on an engine or in a shop. And our engine-master wasn't the worst, either. They questioned me sharp, that's a fact; right up to the handle. But one could understand them, and give them some sort of reasonable answer. But what the other fellows asked me I didn't more'n half understand. 'Twan't any railroad lingo they used; and what they were driving at—well, yes, I know—I'd looked it up in the books Superintendent Herzel lent me, just to be able to answer. Never saw anything of it in service, never had any occasion for it, and don't believe I ever shall if I live to be 100."

"And what in thunder was it all, then?" began one of the crowd, lighting his cigar, just as the door was suddenly thrown open. A cloud of snow burst in, and out of it emerged the dim forms of two new arrivals—the expected engineers of the two engines that had brought in the belated freight train. 'Bravo! Glad you've got here!" was the greeting that met them. "Now pass round the punch, and let's have the solids in from what's-his-name's."

"Here's a bit of roast for one thing," cried one of the last arrived, and raised to view a half-scorched hare that he held by the hind legs.

"Where did you get that creature? And what are you going to do with him?"

"This fellow wished to do himself the honor of making a part of Hening's treat to-night, but probably was in too much of a hurry, and did himself a little too brown," laughed the possessor of the hare. "The red lights of my 'Pluto' started him out of the hole in the snow where he sat crouched on the bank as comfortable as you please, and he began to run a wager with our train. For two or three minutes, perhaps, I saw the stupid little black rascal skimming over the snow in the second track alongside the engine. I gave a short puff! That scared him; he put out on a spurt, got ahead into the red light of the signal lantern—perhaps that blinded him—he doubled before the engine as he would before a dog, right across the track. I looked to the other side to see when he would come in sight again, but he didn't appear. I thought he was either killed or had run back under the train, and forgot the creature. But when we'd got to Seestadt, and the grate of my engine was being cleaned out, the fellow down underneath there with the poker called out from the ash-hole: 'Hornig, Hornig, you've brought a roast with you. I believe the fire of the Pluto has scorched the fellow's brains. Come down and see! Sure enough, as true as I sit here, there lay my hare underneath in my ash-box, dead and half stewed. The ash-box must have caught him on the jump. He was in a hurry to be roasted."

Loud laughter followed the young engineer's story.

"Now laugh, will you, you stupid blockheads, at the poor beast!" growled Zimmermann, as he filled the glasses; "because you don't know what a cursed pleasant feeling one has under an ash-box."

"And do you know that, then?" cried several voices, in tones of strong doubt.

"I know everything, as you rascals know right well, and have been through everything that can happen between the underside of the rails and the top of the smoke-stack."

"But you haven't been in the ash-box!" laughed the company, a little derisively.

"Not exactly," replied the old man, very gravely, "but under it, and partly, too, very near in it. But I tell you, I've been by when a splendid train of magnificent cars, full of people in high spirits, with one jolt—before you could lift your hand to your pipe or light a match—was nothing but a heap of kindling-wood and broken screws and pieces of axles and wheels, out of which came groans and cries for help, while despairing men stood round it wringing their hands; and locomotives, like kittens on a roof, leaped down the bank, and rolled once, twice, three times over and over, wheels up and smoke-stack underneath, and all was steam, fragments, fire, hissing, and shrieks; but never in five-and-thirty years' railroading has my heart stood so still as it did under the ash-box."

"Tell us about it, Uncle Zim, tell us!" cried voices one could see were used to making themselves heard above the clatter, rattle, and clank of the locomotive.

"Well well! I'll do it," he replied, as he slowly undid his tobacco pouch and began to fill his short pipe, "though I don't like to go over the story. To this day there's always something turns over under the third rib here when I think of it.

"You see, boys, the hands that worked this punch in those days came near being the hands of a widow then, and my [illegible] and Julia weren't born yet, though [illegible] might even then have called me [illegible]."

"But what's that to do with it, uncle?" asked the circle.

"Well, then, in the d——'s name, light up your plagued elegant cigars again. They suit you dolls in glass cases, as the short pipe suits us stout fellows under the free heavens. Pass the glasses this way, and then hold your jaw till I get through.

"It was upon New Year's eve, in the year 1845, thirty years ago, and a devil of a storm, driving snow and sleet mixed together. I was a young fellow; I'd been married about a year. You know the station is a horrible place for service. Let a storm come which way it will, it always sweeps clean across the square that's open and level as the top of this table. In toward the town there is a little cut with two tracks, one or the other of which always chokes up in the first hour of a drifting snow. Just as you get through the cut, in the third house in Garden street, behind the oil-mills that we often cursed for a nuisance, because we always had to shut off steam going by for fear of the sparks from the chimney catching in the shingle roof, I lived with my Louise and Franz, just born, who is superintendent now over at Rudrich's.

"So, on Sylvester-eve, 1845, I came into the station with a heavy freight train from Griesthal, after standing for fourteen hours on the engine in a storm at six below. I was frozen stiff as an icicle, and glad enough, you bet, to get hold of the Sylvester punch. It was getting dusk already as I came in, and through the whirl of glistening flakes, saw the station with its hundreds on hundreds of lights, like a huge Christmas-box. A poor Christmas-box for me! There were collected through the holidays a regular town of cars, something like 500 of them, and they'd got to be all made up so that everything could be off directly after New Year's. Hardly had I got off my engine in the engine-house when up comes the station-master, and says to me:

"'Hauser is taken sick, and you will have to take No. 3 in his place.'

"'Ten thousand thunders!' said I; 'but I hope it won't last till midnight, Mr. Station-master, for then I must be at home, or there's ill luck for the new year.'

"'Fiddlesticks!' said he; 'only you be sure you're on hand,' and away he was gone in the driving snow.

"I thought I'd taken the matter more to heart than it was worth, and laid the cold shiver that crept over my skin to the uncanny blast that came snorting at me as I came out with the engine. The whole air was full of white snow, and as the wreaths of it drove like white ghosts across the engine, I could hardly see the smoke-stack.

"Of the light-signals one caught only now and then a glimpse, red, white, or green; of the horn and pipe signals, what with the howling of the wind about the cars and car-wheels, and its singing in the telegraph wires, and the whistling of the engines, one heard only enough to be sure one had not understood them. Of the shouts of the men one could make just nothing but that they shouted.

"Then there were a couple of hundred cars being shunted about, in all directions at the same time; on all sides they came looming like great shadows out of the darkness and thick snow, and straight vanished in it again. The poor switch-tenders, wet to the skin, up to their knees in snow, sprang this way and that between the rolling cars. You know how a distributing station looks of a winter night. God only knows how 'tis we're not all made mince-meat of in the course of it; and I've all my life long been surprised when next morning I haven't heard that this one or that was killed on the spot. And if anything does happen, the strict gentlemen at the green table in their warm office up there out with the rules out of their pockets. To be sure, it is the only way. But if they would only just for once in their lives take the trouble to look on themselves outside!

"That night, then, it was right bad, and the Sylvester-punch, too, may have touched the men's heads a little beforehand, for the ringing went at a rate as if Satan himself was giving the orders. The cars flew so this way and that, and the lights went by like flashes, and everywhere one heard the groaning and clinking of the buffers crashing together, and the men crept about under and between the cars as if the wheels were gingerbread and the buffers downy pillows. But before all there was a wretched little assistant station-master—I could not bear the man, because he once came very much in my way in a certain matter—but I could not help looking in amazement as I saw his signal lantern everywhere, swinging in an inch, swinging horizontally, swinging crosswise, up, down, behind, before, and heard his shrill voice through all the storm. And see, I'd just called to the man as I saw him slip through between two buffers, that he ought not to be so devilish reckless, in a storm where one could neither see nor hear a thing, and might slip down into the bargain. But he had laughed at me, and called out: 'You attend to your own work, Zimmermann, and never mind me; we must be through before midnight—forward, forward!' and away he was gone. I had called after him with a good will: 'To the devil with you, then!' and that I shall not forget my life long, but shall think of it with sorrow on my death-bed." Here the old engineer made a pause, wiped his forehead, took a draught from his glass of punch, and went on:

"I heard him still giving the order 'Forward!' yonder among my comrades, and heard the car-chains clink, and then a sound—what like was it? have you ever heard a butcher hack through a thick bone with his ax?—and then a dull cry, and then again, only the cling and clang of the buffers clashing together. A cold shudder ran over me; then I got the signal to go ahead—there was no stopping. 'Forward, forward!' In a moment I was far away in the other end of the yard, where no one could know what had happened.

"But I did my duty still, only as if I was dreaming, and when, a half hour later, we had got through and I entered the engine-house again, the boss said to me, 'Have you heard, Zimmermann, Asistant Stationmaster Porges has been killed on the spot, crushed to death between the buffers?'

"I didn't ask many questions; my very heart shuddered, and I don't know how I took care of my engine and got the way home. As I passed [illegible] stairs, I saw a group with lanterns standing there, and something [illegible] with a cloak lying on the snow. [illegible] stop; I shivered all over; and I can tell you, boys, I'd have given heaven knows what if I hadn't wished him to the devil half an hour before. I tried hard to get that out of my head. I meant nothing particular by it; 'twas a way of talking common with us. Among you young chaps it's worse yet, and it would cure you if you once felt the crawling inside of you that I have. Well, at last I made out to get thinking of the warm room at home there with the felt slippers all ready, and Louise and the youngster, and the flask of arrack and the sugar and the lemons on the table, and the cat and the tea-kettle singing, and by degrees I began to feel a little lighter.

"Now, with all this, and of this and that, you'll readily believe I hadn't too much heed to wind and weather, road or pathway; and all I knew was, it was whirling and howling yet in the air as I entered the cut by the oil-mill, through which I might have seen the windows of my house, if one could have seen anything at all ten paces off. I went ahead on the right-hand track of the two in the cut because that was freer from snow, and from that side I could see my house sooner.

"And, in truth, I went along quite carelessly, for I was going from the yard, and that was the in-track, so no train could come on me from behind, and at that hour none was to be expected in front. Besides, I must have heard it coming.

"Just as I was in the middle of the cut, which lies, you know, in the curve, and where that night one could not see a car-length off, I heard a whistle behind me, and right after it the clip and clap of the approaching train. I noticed, too, that the engine was pushing the train before it, because the stroke of the engine was much farther behind than the rolling of the wheels. I thought, 'Ah! that is the reserve train of some twenty pair of wheels that stood yonder ahead on the track, and that they are shunting over to the freight-house.' But all this passed only vaguely through my mind, as one always thinks mechanically of his work even when his head and heart are full of other things. I say vaguely; in reality I didn't feel the slightest interest in it, for the train must directly pass me on the other track. But when the ping and pang of the wheels on the hard-frozen track had got quite close up, and I already heard the coupling-chain on the foremost car clinking back and forth, and saw the light of its signal-lantern begin to glide by me on the snow, I partly turned my head to call out a 'Happy New-Year!' to the fellows upon the train.

"But there was no train on the track; and at the same instant, I got a violent blow in the back. The sparks danced before my eyes—slap!—I lay flat on my face on the track, and, pang! pang! the cars began to pass over me."

Here the old engineer made another pause. It was still as death in the room, and faces breathless and riveted leaned forward and round the table. He filled the glasses again, pressed down the tobacco in his pipe, and went on:

"You see, boys, when we sit here this way round the table, or stand on the engine, or even, like poor Hornig here to-night, have to go through a squeeze by the examiners, our ideas come along one after the other, slowly and in some sort of order, so that one can take a good look at 'em. They even say we engineers are slower than other men, because all the quickness is gone out of us into our engines. But, boys, in the second or so between the blow and my lying flat on the ground, I did more thinking than ever I did before or since from Easter to Whitsuntide.

"First about home, the warm room and everything in it, and the New Year's chimes, and the going to church in the morning; then the assistant station-master as he lay there under the cloak on the snow; and then I began reckoning as distinctly as if I was giving the orders for making up all the trains, about the train that was passing over me. How was it it was on the wrong track, the one I'd been on, coming out on the in-track? And then all at once I thought, what before in the midst of my cogitating I had forgotten—the out-ward track I had seen as early as noon already deep buried in snow, and that was why they were coming out on the in-track. Then I saw plain enough the train just as it stood; there couldn't be more than ten or eleven freight-cars, all our own cars, they all went high above the rails—they would do me no harm. I lay flat enough between the rails. But the engines—the ash-boxes of the engines! I knew all three engines that still stood fired up at the station as well as my tobacco-pouch. The 'Wittekind' would go harmless enough over me, even though I had been stouter than I was; the 'Hermann,' too, might be merciful to me, at any rate if it was carrying little water and fire, and the sleepers under me didn't stand up too much; but under the 'Sirius,' one of the new, low-built elephants, I was a dead man. Ay! dead? That wouldn't be the worst. I should be slowly crushed and torn into shreds. Which engine was it, then, coming there?

"All this, you see, boys, I had thought between the blow and the lying flat; but when I was once down, all calculation ceased, and it was just by instinct I stretched myself out and held my breath and made myself thin as an otter that's trying to get out from a trap, and counted the axles that passed on over me. Every ping and pang spoke distinctly out in syllables, 'A wretch-ed death; a wretch-ed death!' And now something heavy catches hold of me! No, it is nothing yet—it only grazes me, and glides clinking its length along over me and off, striking a chill to my marrow—it is a chain hanging down. But now it comes! the ground begins, at first gently, then stronger and stronger, to tremble under me; it comes very slowly. Then I saw at the side that the rails and the snow and the rolling wheel-shadows over me grew ever redder, redder. It was the engine fire shining from the ash-box. Now I felt it grow hot on my bare head and neck. The sleepers yielded under me; the rails groaned and bent; the ground shook violently; it is on me. It strikes me violently in the back, presses forward—God have mercy on me! Then rip, crack! something on me gave way. Pang! pang! rolling! thundering! stamping!—the engine had passed over me and off. From the free heaven once more the snow cloud plunged down upon me.

"How I got on my legs I don't know. I stood there, I shook myself, and saw the red lights of the engine disappear round the curve. They looked to me like the eyes of a veritable bodily death. Then I felt myself to see what the engine had turned loose; and, behold! the regulation buttons were gone from my coat behind.

"I went to the nearest switch-tender and got a lantern and looked for the buttons in the snow; but when we were sitting round the bowl at home, and I was putting in first too much rum and then too much sugar, Louise, wondering, asked:

"'Husband, what's the matter with you? You tremble so and don't speak a word.'

"Then my sense and speech came to me again, and I showed Louise the buttons, and told her the story, and, holding up a button 'twixt finger and thumb, said:

"'See, within so much of a horrible death has your husband been to-night!'

"Look! I have the buttons yet, and mean to carry them till death comes in reality."

The old man opened his coat and drew out two buttons, stamped with the King's arms, which he wore secured by a string about his neck.

"And now you know why I pitied the poor creature in the ash-box. I have told you the story because it came up in the talk, but I don't like to speak of it, because the agony of death was it, and that's something no man calls to mind willingly. But hark! 12 o'clock! Good luck to us all for the New Year; and any number of hundred thousand locomotive miles!"—Appleton's Journal.

A Case of Conspiracy.

A correspondent of the Baltimore Gazette, writing from Lancaster, Pa., relates the following anecdote of Thaddeus Stevens: "Many years ago, when Thaddeus Stevens was practicing law in Lancaster, he was employed to defend two bank officers who had been indicted for conspiracy, they having used the funds of the bank in speculation. All the legal talent of Philadelphia and surrounding counties had been engaged to assist in the prosecution. When the trial was opened Mr. Stevens rose, and, addressing the court, said: 'If it please Your Honors, presuming there are different degrees of guilt attached to the prisoners, my clients, I move they be tried separately.' The Judge consulted for a few moments with his associates, who consenting, the motion was granted and so recorded. Waiting some time for Mr. Stevens to go on, the Judge at last, becoming impatient, said impetuously: 'Proceed, Mr. Stevens, proceed. We are waiting for you, sir.' Mr. Stevens rose deliberately, and looking around the court-room for a moment said: 'Did Your Honors ever hear of one man being tried for conspiracy?' Then, waving his hand to his clients, he said: 'You can go home; you can go home.' And they did go home. The jury were discharged and the court adjourned. And for this piece of legal strategy Thad Stevens received $5,000."

A CURIOUS INTIMACY.

A Man who Sleeps in his Stable and Claims to Understand Horse Talk.

There is a retired trainer, named Long, residing on a small farm in Alameda county, who lives for nothing else but the pleasure of being near horses. He eats his meals in the stable, oftentimes passes the night in the same stall with a favorite pony, and among his equine pets is a mare who whinnies in answer every time he speaks to her. Our informant relates that the most perfect understanding evidently exists between Mr. Long and at least three out of the five horses in his stable. Two are recent additions, but even in their case the same affinity is seen in a lesser degree.

The training of horses, their obedience, docility, and tricks in a circus are no novelty; all of us have seen a horse fire a pistol, stand on two legs, waltz, lie down with its trainer, and perform a hundred acts of sagacity, but these are simply the result of patient training and systematic correction. What Mr. Long claims is far more astounding. He asserts that, from a life-long intimacy with horses, he understands their speech; he goes further, and declares that their nasal, guttural, explodent, and unobstructed sounds have a different meaning, are used by the coalition of the brain and vocal organs, and that not only do his favorite horses understand him, but that every sound which they utter is perfectly plain to him. When arguing with him that, though he might comprehend the meaning of the sounds emanating from the vocal chords of a horse, yet it was a patent impossibility for a horse to understand the English language, he replied: "Living, eating and sleeping with my horses has given me the knowledge I possess, and the same intimacy has acquired for my horses the powers I claim for them." Here, turning to a slender, light-built gray pony, he said, "Billy, we are talking of you; if you understand what I am saying, turn your head round on the off side." The pony did so, and then resumed its feed. "Billy," he continued, "tell me your age, how long have you lived here, and on which side of you is your friend Vesta?" The pony whinnied for about two minutes consecutively, and then, being loose in its stall, walked into the adjoining one occupied by the mare Vesta. "Now," he continued, "do you and Billy walk down together to the trough and drink while I make up your beds." Vesta and Billy walked quietly out and proceeded straight to the trough.

While they were out, Mr. Long turned over the straw carefully with a fork, and carried on an animated conversation with a roan gelding about fifteen hands high, Vesta's neighbor on the other side. The name of this horse was Poley, and, after talking angrily to him for some minutes about some fault he had committed the day before, he ordered Mr. Poley to lie down and not to get up until after Vesta and Billy had returned. Our informant saw but little in this to prove Mr. Long's claims, as many a horse will lie down at the word of command; but when, without a further word, Poley arose and walked out to the water trough after the return of the other two horses, the subject became as difficult of solution as before.—San Francisco News Letter.

Diphtheria and Its Cure.

A small quantity of either sulphate of iron, tannin, or chlorate of potash, put dry upon the tongue, and allowed to dissolve there, once in every hour, have all been found to be most efficient remedies in the early stages of diphtheria. This terrible disease appears under three varieties of forms: 1st. There is a fever, severe pains in the back, bones and limbs, and very great prostration. There may be no soreness of the throat, but, on examining it, small white specks will be noticed on the tonsils, but few or none on the rest of the throat. These cases will recover under any and every variety of treatment in four to six days. The great, but false, reputation of many remedies and physicians is based upon the necessarily favorable results of these cases. 2d. Large patches of false membrane will be observed, both on the tonsils and back of the throat; but the glands of the neck do not become swollen. The majority of these cases will also recover under very simple treatment, unless the disease extends down to the wind-pipe, which it rarely does. 3d. True malignant diphtheria, with swelling of the glands of the neck and under the jaw; profuse and often offensive exudations in the mouth and throat; more or less discharge from the nostrils. Chlorate of potash is a disinfectant as well as a curative remedy, and, if given pure and dry upon the tongue, every hour, night and day, will rarely disappoint the practitioner. A small dose, every night, may act as a preventive remedy. Sometimes tannin may be given more readily than the chlorate of potash. The sulphate of iron is rather more irritant, and must be in smaller quantities. The main points in the use of the remedies are to give them dry upon the tongue, and frequently and regularly, both by night and day.

The Chinese Festival of Tagen.

The festival which the Chinese propose to celebrate next week is the autumnal festival of "Ta-Gen," in honor of the Chinese god Hong Wong. The writer, in conversation with a Chinaman who speaks the English language quite fluently, wished to ascertain who Hong Wong was. The reply was, "I no know him; him dead long time; may be one time he dam loafer, alla same hoodlum; now he heap big god." This festival, which occurs during the middle of the eighth month, Chinese year, lasts several days. During the festivities they worship the moon, which, according to a Chinese legend, is inhabited with most beautiful women, but what they do, or how they live, is something of which the legend gives no information. On that day offerings are made to the moon, and merchants send out their bills with the understanding that the debtor to whom the bill is presented must pay half on that day and the balance on the following new year. The man who does not pay half of his indebtedness on that day is refused credit thereafter.—San Francisco Call.

THE CHICAGO LEDGER is said to have spent [illegible] in advertising the past two years, and, by the looks of the newspapers throughout the United States, we should say it would take as much to go round this year. And to cap the climax the proprietors have announced their paper at $1.00 a year. How it is done is a mystery, unless they have more than "a barrel of money" to give away. We believe, however, it is the theory of the publishers that all they ask of the reader is to pay for the white paper and postage; for their labor, when the paper reaches 100,000 or more circulation, their advertising will pay the profit. While they are building up the paper they do not solicit advertising, and hence the readers get a great paper for $1.00 that is worth $3.00. As the publishers have the money, no doubt they will succeed. Address THE LEDGER, Chicago, Ill., inclosing $1.00 for subscription and 15 cents for postage.—Chicago Times.

National Life Insurance Co. of U. S. of A.

This Company is one of the strongest and most prosperous of our life institutions. It has the largest amount of assets and the largest amount of insurance of any company of its age; was organized in 1868 by practical insurance men, and its insurance business is now under the same management. It has a surplus of $1,219,952; ratio of assets to liabilities are 153 per cent. It has the largest capital of any company in the country. It has paid for losses, during the eight (8) years of its existence, $1,314,383.70. Its assets are strongly secured, largely by approved bonds and mortgages. Its premiums are remarkably low, and its policy contracts simple and definite. It is a strong stock company, and offers inducements superior to many companies, and equal to those of any. PIMPLES on the face, rough skin, chapped hands, saltrheum and all cutaneous affections cured, the skin made soft and smooth, by the use of Juniper Tar Soap. That made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, is the only kind that can be relied on, as there are many imitations, made from common tar, which are worthless.

MANY valuable horses die from the effects of colic. The best thing to do in a case of this kind is to pour a bottle of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment into a long-necked junk bottle, add half-pint of molasses and water, then pour the whole down the horse's throat. In ten minutes the horse will begin to eat.

THE HARRISON TRAGEDY.

An Honored Name Disgraced—The Grandson of a President Stabs the Woman He Loves.

The people of Boone county, Ky., who live along the river nearly opposite North Bend, and in sight of the tomb of Harrison, and only about fifteen miles from Cincinnati, were shocked a few days ago at the intelligence that Wm. Henry Harrison, a son of the late Symmes Harrison, and a grandson of a President of the United States, had entered the residence of Maj. John H. More and stabbed nearly to the death Miss Mary More, an estimable lady of 35 years, who had rejected many offers of marriage that she might remain with her father, who is now four-score years, and whose wife has long been dead.

The circumstances of the tragedy are about as follows: Something over a year ago the wife of Harrison, who is now about 40 years of age, died, leaving to his care three sons and one daughter, the daughter being only about 10 years of age. The loss of his wife weighed very heavily upon him, and the responsibility of rearing his only daughter seemed greater than he dared to assume; at least so he had given his friends reason to infer. Added to this a heavy mortgage on his farm, which, by the way, joins Maj. More's, had troubled him a good deal, he had taken to applying himself to liquor, and, in short, he had allowed his place to run down, had traveled about considerably, and recently had taken to drinking rum very freely.

In the early part of the summer Harrison began paying studious attention to Miss More, but received no encouragement whatever, and, in fact, was given to understand that his visits were disagreeable. He then conceived the idea that Miss More's father was his bitter enemy, and rarely came to the Major's house when that gentleman was at home. It should here be noted that the Major has a crippled son named William, somewhat older than the sister, Mary. By an accident when a mere boy, he was made utterly helpless, so far as the use of his legs is concerned. He is an intelligent man, and though unable, however, to move around, does a great deal of the head-work about his father's very large farm. His room is located in the rear part of the house, and there he spends the greater portion of his time.

On the day of the tragedy the Major had gone to Cincinnati and Covington, where he stopped with a son-in-law, and Harrison returned from Fort Wayne, Ind., whither he had been to secure a home for his daughter. He had failed in his mission, and consequently was under the weather and the influence of drink. At the time the train from Cincinnati was due, he was seen to be armed and lurking near a haystack which stands hard by the Major's house. He inquired of a colored boy if Maj. More had returned, and, on receiving a negative reply, approached the house, carefully avoiding William's room. He slipped into the sitting-room unannounced, found Mary there, and, it is supposed, made some proposition of marriage to her, which she rejected. He had been in there but a moment, however, when he began yelling, "I'm crazy! I'm crazy!" whisked out a formidable jack-knife, with a blade as thick as a razor, and dashed at his victim. A man of but ordinary physical strength, he would have soon completely overpowered the inoffending object of his rage had Miss More not been a very vigorous woman, and capable of fighting him off like a tigress at bay. But there were tremendous odds against her, and she screamed for help. Harrison's first lunge resulted in a ghastly wound in the breast, just to the left of the breast-bone. He struck again for the heart, and another wound was made in the left breast, and still again a third wound spurted blood from just over the heart. Then he lunged again, this time for his victim's throat, and a bloody slit down the left temple was all he accomplished; then again, and a wound in the left cheek was made. By this time Mary caught the knife-blade in her hand, but her assassin drew it through, and the hand, with every finger wounded, was helpless. Again, with uplifted blade, he sprang for her throat, only to plunge his ugly weapon into her left arm, which she raised for defense, and still again and again, until five gaping wounds were bleeding in her arm, and still the demon followed. But by this time, with a desperate effort, the struggling woman had reached a door leading into the kitchen and from there to William's room. Through this door she reeled, and to her brother's room, closely followed by Harrison. Her screams had startled her crippled brother, but in an anguish of alarm he was compelled to wait. He had sent a small colored boy who attends him to ascertain the cause of his sister's cries, and the boy had just reported. The time between the report and his sister's reeling through the door into his room was but a moment. It seemed an eternity. As Mary entered William's room she slammed the door, and while Harrison halted a moment before it—through his fear of William—she had locked it. Meantime William had reached for his revolver, which he has always kept within a convenient distance of his bed, and made it ready for Harrison's entrance.

The latter, however, did not enter. Believing that he had killed Miss More, he started toward his home. Arriving there he told his boys that Miss Mary wouldn't marry him, and that he had killed her, and that he was now going to kill himself. He then took his own rifle in his hands as if to shoot himself, when his son Pike seized it. A struggle ensued, but Pike, discovering that this rifle had no cap, ceased struggling. Harrison made the discovery, or pretended to, about the same time, dropped the rifle, and with the same yell, "I'm crazy! I'm crazy!" ran to the cistern and jumped in. The cistern contained only about four feet of water, and the supposition is that Harrison knew it, for had he been bent on suicide the Ohio river would have answered every purpose, and that was only a few rods away. He floundered around in the cistern a few minutes, keeping up his cry of "I'm crazy," until his sons fished him out; then he made a dive for a small medicine-chest in the house, saying he was going to poison himself. He was finally lodged in a prison cell. Miss More's wounds were dressed, but the surgeons pronounced her condition very critical. One of her wounds in the breast they had probed to a depth of three inches, and one they did not probe at all. Her loss of blood had been terrible, enough to kill a person of ordinary strength, and her suffering at times was almost unbearable. It will be by the smallest chance in the world that she recovers.

Harrison evinces no concern whatever over the occurrence. It is generally believed that he has rather overdone the matter in attempting to exhibit symptoms of insanity since the affray. His attempts at suicide all had an air of sham about them, which perhaps a few months in jail and a careful trial before an honest Judge will ventilate.

Fashion Notes.

Felt has had its day for hats.

Skirts are to be very slightly trimmed.

Velvet will be the fashionable material for dress bonnets.

The most fashionable ear-rings are arrows of small diamonds.

Link buttons are again fashionable, in place of sleeve-studs.

There are bright silk pockets introduced to wear with any toilet.

Train skirts continue in use for indoor wear and short skirts for street wear.

After foliage and flowers, fancy feathers will be the favorite trimmings on winter bonnets.

Bright shades of cardinal red are appearing in Paris for under-skirts, and for trimming polonaises of delicate colors.

In artificial trimmings, foliage is preferred to flowers, especially dark, quaint autumn leaves, spotted as if by decay.

The new navy blue is almost black, it is so dark in shade, and is most stylish when in combination with cardinal red.

The crowns of some of the new capotes are made entirely of feathers, and the brim is bordered with a band to correspond.

Many of the chemisettes and ruffs made of net, lace, and ribbons are on the bib principle, buttoning at the nape of the neck.

There is nothing finer in fabric than the combination of silk and velvet, and the most elegant suits of these materials are to be worn.

Long and ample strings tied under the chin, are likely to be worn on bonnets. They are gros-grain on one side, and satin on the other.

The necks of dresses are cut as high as it is possible to wear them. In many cases there are two collars, one of which stands and the other turns down.

Day colors are the darkest shades of seal brown, claret, indigo blue, and black. The introduction of high colors in the way of ornaments will be sparingly used.

Ostrich plumes, so long in vogue, will give way for a time to blue-green lophophore feathers, the plumage of blackbirds, guinea-hens, peacocks, ducks, gulls, and Russian green-cocks.

Gold seems to have disappeared, and silver has taken its place as an ornamentation on all fashionable toilets. Even carriage mantles are now trimmed with silver passamentarie.

Stockings this season are to match the dress exactly, and should be selected to be worn with special costumes. They are generally in solid color, rather than stripes or figures.

Skirts are no longer looped up, and all bunching of drapery is out of style. The fall fashions do away with bouffant effects, and only slight draperies are permitted, and these low down on the skirt.

New bonnets have high, pointed crowns and close-fitting capote fronts; in fact, the brim, or front, is so near the head that there remains only space for a slight platting of lace or silk, or a small twist.

Linen collars and cuffs will be greatly worn this season, the former with small square corners, turned over, but not laid flat, and the latter round and small. The long reign of ruffles seems partially over, at least for street and house wear. Only on dresses of silk will lace and the finer qualities of ruffling appear.

The long cloaks that will be worn do away happily with the extravagantly large bustles worn at present. The long, slender bustle that holds the lower part of the skirt away from the feet will be retained, though even for this purpose the pleating of crinoline on the underskirts is preferred. The slope from the waist must be natural looking, otherwise the effect of the new dresses and cloaks is lost.

The Indian Question.

The Indians remaining on the reservations in the Black Hills country, the several branches of the Sioux, the Arapahoes and the Cheyennes, have all at last been persuaded to agree to the new arrangement, giving up all their territorial claims in that quarter, and removing to the Indian territory, back of Arkansas, and settling down as individual farmers rather than continuing as roaming tribes. The absence of the fighting bands, the taking away of arms and ammunition, the holding out of glittering promises, and probably the bribing of the contractors and whites living among the Indians, who have gained their confidence and secured much influence over them, have doubtless all contributed to this important and revolutionary result. Some of the leading chiefs objected strongly to the agreement, and made eloquent speeches in protest and in sharp criticism of the manner in which they had heretofore been treated by the Government. But their natural jealousies and ambitions, their fears and hopes, were played upon adroitly, and all, one after another, came into the arrangement. Most likely there will be more difficulty in removing them to the new country than there has been in getting them to agree to go. But as a part of the means to the end, Gen. Crook is refitting his forces for a winter campaign against the fleeing and murdering fighters, and it, indeed, looks now as if a very great step had been achieved in the history of the Indian question.

Andre's Captors Monumented.

The three captors of Major Andre have all now been honored with monuments. A marble cenotaph covers John Paulding's grave in a churchyard at Peekskill, N. Y., a plain monument of marble Isaac Van Wert's grave at Greenburgh, N. Y., and a costly monument above the grave of David Williams, at Schoharie, N. Y., was unveiled at that place on Saturday last. Near the grave of Williams is the old fort, still perfect, constructed in 1762, and taken by the Indians during the Revolution.

DWARFS.

A Noble Little Couple.

[From the Philadelphia Times.]

Two of the smallest children in the world for their ages, which are 18 years and 12 years and 2 months, respectively, were introduced to the faculty and students of the Jefferson Medical College recently. Senorita Lucia Zarata, a sprightly brunette, is a fraction under twenty inches high and weighs five pounds in her elegant street costume, which includes complete female garb, from a bonnet down to the modern gaiter, the latter being less than three inches long. It was explained that she was born at San Carlos, near the City of Vera Cruz, Mexico, and that her parents were both large and healthy persons. She speaks Spanish fluently, and understands a smattering of the English tongue. Gen. Mite will be 12 years old on the 6th of October. He was born at Green, Chenango county, N. Y., his parents bearing the name of Flinn, the father, who accompanies the diminutive, weighing 171 pounds, and the mother 135 pounds. At his birth the General weighed two and one-half pounds. His avoirdupois now is nine pounds; height, twenty-two inches. He is a blonde. The General wore a full ball-room costume, consisting of black coat and pantaloons, white vest and white necktie. During his visit to the college the little fellow talked fluently and was quite active, and, when not treading on the trail of Her Ladyship's dress, was busily engaged in casting affectionate glances at her. In presenting the Liliputians to the admiring assemblage Prof. Getchell said he had brought the couple there to introduce them from the Philadelphia Museum, at Ninth and Arch, as something wonderful even in this wonderful age. He explained that he had made a careful examination of the subjects, and found them healthy, intelligent and perfectly formed. The heart of either, said he, is not larger than an ordinary size hickory nut, and the liver in equal proportion, and yet they perform the functions as regularly and perfectly as those of fully-developed men and women. Their brains, he added, correspond well with the size of their bodies, and their intelligence surpasses their size. At the conclusion of the Professor's remarks the General shook hands all round, and the pert Miss bowed and threw kisses at the gallants with whom she had been coquetting.

A Spider's Terrible Bite.

H. E. Jewell, son of the late John Jewell, of Kiskatom, who was killed while bravely fighting in Virginia during the war, and whose mother and sister live in Catskill, was recently bitten by a tarantula, or poison spider, in Arizona, where his home now is. These animals vary in size from a dollar to that of the palm of the hand, and the poison of their bite is more fearful and deadly than that of the rattlesnake, so that few recover from it. Prussic acid and ammonia were injected into his system through the wound; he was filled with a mixture of lard oil and brandy, so that he was unconscious more that forty hours, and was kept drunk six days to counteract, by alcohol, the poison in time, blisters from it having come out on his body. He writes that he is now apparently free from the poison, but is nervous and weak, as he well may be, from the effects of the poison, or his forced debauch, or both. As Mr. Jewell is but 26 years old, and has a strong and vigorous constitution, it is hoped that he will soon be well.—Hudson (N. Y.) Republican.

The Retirement of National Bank Notes and Legal Tenders.

The amount of national bank circulation redeemed, retired, and surrendered by the United States treasury, from Jan. 14, 1875 to Oct. 1, 1876, is $46,489,471. Amount issued between the same dates, $16,881,575, showing a decrease of national bank circulation of $29,607,896, leaving the amount of national bank notes outstanding on Oct. 1 (not including the circulation of the national gold banks, $2,099,190) $322,253,554. The amount of greenbacks deposited from June 20, 1874, to Oct. 1, 1876 (including $3,813,675 previously deposited for the purpose of redeeming the notes of insolvent and liquidating banks, ($64,503,856. Amount of circulation redeemed by the Treasurer between the same dates, $42,462,912, leaving on deposit with the Treasurer on Oct. 1, 1876, $21,860,943, for the purpose of retiring the national bank notes outstanding. A Paris Street Car.

Judging from a cut in the Railway Gazette, Paris has beaten us in our own field in applying steam to street cars. The Paris idea is to house up the locomotive like a street car, with almost no smoke, and with none of the frightful properties which are so objectionable to horses. The locomotive looks like a car about twelve feet square, paneled and painted, and with an almost invisible smoke-stack. This apparatus draws a car with a capacity of forty persons about ten miles an hour; the train stops within five feet by the brake, turns a very sharp curvature, and can be run at a cost, for attendance and fuel, of about four dollars per day.

The man or woman who has not heard of Mexican Mustang Liniment is poorly posted indeed. There is no article ever manufactured for the cure of man and beast has done more good, or gained a wider celebrity than this. It is sold the world over, and wherever it is used there is but one opinion in regard to it, and that is the highest man can bestow. For diseases in cattle and horses it is invaluable. It is a liniment that does up its work speedily and effectually, and leaves limb and body sound and healthy. Whole columns might be written in its praise, without exhausting its merits. It is manufactured at Lockport, N. Y., and is sold by all druggists.—Poughkeepsie (N. Y.) Sunday Courier.

The intelligent compositor infests the office of the Montreal Gazette, as witness the following "correction:" "A small typographical error also occurred in the leading article on the case—'divided it into two lots' should have read 'divided it intolots.'"

BALDNESS.

CHICAGO, May 10, 1870.
Since the recent use of your "Cocoaine," my previously bald head has been covered by a luxuriant growth of hair. I had always esteemed your preparation as a dressing, knowing many persons who regarded it very highly as such, but never before knew how valuable it was as a restorative. J. G. LEWIS.

LOSS OF HAIR.

BANGOR, March 3, 1865.
Your "Cocoaine" is the only dressing for the hair used in my family for the last eight years. It not only stopped my wife's hair from coming out, but increased its growth. I am also under obligations to this same "Cocoaine" for saving my own hair, which was very fast coming out previous to using this valuable preparation. J. C. MITCHELL.

IRRITATION OF THE SCALP.

WATERVILLE, Me., Sept. 15.
I purchased a bottle only, for the purpose of a hair dressing; but, to my surprise, it has entirely removed the irritation of so long standing. I have recommended it to several of my friends, who were afflicted in the same way, and it has wholly irradicated the disease. JOSEPH HILL, Jr.

WOOD'S IMPROVED HAIR RESTORATIVE
What It Does!
It restores quickly, Grey Hair to its Glossy Natural color. It has the effect of Restoring the Hair to prematurely Bald Heads. It Removes Dandruff, Humors and all Eruptions from the Scalp. It prevents Irritation, Itching and Scaly [illegible]. It Restores faded, dry, harsh and falling Hair, and it is wonderful in restoring and giving vigor to the growth of the Hair. It accomplishes all these effects in a short time than [illegible] say, Restorative ever made, always leaving the hair soft, lively and [illegible], whether used as a Dressing upon the natural hair or upon the hair in an unhealthy condition; thus rendering it, for the Old and Young, an article of unequaled excellence. No preparation offered to the public produces such wonderful results. Try it! Try it!! Call for "Wood's Improved" as it contains no injurious qualities.

It was originally introduced 20 years ago by Prof. O. J. Wood, but the recent change of ingredients in this article is making a demand for it in all parts of the United States, Canadas and foreign countries.

ANNOUNCEMENT — TO — CONSUMERS!

The great radical improvement introduced in this article has induced us to take the agency and advertise its virtues to the world. Its effects as a Restorative are what has been long sought for, and wanted for many years, being more decided and satisfactory than has ever before been attained. No Druggist in the world knows its composition, and cannot make it; therefore when you call for it, "Wood's Improved," do not let any unprincipled dealer convince you that he has a Restorative or Renewer as good, or something similar, as there is none like it! Insist upon having "Wood's Improved," and take no other, for your money! It will not be long before all dealers everywhere will have it. If you should fail to find it, you can send $1.00 to us by mail for a bottle, or $5.00 for six bottles, and we will send it to you, prepaid, to any part of the States named.

Address C. A. COOK & CO., Chicago, the Sole Agents for the United States and Canadas, who will fill all orders and supply the Trade at Manufacturers' Prices.
J. B. KIMBALL, Proprietor.

☞ Sold in Chicago, Milwaukee, Detroit and St. Paul by all Wholesale Druggists, and by Retail Trade generally.

The Wilson Sewing Machine Company.

"A little further on, the attention of the public was attracted by a beautiful female figure, elegantly attired, like some Parisian Princess, and the visitor was astonished to discover that the exquisite garments were not painfully wrought by the hands of scores of French costumers, but that it was the counterfeit presentment of a Buckeye maiden clad in what might, under the circumstances, be justly called her homespun. It was all produced with perfect ease on one of the many WILSON MACHINES which surrounded it. This instrument does a great range of work, as is indicated by the samples shown. It runs with great precision, from the most delicate gauze to the heaviest leather. It has a new combination of crank and [illegible] has a transverse independent shuttle race, which insures an open, secure, lock-stitch, without undue friction on the thread. It also has the advantage of a long shuttle-driver or pitman—a good point, as it avoids sharp angles. It has a short, straight needle, and a [illegible] shuttle. The samples shown were splendid specimens of workmanship. Its great popularity fully attests the skill and energy of the man whose name it bears."

The choicest words in the English language were chosen by the JUDGES OF AWARDS as the most appropriate to express in the broadest terms, to the whole World, their High Opinion of the World-Renowned WILSON SHUTTLE SEWING MACHINE. Golden Words: "THE WILSON SHUTTLE SEWING MACHINE, 'An excellent family machine of superior construction, ADAPTED TO ALL KINDS OF WORK.'"

This is no Special Award. All American and Foreign-make Machines were in Competition.

West Virginia gives a Democratic majority. The Legislature is three-fourths Democratic and elects two United States Senators.

We carry Indiana by 5,700, a gain of 4,000 over 1872. Ohio, which should have gone 20,000 for Hayes, to be decisive, gives only about 6,000 majority, a good day's work for the Buckeye Democracy.

If Hayes should carry all of the States put down as doubtful he will still lack 20 votes of enough for election. Tilden can loose New Jersey and California and all of the doubtful votes and still be elected. The chances now are two to one in favor of Tilden and Hendricks.

Not Very Creditable.

R. B. Hayes was a member of the 39th and 40th Congress. During that time he distinguished himself only by his votes for subsidies and jobs. March 2, 1867, he voted for a bill making extra allowance to contractors for iron-clads, which the secretary of the Navy testified was backed by one of the strongest lobbies he had ever seen. The allowances were in condition to others already made by a Government Board. Mr. Hayes voted against the motion to postpone the consideration of the bill; against the motion to lay on the table; and in favor of the bill. An allowance was made under this bill amounting to $250,000, half of which went to Roberson's friend, Secor. Logan and Schenck put through the House r bill restoring the iron-clad "Comanche" to its builders, by which $179,000 was taken from the Treasury. The bill was denounced on the floor by Mr. Spalding, but Mr. Hayes voted for it. Seventeen Acts, making grants of public lands to corporations passed by the House during Hayes' membership, but on only seven were the Democratic minority able to force a yea and nay vote. On all seven Mr. Hayes is recorded in favor of these bills, and never by speech against them The amount of land accuring to the Central Union, and Kansas Pacific Road under these grants was 36,000,000 acres, a area almost equal to the whole of New England, and the amount of Government bonds, issued to them was $64,000,000. All of these bills were opposed, and most of them openly denounced, without effect on Mr. Hayes. Mr. Hayes' only speech was made in explanation of his favorable action on the Bouligny claim which had been adjuded null and void by the United States Supreme Court, twenty-four years before. Mr. Washburn, (Rep.) of Wisconsin, offered a bill directing the suspension of the law, and said that a more fraudulent claim was never presented to Congress.

It May Save Your Life.

There is no person living but what suffers more or less with Lung Disease, Coughs, Colds or Consumption, yet some would die rather than to pay 75 cents for a bottle of medicine that would cure them. Dr. A. Boschee's German Syrup has lately been introduced in this country from Germany, and its wonderous cures astonishes every one that try it. If you doubt what we say in print, cut this out and take it to your Druggist, F. E. Davenport, and get a sample bottle for 10 cents and try it, or a regular size for 75 cents.

ZEIGLER—SMITH—At the residence of the bride's father, near Newville, on Sabbath, Oct. 15th., by the Rev. J. N. Morris. Benjamin W. Zeigler to Miss Katie Smith.

May their pathway through life be strewn with flowers.

COMSUMPTION CURED.

AN old physician, retired from active practice having had placed in his hands by and East India Missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy, for the speedy and permanent cure of consumption, bronchitis, catarah, asthma, and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for nervous debility and all nervous complaints, after having thoroughly tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases feels it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a conscientious desire to relieve human suffering he will send free of charge to all who desire it this receipt with full directions for preparing and successfully using. Sent by return mail by addressing with stamp naming this paper.

Go to the dance next Thursday.

Plenty of corn and potatoes coming to market.

We publish elsewhere the official vote of the county.

People are busy now putting away winter apples.

The sturdy yeomen are busy gathering the golden ears.

Some "lantern-jawed" poisoned Baldock's cat and dog.

Now let the delinquents "whack up" before next Saturday.

The frosts have put an effectual check to the growth of tender vegetation.

Ed. Orr and wife, of Corunna, started last Monday for Philadelphia.

The new candidates met together last Monday and arranged important business.

Last Tuesday was a lovely day. The store boxes were filled from mourn 'till night.

The potato bug has departed us; rest assured that he'll return early in the spring.

Root & Company have appeared in a new advertisement this week. See elsewhere.

Our merchants are paying higher prices for produce than any town in the county.

Rickel & Co. have a new kind of soda for winter use expressly. Get a glass and try it.

Mr. Martin has laid a brick sidewalk in front of his business house. Others should follow.

Barbers are charging fifteen cents for shaving Republicans. Long faces, you know.

George Patterson has sold his property. Geo. must have made up his mind for country life.

There will be a dance at Ensley's hall next Thursday evening. An invitation is extend to all.

Ben Williams is running a steam wood sawing machine That is death on the corporation fiddlers.

The sportive house-fly meandereth to its southern home. And now the wife is ready for house-cleaning.

The stars and stripes that wave upon the hickory poles can feel proud. The victory is yours.

J. M. Urie, Esq., has removed from Sedan to Waterloo, where he will act as agent for the Air Line Road.

Our job departments has been brim full for several weeks. We now have time to supply more orders.

The Commissioners met in special session last Monday and made a settlement with township trustees.

The M. E. Social will be entertained by Mrs. Dr. Casebeer on next Wednesday afternoon and evening. A cordial invitation to all.

The DeKalb County Teachers' Institute will meet at Auburn, Nov 6. We hope to have the usual full attendance.
J. A. BARNS, Co. Supt.

Messrs. G. C. Ralston, D. D. Snyder, H. C. Purple, Jas. V. Hazzard and T. J. Cuppy, started for the Centennial last Saturday.

Corunna ought to feel pround over her political influence. That lively little village has sent from its midst a Senator and Recorder.

The People's ticket in Whitley county has gone where the woodbine twineth. The Democracy won the day by handsome majorities.

Mr. Charles Klotz appears this week in a new advertisement, to be found in another column. Don't fail to give him a call before purchasing.

Weamer has an agent out soliciting. The Sheriff sales will not burn his fingers for awhile and he thinks something "should be done."

While we are discovering the other mysteries of the world, let some one tell whether the back pocket in a man's coat tail was first made for beauty or use.

Fishing seems to be the popular amusement among them fellers who enjoy a "set down" on the banks of the running brook. We'd rather buy of Sam Weaver anytime.

Capt. White, the enterprising manager of the Fruit House, at Fort Wayne, is ready with his Holiday prices, and offers great inducements in his line of trade. Look out for the new price list.

Tax-payers should remember that the time for paying the second installment of 1875 taxes, expires this month, and does not include any part of next month.

C. P. Houser has changed his location to the old Boot and Shoe rooms lately occupied by Mr. Ryan, where he intends opening out a fine stock of goods, kept in his line.

The aim of publishers usually is to run their newspaper on the funds received from subscription. We mention this fact because we fear that some of our subscribers have lost sight of it.

Circuit Court adjourned last Saturday, after a full term of three weeks.—Though Judge Woodhull pressed the business forward with all dispatch, still some two hundred cases are left on the docket.

Special inducements to anyone wanting to engage in a profitable business.—One that has and is paying good dividends. Correspondents solocited. Enquire of Thos. H. Sprott, Lock Box 7 Auburn, Ind.

Remember the fine new stock of Boots and Shoes just received at Ryan's A new line of winter Boots at panic prices. The ladies will be sure to see styles that cannot help to please them. Everybody call and examine the fine stock.

Johnny Knoder has purchased the Blacksmithing shop formerly presided over by J. W. Shaffer. Johnny is a good workman and has prices down to suit everyone. Three dollars a span for shoeing, putting on steel corks.

Weamer says Moody was the worst beat man on the Democratic ticket.—Read over the result in another column and see whether Weamer is entirely correct. The facts will not bear out such assertion.

Weamer feels bad because Moody accompanies him in his journey up "Salt River." We fear this is caused by the excellent "staying" qualities of Moody Never mind, Weamer, the colt goes with you, and you can take turns at riding.

According to some Radical papers, the rebel claims now presented amount to 176,882'495,128,648,972,210,759,628,000 000,000,000,000, and still are growing. This will be about as useful in the campaign, as the bloody shirt was in Indiana.

Indiana, it was admitted before the election, was the battle ground, which was to decide the Presidential contest. The verdict of the people has been recorded in favor of Tilden, Hendricks and Reform

The election is now over and business is the watchword of every man. The fall trade is opening up largely over last year, and everybody seems in the best of spirits. Our merchants should advertise extensively and bring all the trade they possibly can to Auburn.

The entire colored vote of Butler was cast for Blue Jeans. They marched in solid phalanx to the polls and stood by the Democracy. A friend at our elbow says there was only one, but we are not to be dissuaded from our purpose. 'The colored troupes fought nobly.'

One of the very best little addresses we listened to this year was made by Judge Osborn of Goshen. He had but a short time before the train, yet he made every word count and had the ear of all present. Such speeches never fail to produce a good object.

Mr. D. Bender will sell at public auction next Saturday, barrels, cistern-tubs household furniture, etc. The terms will be, sums of $5 and under cash, and over three dollars a credit of 9 months, with interest, approved security waiving valuation and appraisement laws.

There is a little malice in Weamer yet. We thought after the election all this personal abuse would stop, and things would go on as severely as before. We had no hard words for any of the defeated candidates, because we are not actuated by malice in all we said against them. We can be magnanimous to a defeated foe.

IMPORTANT.

We respectfully ask our subscribers to read this item. There are a number who owe us on subscription. We must have some money. We cannot furnish you with a paper every week without money, and we hope all will come forward and pay up.

Mr. Potter, our enterprising shoemaker, has put in a cosy shop alongside of his residence, on Jackson street, and is now ready with every facility to turn out the best custom work in the city. He manufactures only at reasonable rates.

The brick work on Mr. Williams' new store room was completed yesterday.—The building makes a nice appearance, and does away with that dirty look that has so long been an eye store—the ruins of the woolen mills.

Tom Williams, that prince of tailors, begs leave to say that he is again located in Fort Wayne, No. 17 west Main street, where he proposes to give all customers a particular good fit at low prices.

Joe L., of Corunna, went to Waterloo on election day to electioneer for Harrison and returned home too late to get in his vote. Guess Joe held off on purpose. We hope this wont reach the ears of his friends "down east."

The fair at Waterloo was largely attended both on Thursday and Friday. The races were first-class. The show of stock was good. The exibitions at the halls were a failure, but that can be said of almost every fair this year. Take it all in all it was a grand success.

Ben. Harrison is not only a stronger but also a much abler man that Gov. Hayes. If a man of his high standing and acknowledged ability was unable to carry Indiana, with the tremendous pressure in his favor, what hopes can any candid Republican have of carrying the State for Hayes?

Archer & Snow, of Fort Wayne, have made arrangements for an excursion, from that city to Philadelphia and return on next Saturday, for $15 or via Baltimore and Washington for $16.—Tickets good for 20 days. This is the best chance yet and all those contemplating a visit to the Centennial should take advantage of these low rates.

Tom Williams one of the best Tailors in the country, is on deck at Ft. Wayne and is the best cutter and fitter in the city. He sends out some fine, nobby suits, and does a style of work that always gives satisfaction. He has taste and style and knows how to make a garment appear to the best advantage. If your want clothes cut or made up, give him a call.

The Fort Wayne Gazette has just discovered that the Republicans lost heavily in Maine and Vermont, and is annoyed because the Democrats want to jollify over the result in Indiana, Ohio and West Virginia, Don't get peevish, neighbor, you will soon get used to Democratic victories, the party you have maligned for sixteen long years past.

The editor of the Garrett "News" growled some last week. If he had shown any interest in the county ticket before the election, this might have been pardonable. Week after week he saw his own candidates abused and nullified, but not a word in their defense did he offer. The tickets for that township were given to Mr. McClure on Monday morning, and we do not believe the asserti on that they were not received until 9 o'clock that evening.

It seems as though some of our smart youths, who have already played an active part in the drama of public disturbance, have not yet learned that a firm faith is the best divinity; a good life is the best philosophy; a clear conscience is the best law; honesty is the best policy; and temperance the best physic.—This item is directed especially to those young kids whose heads were whirling like the balance-wheel of a threshing machine, from the effects of corn juice, last Saturday night.

Never go into a store where you are not wanted If a man wants you to come to his store very bad he will invite you through your home paper in an advertisement. It is very wrong in you to intrude upon their privacy, so don't do it. And then another thing is, the men who advertise are the liberal enterprising ones, always give you good measure and strong weights. They want to live and let others live. Did you ever think of these facts while trading in a city or town?

The cool weather of which we have had a slight experience admonishes us to get ready for the winter by looking after stoves and flues. Chilly mornings and evenings are often determental to good, especially in houses which have not felt the warmth of fire during the entire summer. Rooms that have been used but very little during the summer ought to be thouroughly aired and dried out before they are occupied. In many places slight repairs are needed before stoves can be used, and sometimes flues and chimneys are out of order. Now is the time to have the matters attended to, while moderate weather will admit of the necessary delay.

Ladies, if you want a handsome pair of shoes for winter wear, go and examine the fine stock at Ryan's, before purchasing.

5,494!

That is the number of votes "Blue Jeans" Williams got, more than Harrison. The State Senate is 27 Democrats to 23 Republicans. The House is 52 Republicans to 48 Democrats. There is no U. S. Senator to be elected by the present Legislature.

Just Received at Lanning's Store.

It was a little curious why Mr. Franks was defeated for trustee in Richland. While his competitor is a good man, he is not any better qualified for the position, according to the opinion of good men in that township. True, Mr. F. was sick for four weeks previous to the election, but that hardly justified a neighbor of his to circulate the falsehood that Mr. F. had not sufficient education to fill the position. That will react on that fellow some day with ten-fold force.

We loose five Congressmen in this State over 1874. This is owing to the way the Republicans re-districted the State in the Legislature of 1873. The election in 1874 was a tidal wave in our favor, and we did not expect to hold the same footing in a Presidential campaign. To show how the Republicans fixed it, by putting Democratic counties together. We have four districts Democratic, which gave a total majority of 21,000, while the same Republican districts gave a total majority of only 11,000

We had no time last week to speak of the fine address of Hon. A. P. Edgerton, at Butler, but it is not too late yet to say that he surprised everyone by the excellent argument he presented, and its easy, graceful delivery. He spoke for nearly two hours and held the crowd solid, though it was unpleasantly cool at the time. We dont know of another speech that done us more good than this and as an evidence we find Wilmington brought in an increased Democratic majority of twenty-four.

We saw a letter that a lady, of this city, wrote to "her old man," from Philadelphia, wherein she declarded that now and forever she would be a Republican. She says: "You ought to go to Washington and see how the Republicans live. Why, I am disgusted with all manner of Democrats. Last night the bands played all night over the result in Indiana, and if you Democrats at home could have heard that music and saw the fire works, it would have cooked your dish, so it would." The lady is highly cultivated in politics.

Don't fret; it only adds to your burden. To work hard is very well, but to work hard and worry too is more than human nature can bear. Now, we're willing to work but we don't like to worry also. Our subscribers can releive us of the latter by paying what they owe us. You all know how much you are indebted to the office, and we know you could easily pay such a small amount if you only could "think of it" when in the city. Let us kindly remind you that you can send it by mail. Address, COURIER office, Auburn, Ind., and we will give you proper credit on our books Lets see how many thinking subscribers we will have next week.

In his key-note speech at the Academy of Music, Indianapolis, Senator Morton told his hearers that the election of Williams in October meant the inauguration of Tilden and Hendricks at Washington in March 1877. This declaration of the Republican leader was received by his followers as gospel truth. And we believe Morton in tais respect. We have not indulged in any bad names against Morton or, in fact, anybody else this campaign. We know Morton is a sharp, shrewd politician and has a large following in Indiana. If the Democracy remain united and work for honesty and reform, work for better times, work for the poor man as well as the rich, what Morton said weeks ago, will in a few weeks be a veritable fact. Then, pick your flints, roll up you sleeves, and work for a change.

A terrible accident might have occurred at Waterloo, last week, had it not been for the presence of mind of Frank Griswold. We understand it like this: Frank had taken several girls to the fair and on their return, when crossing the Air Line track, the horses became frightened at an approaching train and stopped perfectly still on the track. Some gentleman standing by ran and caught the horses by the bit and it was with difficulty that Frank got him to leave loose, but after he gave "Mr. Man" three or four cuts over the head and neck with a whip he did'nt pause long in letting go. One of Mr. Porter's girls became so frightened that she leaped from the vehicle and loosing her balance fell squarely upon the track and her life was saved through the courage of a gentleman standing by, who took her from her helpless situation. The wheel of the car cut off a piece of her apron. It was a gravel train under good headway.

THE OUTLOOK.

Business stagnation has already assumed alarming proportions all over the country, and it is with the gravest apprehensions the most cautious and best fortified financiers view the outlook from the standpoint of to-day. General mistrust permeates every avenue of trade, and the scarcity of money is being felt more and more severely every day, by every class in every community.

It cannot be ignored that there are very many screws loose in the business machinery of this country. These supports have been letting go their hold slowly and surely for several years. Integrity, the corner stone of business probity the world over, is being terribly prostituted in this fair land of ours.

The greed to get money has become a mania, and the manner of getting it is secondary to the accomplishment; so desperate has the strife become in certain circles of official and business life that no obligations to man or God seem to be a hinderance to the carrying out of systematic swindling. The truly honest man can but distrust the times which gilds the blackest characters and clasps the hand in friendship that is foul with the leprosy of theft. The greatest correction for these evil times is a new school for official morals, and, until that time, nothing better need be anticipated. Nothing but a change can bring about better times, and it is now in the power of the people to make that change.

INDIANA.

The Democratic party has carried Indiana by a majority over General Harrison of 5,710, according to the fullest returns at hand. It was done after the most determined, vehement, almost superhuman effort on the part of the Republican party to save that State, which they somehow seemed to regard as the key to the situation. The "bloody shirt and plenty of money," and Kilpatrick; Morton, the unscrupulous and unsurpassed manager; Logans and Blaines, and Ingersols, and Bristows; the assembling of Republican Generals and Soldiers at Indianapolis to revive the old war feeling; Importations of negroes from Kentucky; repeating—everything that human ingenuity could devise or money procure was brought to bear upon Indiana by the Republican managers and this is the result. It will be impossible for the Republicans, on the heels of their discouraging defeat, to do better in Indiana in November than they have in October. They can put forth no more exertion than they have done. They can bring into play no more appliances than they have done. The cry of "rebel claims and rebel debt," will stick in the taroats of the Republican orators, the people having once passed upon that question. The bloody shirt can not be waived with increased advantage, the people of Indiana having given a decision upon that issue. What, then, will be the effect of the Indiana victory? What is the situation in Indiana? It is claimed by the Republican organs that the fact that the Democrats have carried Indiana argues nothing for November—forgetting that they assume that Ohio will be heavily Republican in November because slightly Republican now—and they cite the fact that in 1872 Mr. Hendricks carried the State in the October election, while the Republicans carried it in November by 21,000. This seems plausible. But in the first place it should be remembered that Mr. Hendricks was only elected by running ahead of his ticket in 1872, the remainder of the Democratic ticket being defeated. This suggests that Hendricks is personally popular in his own State, that he is stronger than his party, and Mr. Hendricks is again a candidate in 1876, this time for vice presidency, to which State pride and personal devotion will impel the people of Indiana to elect him. To call attention to the popularity of Hendricks in Indiana is not a potent Republican argument. Indiana was not Democratic in October, 1872.—The election of one man on the ticket by the slender majority of 1,148 did not make it a Democratic State. There was a commanding reason, however, why Indiana gave a Republican majority in November, 1872, apart from this. Four years ago Pennsylvania, as well Ohio and Indiana, voted in October, and the battle ground was in this State and in the then Keystone State. Pennsylvania rolled up a Republican majority of 34,-868 for Governor, and Ohio polled a Republican majority of 12,104 for Secretary of State, and the Presidential election was then and there determined.—The November elections were a mere formality, a ratification meeting. The elections of that year show this. In October the Democratic vote in Pennsylvania was 317,760. In the the November following it was but 211,841, one hundred and six thousand Democrats that voted in October staying away from the polls. The Republican majority in that State was accordingly lifted one hundred thousand in a month. In Ohio, where the Greeley movement was specially strong, the Democratic vote fell off but six thousand in that month. In Indiana the Democratic vote in October was 189,424. In November it was only 163,637. Twenty-five thousand seven hundred and eighty-seven Democrats that went to the polls and voted for Hendricks in October did not take the useless trouble to vote in the Presidential election one month later. Had they done so the Democracy would have carried Indiana, for the Republican majority was but 21,000, but they could not have changed the predetermined general result. These figures show the omnipotence of the October elections, and they show why, with proper work in this interim, the Presidency in 1876 has been won for the Democracy by October.—Enquirer.

A Good Witness.

A terrible howl is being made by the opposition about paying rebel claims, and they insist that Democrats are going to pay 'em all off. Why the Senate is bound to be Republican for four years to come, and they can't be paid without going through the Senate. So you see the election of Tilden cannot possibly affect their payment. But there is no claims to be paid as Mr. Conger, of Michigan, testifies, but what must meet the requirements of law. Now who is Mr. Conger? He is a Republican member of Congress, from Michigan, and a pretty strong one. He is a relative of our friend Meskie, of the Central House, who will tell you all about Conger. Well, here is what Conger says taken from the Records:

Mr. EDEN.—I yield a few minutes to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. Conger.]

Mr. CONGER.—I have but one or two words to say upon this subject. * * * I am pleased to bear testimony before this House to the strictness, accuracy, and care with which every claim is examined by the Committee on War Claims, so as to bring it within the rules which I and every other gentleman of that committee require, those rules which should apply to the whole class of war claims, either in the loyal States or the Southern States——

Mr. MILLIKEN.—And the rules prescribed by law.

Mr. CONGER.—And the rules prescribed by law. I take pleasure in saying here, for the committee with which I have the honor to act, that so far as I have seen there has been on the part of every member of that committee unusual care and strictness in the examination of every one of these claims. Not only have members insisted upon the observance of those rules of law which we are all bound to regard, but they have conformed to the strictest claims, would regard as proper. I think it due to myself as a member on this side of the House, to say in answer to my friend from Ohio, [Mr. Neal] that I am satisfied the committee on War Claims do not intend to permit any of the thousands—I do not know but I might almost say millions—of claims which have been and will be presented before the committee in this and succeeding Congress, to be reported to this House until they are brought strictly within the requirements of the law. I feel satisfied that the most rigid rule must be complied with before they can be reported here.

We know to a certainty that all these claims so far presented have been brought by loyal citizens of the South, and not by rebels, as some Radical leaders would like to have the people believe.

WHO IS CUNEO.

To the Editor of the New York Times.

I am in receipt of a copy of the Pittsburg Post of the 5th inst., containing a fac-simile of Secretary Lee's letter to L. S. Tyler, secretary of the American Alliance, and also a note requesting me to read said letter, and communicate my views of Gov. Hayes to the Post. As a foreign born citizen, I rise to say, over my own signature, that the attempt to attribute Know-nothing sentiments to Gov. Hayes is one of the most unjust efforts ever made by man. I have known Gov. Hayes personally and intimately for many years, and know that he is a magnanimous gentleman, is the friend of all oppressed, and that citizens of foreign birth have been treated by him with the highest consideration cordiality, and I also know of those of foreign birth whom he had cordially and enthusiastically assisted to office.

H. CUNEO.
Upper Sandusky, Ohio.

The above is a letter written by an Italian, named Cuneo, who we know very well, having been in charge of his printing office for several years. He is a foreign citizen having once been connected with the lazzarom of his native country. To show the early culture of the gentleman, he used to lay in bed, when a boy, and chew horse chestnuts into a pulp, and then re-chew and swallow it Finally sent to New York to play the hand organ, and started out combining the qualities of monkey and organ in himself, as a matter of economy. He delighted the children with his cracked machine but a short time, when the poor patronage of his calling compelled him to work for a livelihood and he was next found in a machine shop in Canton, Ohio. The animal propensities of his nature being fully aroused he worked day and night, and having the constitution of a well arranged mule he succeeded in getting a few dollars ahead, and finally invested in a paper at upper Sandusky, Ohio. Here the uncouth illiterate compound of brass attempted to educate the American people. In the mean time he acquired money on a very small income from his paper, an economy that absorbed everything else. He finally got to be postmaster, and by his close, penurious, miserly ways, is gaining a competence. He is a rough, awkward, brutish looking fellow, whom you would spot in a crowd as a burglar, and it will lessen Hayes very much in our esteem if he ever had anything to do with this monte bank. This is the man who wants to assure our foreigners that Hayes is all right. If they knew his instincts, his natures, his sympathies as well as we do, they would know that the Hayes campaign hangs on a slender thread, if compelled to resort to such characters as Cuneo for endorsement.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

It is proposed to form a stock company in Philadelphia and purchase the Main Exposition building, to be devoted to future exhibitions. The cost will be about $500,000. A public meeting has been held and a committee of organization and an executive committee appointed.... One thousand workmen in the shops of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railway Company, at Scranton, Pa., are on a strike, in consequence of a reduction of 10 per cent. of their wages.... The engine, baggage-car, smoking-car, and one passenger-car of the passenger train bound west were thrown from the track on the Erie railroad near Genesee, N. Y., last week, by striking a horse. The engineer, Clark, was killed, and the fireman, brakeman and a tramp were badly injured. Three passengers were slightly injured.

A terrible holocaust occurred at New York one day last week, involving the lives of five persons, and will probably result in the death of two others. The Bremen packet-ship Europa, which for several years has been engaged in the kerosene carrying trade between the United States and Germany, was placed on a large balance-dock at the foot of Rutgers street, for the purpose of receiving a general overhauling. A large force of calkers, ship-carpenters and blacksmiths were put to work. A ship-carpenter named John Casey struck a match for the purpose of lighting his pipe, and then carelessly threw the burning match to the floor. A large pile of oakum was close by, and the match falling in a thread of hemp, set the pile on fire. Casey, in endeavoring to smother the flames, was so badly burned that his life is despaired of. The flooring of the vessel having become saturated with kerosene, benzine and other highly inflammable liquids, in a moment caught fire, and the flames spread with lightning rapidity. In a second the entire hold, from stem to stern, was a mass of flames, which gained constantly. John Sever, another workman, residing in Brooklyn, was badly burned, but the worst was yet to come. Numerous workmen in the hold of the ship were shut off from air, and as though they had been in a tomb filled with fire. Several of their number, who were at work amidship, were completely surrounded by flames, and those who were not in the midst of the flames were exposed to the deadly fumes which arose from the fire. The firemen were promptly on hand and succeeded in extinguishing the flames in about half an hour. A number of workmen were then discovered to be missing, and a search revealed the dead bodies of five men. Another was so badly burned that he cannot recover.

While three loaded cars were being hoisted from the slope of the Middle Lehigh colliery, at New Boston, Pa., a few days ago, the rope broke, and the cars ran rapidly to the bottom. Four miners named William Backus, Joe Becker, Thomas Jones and Ed. Neuss were killed.

John Fitch Cleveland, for more than thirty years a valued and esteemed member of the editorial staff of the New York Tribune, died last week. The primary cause of his death was disease of the heart, which was followed in the latter portion of his sickness by an entire suspension of the circulation in his lower limbs. He had been ill about five weeks, but his case was only pronounced hopeless a few days before his death.... Pat Maguire, of Mount Vernon, N. Y., during a quarrel with his wife, charged her with infidelity, and seizing their children, one after another, exclaimed, as he dashed them to the floor: "This is not mine!" One of the children has died from the injuries and the others are in a precarious condition.

The entire business portion of Sandy Hill, N. Y., was burned last week. The losses are over $200,000.

A terrible explosion, attended with frightful loss of life and property, occurred in the iron mill of Zug & Co., at Pittsburgh, Pa., last week. A battery of three large boilers in the nail mill of the firm burst, the terrible force of the concussion lifting the roof and frame of almost that entire building many feet into the air, and dropping it, where it was crushed and broken upon the machinery below, until the whole was converted into pieces the majority of which were small enough for the purpose of kindling-wood. The force of the exploding power was so great, and seems to have been so evenly distributed upon all parts of the boilers, that they were broken into hundreds of pieces. One of them was carried across the river to Allegheny. Another large piece, going in the same direction, dashed through the roof of the muck mill on the opposite side of the street, tearing down two of the furnaces, snapping giant timbers like splinters, and breaking down the huge crane which is used to lift tons of iron and metal. The falling furnaces ignited the mill, and it was partly consumed before the flames could be checked. Five nail machines saved many a life. Had the mill been as open as an ordinary rolling-mill, it does not seem possible that a single one of the inmates would have escaped with his life. There were employed in the mills, at the time of the accident, about 300 persons. Of these, 150 worked in the nail department, where the explosion took place. The scene presented was one of agony and despair. The vicinity was transformed into a hospital and charnel-house, where charred and mutilated remains were brought. The shrieks of some of the wounded were fearful. Fourteen were killed almost instantly, and some forty others wounded seriously, several of whom will die. Men were taken from the ruins maimed and bleeding, only to die in delirious agony. Relatives and friends begged, threatened, and coaxed to be admitted within the lines, but most all were refused, because there was a dread that there would be too many of the curious let in, who would only be in the way. Physicians soon came to assist to dress wounds and allay the sufferings of the wounded. The excitement throughout the city was most intense.

THE WEST.

The Ute Indians in Colorado and New Mexico are reported to have assumed a hostile attitude to the whites, and an outbreak is said to be feared at any moment. This news is rather disquieting, in view of the utter failure of our campaign against the Sioux, of which it is highly probable the Utes have learned by this time.... James W. Gilchrist, a farmer, while horse-racing with his brother-in-law, near Calhoun, Mo., was thrown off by the girth breaking, his head striking a stump near the roadside, breaking his neck. Death ensued almost instantly.

A collision occurred last week on the Lafayette, Muncie and Bloomington railroad, about four miles east of Lafayette, Ind., between a stock train going east and a gravel train, resulting in the killing of A. J. Riddle, of Oxford, Ind., who was in charge of the cattle on the train, and was on the engine at the time of the collision. Both locomotives were badly damaged, and nine head of cattle killed.

News from Fort Fetterman states that a haying party of twelve men and seven ox teams were attacked by a band of twenty or thirty Indians, twenty-five miles from the above post, badly wounding John Otens, wagonmaster, and killing one horse. Two of the party, out hunting, heard a war song, and hastened to the train, which was immediately prepared for defense. Four of the men started to find the Indians, which they did, and made a lively retreat, hotly pursued by Indians to within fifty yards of the train, when eight men sent a volley into the reds, who retreated to the shelter of the bluffs and commenced firing upon the train, which was at a disadvantage, and compelled it to move 200 yards, and the fight continued nearly four hours. The number of reds killed was unknown. Two were seen to drop. The Indians showed great courage, and were strongly armed with Winchester and army rifles.... A fire at Cleveland, Ohio, last week, destroyed $250,000 worth of property.

A man named Ithels, who was herding cattle near a ranche on Horseshoe river, forty miles northwest of Fort Laramie, was recently killed, scalped, and had his ears cut off by Indians.... At Beaver, Utah, a few days ago, Judge Boreman passed sentence upon John D. Lee for participation in the Mountain Meadow massacre nineteen years ago. In doing so he called attention to the atrocity of the crime, the inability heretofore of the authorities to procure evidence that the conspiracy to murder was widespread; that he was finally offered up as a sacrifice to popular indignation, but that others equally guilty might hereafter expect punishment. The prisoner, having the right under the laws of the Territory to choose death by hanging, shooting or beheading, and having chosen to be shot, was sentenced to be shot to death Jan. 26, 1877.

A bold robbery was perpetrated at Knoxville, Iowa, one day last week. At 7 o'clock in the evening the County Treasury was entered by two masked men, who overpowered the Treasurer and with drawn revolvers forced him to open the safe. The amount taken is about $14,000.... Capt. Ben F. Hutchinson, for forty years one of the most noted steamboatmen on the Western rivers, and during the past ten years somewhat famous as a breeder of thoroughbred horses, died last week at his residence near St. Louis, aged 70 years.

THE SOUTH.

A fire at Houston, Texas, last week, destroyed the entire block on the east side of Main street, between Preston and Congress. Among the buildings destroyed were some of the handsomest business structures in the city. The Western Union telegraph office was burned, and communication by telegraph was interrupted. The loss is $350,000; insurance, $220,000.

The steamboat Southern Belle was recently burned on the Mississippi river, near Plaquemine, La. The boat and cargo were totally destroyed, and several lives were lost.

A New Orleans dispatch says that many lives were lost by the burning of the steamboat Southern Belle. Among those known to be lost are William Von Phul, Mr. Drose, Miss Fannie O'Connor, and another lady, all of Baton Rouge; Mr. Franks, of Port Hudson; Mr. Ling; Frank, an employe; the steward and his crew; Catholic priest, name unknown, from Bayou Sara; A. C. Griffith; George Thomas, chief steward, from Louisville; Gus Davis; Hollonder Curtis; Boon Grifid, tender of the cabin, and Louis Horn, texas tender. The four last-named jumped overboard and were drowned, while Mr. Van Phul, Dr. O. Z. Griffith, and the priest are said to have perished in the flames.... At Mt. Washington, Ky., last Sunday, Sam Burkett (colored) entered an African church under the influence of liquor. William Barnes, an elder, asked him to leave, when Burkett answered: "You and your church can go to hell." Barnes asked for a repetition of the remark, and receiving such, shot Burkett through the heart, then escaping.

WASHINGTON.

The thirty-sixth call for the redemption of 5-20 bonds of 1865, May and November, provides for their payment on and after the 6th of January, 1877, upon which date interest will cease. The call is as follows: Coupon bonds, $100, No. 12,401 to No. 17,000, both inclusive; $500, No. 19,001 to 22,100, both inclusive; $1,000, No. 46,851 to No. 53,300, both inclusive. Total coupon, $5,000,000. Registered bonds, $50, No. 51 to No. 200, both inclusive; $100, No. 1,651 to No. 2,450, both inclusive; $500, No. 1,811 to No. 2,750, both inclusive; $1,000, No. 5,751 to No. 10,000, both inclusive; $5,000, No. 2,901 to No. 4,150, both inclusive; $1,000, No. 3,951 to No. 5,150, both inclusive. Total registered, $5,000,000; aggregate, $10,000,000.

GENERAL.

To present date, says a St. Paul paper, nearly $11,000 have been received at the First National Bank of St. Paul in response to a circular to banks asking donations to the fund for the benefit of Mrs. Heywood, widow of the bank cashier killed by the robbers at Northfield, and so far responses have been received from but one-tenth of the banks of the country.

At Hamilton, Canada, a few days ago, Francis M. Alden, a traveler from the United States, met night-watchman Jefferson, and accused him of stealing his baggage and railway checks. An altercation ensued, and Alden fired five shots at Jefferson, three taking effect, one of which entered his back and came out at the right breast, and will prove fatal. The wounded man's deposition was taken, and Alden was arrested.

Woodward, the friend and associate of Tweed, who was recently arrested in Chicago, has been taken to New York, and, in default of $3,000,000 bail, committed to prison. A civil suit to recover over $6,000,000 has been brought against him.

FOREIGN.

A London dispatch of the 7th inst. says: "Lord Derby's dispatch to Sir Henry Elliott regarding the Bulgarian atrocities was issued last night. The British Ambassador is directed to demand a personal audience with the Sultan, communicate Baring's report, demand reparation and justice, urge the immediate rebuilding of the houses and churches, provide for the restoration of the industries, and give assistance to the persons who have been reduced to poverty."

It is stated that Russia has offered Roumania absolute independence if Russian troops are allowed to march through Roumanian territory.... In the present unsettled state of affairs in the republic of Mexico, the Congress, now in session, deem it unadvisable to hold the election which is soon in order for the choice of members of that body. They have, however, deemed it necessary that the people should be represented in Congress assembled, and will therefore adopt the simple and unique method of perpetuating their terms of service by electing themselves to continue in office until such time as the nation may be in a proper condition to risk the ordinary mode of choosing Congressmen.... A telegram from Shanghai says an imperial edict has been published expressing regret for Mr. Margery's murder, and affirming the right of foreigners to travel through the country, and to enjoy the protection of the authorities. An envoy with a letter of apology for the Yunnan outrage is to go to England at once.... Jovellar has resigned the Captain-Generalship of Cuba. He is to be succeeded by Gen. Martinez Campos.

A Madrid dispatch says: "The draft is proceeding. Twenty-four thousand soldiers for Cuba were drawn yesterday, without disturbance, and these men will soon follow the 16,000 who are already on their way."... Another large public meeting was held in London, on Monday, to consider the Eastern question. A letter from Gladstone was read, severely attacking the administration for what he calls persisting in a policy condemned by the nation and not supported by Parliament. He expresses the conviction that making Bosnia, Herzegovina, and Bulgaria independent of Ottoman will avoid and end the controversy, but he declares he has exhausted all hope that the Government will see the true merits of the case.

The conditions are announced on which the Porte consents to an armistice of six months. Servia is to be forbidden to occupy the positions now in possession of the Turkish army; the introduction of arms and ammunition into Servia and Montenegro and the passage of foreign volunteers into the Turkish provinces are to be strictly prohibited; and Servia and Montenegro are to be prohibited from giving any assistance to the insurgents in adjacent provinces. It is stated in a London dispatch that Servia refuses to be bound by these one-sided conditions. It is also announced that Russia has signified her refusal to accede to the prohibition in regard to the passage of volunteers into Servia—which is the most important of the Turkish conditions. If this avowal has been made by Russia, it is in effect a plain declaration of active sympathy with Servia, as well as dissatisfaction with the entire peace programme of the Porte. Such an attitude on the part of Russia would bring matters in the East to an immediate crisis, and the situation is regarded as more critical than at any time since the proposition for an armistice was submitted.... A Paris correspondent telegraphs an account of an interview with an officer in the Egyptian army, who gives the circumstantial details of the horrible events which have taken place in Abyssinia during the attempts of Egypt to chastise the Abyssinians. There have been two expeditions. The first, which was dispatched in October, 1875, consisting of 4,000 men, was surprised in the defile of Goundel, and massacred to the last man. The second expedition, of 4,000 men, started in January last. It met the Abyssinians in February, in a defile of Goura, and was overwhelmed, 4,000 men being killed. The Abyssinian King then went into the interior, and, according to the latest reports, repeated the defiles of Goundel and Goura by again crushing the Egyptians. The details of this, as of other expeditions, are guarded with great secrecy.... It is officially announced that Count Von Arnim has been condemned to five years' imprisonment in the House of Correction, for treason and an offense against the Emperor and Prince Bismarck.

A GALLOWS HORROR.

Sickening Scene at the Execution of Francis Ept, at Coshocton, O.

The Cincinnati Enquirer thus describes the terrible scene which occurred during the execution of Francis Ept at Coshocton, O., for the murder of Abraham Wertheimer:

The next moment the fatal cap shut out daylight forever from the vision of the murderer, and a second later the trap was sprung and Francis Ept was dangling in the air. All held their breath for a moment; some, faint at heart, turned their faces away from the ghastly sight. Just then a low moan was heard issuing from Ept's breast, and soon his piercing cries of anguish filled the air. The noose slipped around in such a manner that its knot was over the hanging man's chin, and, the fall not having broken his neck, but merely for a moment stunned him, he was now, amid the agony of death, crying for relief. "Let me go, let me go!" he shouted in German. "Oh, have mercy on me, oh, have mercy on me!" "Oh God, the Father, have mercy on me!" "Oh, let me go, let me go!" "Oh, Mother of God, help me!" "Father Epping, cut the rope and let me go!" Cries of horror sprang from the audience, while the Sheriffs and Father Epping ran to the edge of the scaffold platform. "Shoot him and put him out of his misery," suggested a bystander. "Oh, shoot me, shoot me!" ejaculated Ept, who was now fully sensible; "I was ten years a soldier; shoot me, and don't hang me like a dog." "Pull him up!" said one of the Sheriffs. Two strong men seized hold of the rope and dragged the dangling victim, hand over hand, to the platform. Here he was placed in a chair, while his cries, moans and pleas for mercy would have melted a heart of stone. "Courage, my son," said Father Epping, "think of the sufferings of our Redeemer, and be a man." "Oh, Father Epping, for God's sake cut the rope and save me," prayed the quivering wretch. Thus he cried until the trap had been readjusted, and then he was again lifted on to it. Now his nerves were unstrung, as well they might be, and he was almost as limp as a rag. He never ceased begging for mercy, and in the midst of one of his cries the trap was sprung, and this time the work was effectively done.

All About Gold.

A cubic foot of pure gold weighs 1,218.75 pounds avoirdupois; a cubic foot of pure silver weighs 626.25 pounds avoirdupois. One million dollars gold coin weighs 3,658.8 pounds avoirdupois; one million dollars silver coin weighs 58,925.9 avoidupois. If there is 1 per cent. of gold or silver in one ton of ore, it contains 291.66 ounces troy, of either of these metals. The average fineness of the Colorado gold is 781 in 1,000 and the natural alloy; gold 781, silver 209; copper 10; total, 1,000. The calculations at the mint are made on the basis that 43 ounces of standard gold, or 900 fine (coin), is worth $800, and 11 ounces of silver 900 fine (coin), is worth $12.80. One ton (1,000 pounds avoirdupois) of gold or silver contains 29,163 troy ounces, and therefore the value of a ton of pure gold is $603,799.21, and a ton of silver, $37,704.84.

Hard Times in Germany.

A European correspondent writes: "Great hardship and suffering are reported from the Rhine. With the close of summer the chances of employment have rapidly diminished, and great numbers of laborers are reduced to extreme necessity. The situation threatens to be even worse than that of last winter. One House of Correction at Brauweiler has 800 inmates, including 500 men. Most of these were arrested for trifling thefts, often of the barest necessities of life; and if they are released they at once repeat the offenses. Similar stories come from all other parts of Germany."

Association of Ideas.

Eddie, a chap of 3½ years, was sent to the corner store to get two wicks, but he got into the store minus a knowledge of what his mother wanted. The kind keeper, to help out the little fellow, who began to cry, began naming several articles, at last mentioned the herb thyme; "That's it!" exclaimed he, "something about time. I fink she told me to buy a fortnight!" "Why, my little man, a fortnight is two weeks." "That's it!" ejaculated the little messenger, in high glee, "mamma told me to get two wicks—two lamp wicks."—Albany Journal.

Fertile.—Young oysters come out of their shells with a temporary swimming apparatus, which enables them to float and search a solid body, to which they can attach themselves. The number of young oysters expelled at each period of breeding from the mantle of a single mother amounts to from one to two millions.

Lord Lytton's recent fall over an Indian precipice is described as a frightful sight. He fell fully 100 feet before he was stopped by a tree. Strangely enough, he escaped without a scratch, was able to scramble up, mount another horse, and continue his ride as if nothing had happened. The horse, too, was nearly unhurt, though the workmen had to cut him a road before he could be got up again.

GOOD NEWS FOR THE FARMERS.

American Grain to be in Demand—Deficiencies in the European Crops Expected to Produce a Brisk Export Movement at Fair Prices.

[From the New York Tribune.]

Dispatches from London have been received in this city stating that there will be a deficiency in the corn supply of England, and that much interest is felt in the American crops of cereals. Much of the English wheat went into market in a damp condition, but drier weather has allowed the threshing to proceed under better circumstances. Much attention is now given to the ingathering of Scottish grain crops, and considerable anxiety in regard to them has been felt for some time. The conditions under which the crops have been harvested have been unfavorable, and the publication of the agricultural returns for 1875-6 has forced those interested in the matter to the conclusion that the United Kingdom will be more than usually dependent upon foreign importation for her bread supply. The questions which arise from these facts are, whence is this supply to come, and how will the demand affect the fall and winter grain trade of the United States?

Mr. Walker, statistician of the Produce Exchange, on Tuesday furnished a Tribune reporter the following facts: Europe will demand from abroad a supply of 120,000,000 or 150,000,000 bushels of grain. The United Kingdom will need for the cereal year, from Sept. 1, 1876, to Aug. 31, 1877, an estimated supply of 104,000,000 bushels, including her present stock and the amount now in transit, which are about 16,000,000 bushels; consequently 88,000,000 bushels must be drawn from foreign sources. The following are the countries which usually import grain, with the amounts of the importation: Belgium and Holland, about 12,000,000 bushels; France imports and exports, but her imports have exceeded her exports for the past few years by from 10,000,000 to 30,000,000, depending upon the paucity or abundance of her own crop—just what France will raise this year is not yet known; Switzerland takes 3,000,000 or 4,000,000 bushels, which go by way of Marseilles; Italy will import more than usual, her southern crop being light and her northern crop only an average one; Germany will also import more than usual, for her crop is fully 25 per cent. short. The rye crop all over Europe is undoubtedly very short, and this fact will also increase the demand for wheat.

The countries whose grain crops exceed their necessities, with the amounts which they furnish, are as follows: Russia's supply for export is from 30,000,000 to 70,000,000 bushels. Her average exportation to all foreign countries for the past ten years has been about 50,000,000, of which the United Kingdom has taken 20,000,000, and the other European countries 30,000,000. Her crop this year in the north is estimated to be 70 per cent. short; Russian Poland and Central and Southern Russia will furnish an average crop. In the vicinity of the sea of Azov, and in the Crimea, the crop is short. The countries which will be called upon to supply the deficiencies of Europe will be Chili, which will furnish 4,000,000 or 5,000,000 bushels; the United States, 70,000,000; Australia, 3,000,000; British India, 5,000,000; Austria and Hungary, 8,000,000; and Russia, 50,000,000. The total supply from these countries amounts to 141,000,000 bushels, and the United States, therefore, will have a very fair opportunity to push the surplus of the crops to market, but the demand will not justify exceedingly high prices. These inferences from the statistics are supported by the opinions of prominent dealers in wheat and flour, exporters, and shipping agents of this city, whose conclusions in the matter have been drawn from different sources.

A Hard Breakfast.

In ante bellum days an old fellow named Thompson kept a hotel in Atlanta, of whose quiet humor and frolic many stories are told. But once Thompson allowed himself, as he afterwards said, to be caught napping. At all events he met more than his match.

A wayfarer called very late for his breakfast. The meal was hurriedly prepared from leavings not over abundant. Thompson, feeling that the meal was not quite what it should be for a public house, made all sorts of apologies in an indirect and roundabout way; but the guest paid no attention. He plied his knife and fork in silence, not intimating in the remotest manner that he recognized the presence of the host. This apparently sulky demeanor vexed the landlord, and, probably smarting under the knowledge that his table was not a credit to his house, he allowed himself to become exasperated. In his wrath he stuck his thumbs into the arm-holes of his vest, and, swelling himself to his utmost proportions, he exclaimed:

"Now look here, stranger, confound me if I hain't made all the apology necessary—and more, too, considering the breakfast, and who's eating it. If you don't like my ways you can leave. Perhaps you don't like your breakfast? Let me tell you, I've seen victuals of worse quality, worse cooked, and worse served, enough sight."

The wayfarer laid down his knife and fork, wiped his lips with his bandana, and, looking benignly and blandly, he said:

"You've seen it, landlord?"

"Yes, I have—many times."

"Well, I'm blamed, old hoss, if you hain't out-traveled me!"

It cost Thompson something to get out of that.

Measuring the Continent.

Mr. George F. Fairchild, of the United States Coast Survey, is engaged in a transcontinental triangulation. The object of this survey is to determine the length of the thirty-ninth parallel from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and which will connect the surveys of the two coast lines. It will also furnish additional data for determining the shape of the earth's surface, and then all these triangulation points will give accurate data for the surveys of the different States. This will be the longest triangulation ever made in any country, the distance being some 3,000 miles. Eleven measurements of degrees, for determination of the curvature of the earth's surface have been made by other countries, of which nine only belong to the present century. The present triangulation across the continent was commenced several years ago. On the Atlantic coast the starting point was on the Chesapeake, and the triangulation is completed to Harper's Ferry, and from the latter point a special reconnoissance has been made to the Ohio river, striking it on the thirty-ninth parallel. Coming east from the Pacific coast, Prof. Davidson, of the Coast Survey, is in charge of the triangulation from a point above San Francisco to the Sierra Nevadas. Some three or four years ago the survey was started at St. Louis, working both ways to join the work from the East and West.—St. Louis Republican.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

A Brief but Comprehensive Statement of the Situation.

[From the Chicago Tribune, Oct. [illegible]]

The Vienna correspondent of the London Times gives the details of the English proposals recently laid before the Porte, which it will be remembered had previously received the general assent of the other powers. The proposals are classed under three heads. The first demands the status quo ante-bellum, "roughly," for Servia and Montenegro. The word "roughly" was inserted so as to allow of modifications or discussions of questions of secondary importance, such as some kind of formal satisfaction from Turkey for the invasion of Servia, and some rectification of the frontier of Montenegro, such as Russia would be likely to demand. The second point proposes the signing of a protocol with the representatives of the powers in Constantinople by which the Porte would give Bosnia and Herzegovina a system of local government that would give the population of those provinces control over their own local affairs and guarantees against the exercise of arbitrary power. The third proposal relates to Bulgaria, and provides that the same guarantees against maladministration shall be given that province. These points, sent to the English Minister by Lord Derby, are, it will be seen, identical with those proposed by Mr. Gladstone in his pamphlet upon the Bulgarian atrocities, and indicate that the Tory Government, rather than lose its power, has retreated from its former position, and yielded to the popular pressure of the power behind the throne.

Although the powers have given their assent to these three propositions, it is by no means certain that they will secure peace or settle the distracting questions at issue. The proposals are not a formal treaty, but only the basis for a treaty, like those of Villafranca and Versailles, which admits of discussion. Turkey has not yet signified her acceptance of them, although three or four weeks have elapsed since they were presented, and in the interim England is calling for a conference of the powers. A difficulty has already arisen with regard to the conference. Russia, England, Italy, France and Austria have given their consent to the conference. Germany is ominously silent. Russia demands that Turkey shall not be admitted to the conference, while Austria demands that all the signatory powers, which would include Turkey, Servia and Montenegro, shall be present. Another complication threatens in the future also. If Turkey refuses the English proposals, Russia and England might agree upon some plan of military occupation, but Germany has joined Austria in refusing the proposal of occupation. Meanwhile, Russia, acting upon the assumption that there can be no peace, is continuing her military preparations. In view of these preparations, there is a panic on the St. Petersburg Exchange. The reserves have been forbidden to leave their places of residence, and Roumania has been offered absolute independence if Russian troops are allowed to march through its territory. If these signs mean anything, they mean that Russia either believes war will be inevitable or is bound to force a war. A very few days must tell the story.

The Missouri Bandits.

The James and Younger brothers—the Missouri bandits—are the relics of the once-famous, or infamous, Quantrell band of border ruffians. For years these "boys" have ravaged and plundered throughout the Southwest without let or hindrance, but venturing too far North, recently, were checked in their career in Minnesota, for the first time. They have robbed express companies, railroad trains, banks, fair grounds, and individuals for the past ten years of an aggregate sum of probably one-quarter of a million of dollars, and had come to suppose their "facilities" for making money as endless, until they struck the people of Minnesota and got struck back. The Younger brothers and four of their assistants have been either captured or killed, and the only pity is that the two James brothers should have been permitted to escape and return to Missouri. The men now in jail at Faribault will be tried and sent to prison, probably for life, as the laws of Minnesota permit the deepest-dyed murderer to escape the death-penalty by pleading guilty, and the rest of the robbers, now safe in Missouri, will doubtless confine any further operations to the borders of civilization.

A Curious Apple Tree.

There is growing in Pohuck, Vernon township, Sussex county, an apple tree which bears both sour and sweet apples. Not only this, but sour and sweet apples grow on the same limbs, and some of the apples are both sour and sweet. One can pick an apple and find it intensely sour, then pick another from next to it, and find it extremely sweet; still another can be picked from the same limb, and both be sour and sweet—one-half sweet and the other sour. Over a quarter of a century ago, one William Babb, now deceased, in experimenting, took a bud from an apple tree which bore greenings and another from a tree which bore sweet apples. Cutting them in half, he placed the sour and sweet halves together, and, budding them to the tree, the above has been the result. Some of the apples are entirely green in color, while others have a yellowish cast.—Newark Advertiser.

The first cars ever seen upon the island of Cuba were built twenty-five years ago by the late Isaac Keith, of Massachusetts, and fourteen platform cars now in process of building at the car manufactory of his sons in Boston will soon be sent to Cuba.

A NOVEL SWIMMING MATCH.

[illegible] against a Dog for £250 and Loses the Race.

[From the [illegible] Sportsman.]

Such a match as that contended at the Welsh Harp, Hendon, on Saturday last, is, we believe, without precedent. Certainly in recent years nothing of the kind has been [illegible], and therefore, [illegible] afforded [illegible] surprise, [illegible], as [illegible] of the [illegible]. That a dog could compete with any chance of success against a moderately good swimmer many were loth to believe, and, although conceded a start [illegible] the [illegible] feeling was with the biped. In fact, it was generally considered a "good thing" for Parker, who, as a professional swimmer, has taken very high honors and is at the present time teaching the art of natation at both the Peckham and Kennington baths. The articles stipulated that Parker should concede to the dog a start of thirty seconds in half a mile, the time to count from the moment the dog entered the water and not from any signal tendered by the starter. Mr. Eade has named his dog "Now Then," and he tells a very interesting story of the manner in which he first discovered the powerful merits of his animal in water. It appears from his account that being some distance off Margate in a boat, accompanied by the dog, he unfortunately lost his two sculls, and how to reach the shore he was at a loss to know for some time, until the bright idea struck him of utilizing the animal. This he did by means of a pocket handkerchief, which he attached to the collar of "Now Then," who was known to retrieve well in water, and, as a means of keeping him in the right direction, his owner cut the stretcher up into numerous pieces and so threw them just ahead of the dog, who, being thus encouraged on his way, successfully towed the boat ashore. "Now Then," a half-breed retriever, is black, and shows remarkable strength in the forearm, while his paws, when spread, are unusually large, and in swimming the whole of his back is visible. A straight half-mile had been marked out with flags denoting the course, and at a few minutes past 6 the dog leaped off the punt. His owner, leaning over the stern of a skiff which preceded the animal, enticed him with cooked liver, and in the half-minute allowed he traveled nearly forty yards, the speed with which he propelled himself being particularly noticeable. Parker slightly reduced the gap in 300 yards, but, keeping a beautifully straight course the dog began now to positively draw away, and, to the chagrin of the swimmer's backers, at the end of about 450 yards the dog was seventy ahead. After this Parker eased, and never again went at top speed to the end of the journey, the dog thus winning very easily in fourteen minutes and three seconds.

A Maine Man's Freak.

For a sensation of the serio-comic order, the town of Saco, Me., is now prepared to furnish an excellent illustration. A young man belonging to the United States navy returned home one day last week, and, before meeting his wife, learned that she was about to go to the Centennial Exhibition with another man. He immediately blackened a spot on his breast with soft coal, pierced a vein till it bled, proceeded to the house with a revolver in his hand, entered the family room with his bleeding breast exposed, discharged a revolver under his arm and fell to the floor as if dead. There was great consternation in the household for a few moments, which was then followed by a storm of indignation at the fright the man had caused.

Heroic Treatment.

A poor factory operative recently had his leg amputated at the Manchester, (Mass.) Infirmary, and during the operation lost so much blood that the attending surgeon gave it as his opinion that nothing but an infusion of blood could save him. Thereupon one of the students volunteered to be bled, and twenty-five ounces of blood were taken from his veins and transfused into the dying man, and at last accounts both were doing well.

Not Genuine.—Dignity, unless genuine, and resting on a firm basis, becomes not only a mockery, but also a farce. It makes him who counterfeits it as hideous as the one who feigns great wealth by decking himself in tinsel and cut-glass, and believing that men will pronounce them gold and diamonds. The world is quick-sighted, and sees character and merits through the flimsy soil of conceit and pretense.

Wild Columbines.

Oh; the south slopes are purple with violets,
The fields are ablaze with gold stars,
And the prodigal Indian tobacco
Has whitened the lane to the bars.
The shad-blossoms mimic a snow-storm,
Well down in the 'kick of the woods;
By the spring-side the great orange cowslips
Have shyly crept out of their hoods.

And the wizard, with five yellow fingers,
Sits down by the strawberry blooms.
Where a blue-winged frail epicurean
Is drowning himself in perfumes.
There are Bethlehem beds in the pasture,
There are buttercups hard by the marsh,
There are wake-robins down in the swamp-grove,
Where the sedge-flag is wiry and harsh;

And crowded and sweet on the ledges
Wild saxifrage nods as you pass,
And maidenly pure droop the wind flowers
That hide in the sheltering grass,
But I spare them. Unplucked from my pathway
I brush back the sweet-breathing fern,
And I pass by the spicy-breathed birch-tree,
Whose tassels trail into the burn.

I am hunting the shyest of beauties,
That flower with a tropical cheek,
Where the crimson shows bright through its brownness,
As the blood of a brunette should speak!
High and shy, in the places untrodden,
It blooms in the shade of the rocks,
And waves its flushed bells to the passer,
Whose looking and longing it mocks!

This moment a yellow throat fluttered
Just over my head from a tree;
And I followed him up through the bushes,
Half-hoping his nest I should see,
And there were the columbines, hiding
In the rocky clefts scattered about,
Ah! my sunny-faced gold-hearted beauties,
My darlings, your secret is out!

Around the Farm.

J. R. FIX left at this office yesterday the largest Concord grapes we have seen in Kansas. He plants the vines ten feet apart each way, cultivates between, and lets them grow like a gooseberry bush. —Alma News.

ITALIAN farmers, in order to prevent harness and articles in leather generally from suffering from the ammoniacal odors of the stable, add a little glycerine to the grease employed to coat the leather. A good idea, but a better one is to allow none of the ammonia to escape.

FOREMOST among requisites for success in market gardening is a good location, the smallest amount of hauling to reach a market, and hence it is better to pay $200 per acre for land two miles from market than to get the same for nothing six miles away. Again, there should be access to more than one market; the business, if large, should be managed by two men, one to attend solely to the garden, the other to selling and collecting, and various outside work. —An Old Hand.

IT is said that there are at the present time 10,000,000 trees growing in Nebraska that have been planted by the citizens. This is truly an immense number of trees, and it would, one would imagine, transform the entire State into a grove. On the contrary, that vast number are almost imperceptible on the immense plain that comprises our State. Treble the number can be set out without materially affecting the landscape for years. Some day Nebraska will be one of the best timbered States in the Union.—Nebraska City News.

IT is doubtful whether, with all the experience farmers have had in reclaiming the numerous swamps of this country, they have yet settled upon the best way, or whether the swamps that have been reclaimed in the careless, unsystematic way pursued, have not cost more than the profits. There is still a great deal of swamp land, marring the appearance of the best farming districts of our country, and yielding but little income, and it seems to us that farmers cannot do better than to discuss thoroughly the best and most economical methods of training, clearing, and working and feeding the different kinds of swamps.—Rural Home.

PRESIDENT SAYLES asked the club if there was any particular benefit in drilling wheat north and south over any other way? Horace Sayles replied that the prevailing winds here were from the west and southwest. If the drill was run north and south the ridges would hold the snow longer and protect the wheat better than if the wind blew with the ridges. C. W. Holmes could agree with Mr. Sayles in the theory, but the best crop he ever saw was drilled east and west. Madison Graves was of the opinion that there was no difference practically, for he had experimented on it but had never got any satisfactory results.—Michigan Farmers' Club.

ONE pound of green copperas, costing seven cents, dissolved in one quart of water, and poured down a water-closet, will effectually concentrate and destroy the foulest smells. On board ships and steamboats, about hotels, and other public places, there is nothing so nice to purify the air. Simple green copperas dissolved in anything will render a hospital or other place for the sick free from unpleasant smells. In fish markets, slaughter houses, sinks, and wherever there are offensive gases, dissolve copperas and sprinkle it about, and in a few days the smell will all pass away. If a cat, rat, or mouse dies about the house, and sends forth an offensive gas, place some dissolved copperas in an open vessel near the place where the nuisance is, and it will purify the atmosphere. Then, keep all clean.

About the House.

ROACHES.—Any house can be rid of roaches by free and continuous use of powdered borax. In crevices where borax cannot be used, pour in boiling water. These two things persevered in will exterminate the pestiferous insect.

PEACH CUSTARD.—Line a plate with rich paste; peel and mash a dozen or more peaches, add sugar to taste, a cup of cream, and the yolks of three eggs, with the whites of two. Bake in a quick oven, and, when done, spread over the top the remaining white of egg, beaten to a foam, with a teaspoonful of sugar. Set in the oven for five minutes, and serve.

RHUBARB WINE.—Grate the stalks of the rhubarb on a coarse horseradish grater. Then strain through a cloth, and to one quart of the juice add three quarts of water and three pounds of coarse brown sugar. Let it stand for a day until the sugar is dissolved. Fill the demijohns full, leaving them uncorked. Keep a bottle of the wine to fill up the demijohns, as they will keep running over. Let them stand for a week or so, and then bottle and cork tightly. It will be fit for use in about three months.

RASPBERRY VINEGAR.—Fill a stone jar with ripe raspberries and cover them with the purest and strongest vinegar and let them stand for a week. Then pour the whole contents through a sieve and crush the berries thoroughly. To each pint of the juice add one and a half pounds of loaf sugar and let the liquor and sugar boil long enough together to dissolve the latter and throw up a little scum, which should be removed at once. Then bottle the liquid and cork tightly. Two tablespoonfuls of this liquor stirred in a tumbler of iced water will make a delicious summer drink.

A CORRESPONDENT of the New York Herald says that the true way to cook green corn is to allow the ears to remain on the stalk until about half an hour before meal time. Then pluck the corn, strip off all the husks except one or two layers close to the grain. If these spread open at the tops of the ears, let them be tied over the ends of the ears with a small string. Let calculations be made to have the corn cooked precisely at the dinner hour. As soon as the grain is cooked thoroughly let it be carried to the table warm, smoking and fragrant. If cooked according to these directions, green corn will taste much more delicious than if the ears had been gathered a day or two previous to the time when they were to be cooked. A great many people do not know by experience what a luxurious dish green corn is, for the reason that they have always been accustomed to eat only such ears as have been gathered so long a time that the sweet and delicious grain has lost all its luscious aroma.

Winnie and Walter.

"Warm weather, Walter! Welcome warm weather! We were wishing winter would wane, weren't we?"

"We were well wearied with waiting," whispered Walter, wearily. Wan, white, woe-begone was Walter; wayward, willful, worn with weakness, wasted, waxing weaker whenever winter's wild, withering winds were wailing. Wholly without waywardness was Winifred, Walter's wise, womanly watcher, who, with winsome, wooing ways, was well beloved.

"We won't wait, Walter; while weather's warm we'll wander where woodlands wave, won't we?"

Walter's wonted wretchedness wholly waned. "Why, Winnie, we'll walk where we went when we were with Willie; we'll weave wild flower wreaths, watch woodmen working, woodlice, worms wriggling, windmill whirling, watermills wheeling; we will win wild whortleberries, witness wheat winnowed."

Wisbeach Woods were white with wildflowers; warm, westerly winds whispered where willows were waving, wood-pigeons, wrens, wood-peckers were warbling wild wood-notes. Where Wisbeach water-mill's waters, which were wholly waveless, widened, where water-lilies waxen white, Winifred wove wreaths with woodbine, white-thorn, wall-flowers, while Walter whittled wooden wedges with willow wands. Wholly without warning, wild wet winds woke within Wisbeach woods, whistling where Winifred wandered with Walter; weeping willows were wailing weirdly, waging war with wind-tossed waters. Winifred's wary watchfulness waked. "Walter, we won't wait."

"Which way, Winnie?"

Winifred wavered. "Why, where were we wandering? Wisbeach Woods widen whichever way we walk. Where's Wisbeach white wicket? Where Winston's water-mill?"

Wistfully Walter witnessed Winifred's wonder. "Winnie, Winnie, we were wrong, wholly wrong, wandering within wild ways. Wayfaring weather-beaten waifs, we're well-nigh worn out."

Winifred waited where, within wottled woodward walls, wagons, wheelbarrows, wains were waiting, weighty with withered wood. Walter warmly wrapped with Winifred's well-worn wadded water-proof, was wailing wofully, wholly wearied. Winifred, who, worn with watching, wellnigh weeping, was wistfully, wakefully waiting Willie's well-known whistle, wholly wished Walter's well-being warranted. With well-timed wisdom, Walter was wound with wide, white worsted wrappers, which wonderfully well withstood winter's withering, whistling winds. Wholly without warm wrappers was Winifred, who, with womanly wisdom, was watching Walter's welfare, warding Walter's weakness.

"When will Willie wend where we wait?" wearily wondered Walter.

"Whist! Walter," whispered Winnie, "who was whooping?"

"Whereabouts?"

Welcome whistling was waking Wisbeach woods when winter's windy warfare waxed weaker.

"Winnie! Walter!" Winifred's wakefulness was well-grounded.

"We're well, Willie; we're where Winston's wagons wait."

Without waiting, Willie was within Winston's woodwork walls.

"Welcome! welcome! Willie." Winnie was weeping with weariness, with watching Walter, with wayfaring.

"Why, Winnie! wise, watchful, warm-hearted Winnie," Willie whispered, wheedingly; "we won't weep; Walter's well; what were Walter without Winnie?"

Wholly wonderful was Winifred's well-timed, womanly wisdom, which well warranted weakly Willie's welfare. Whenever wandering within Wisbeach woods with Winnie, Walter would whisper, "What were Walter without Winnie? wise, watchful, warm-hearted Winnie!"

What the Republican Party Has Done.

A Plain, Unvarnished Statement of Facts.

What the Records Prove—Reflect Before You Vote.

TWICE THE NATIONAL DEBT SPENT IN SIX YEARS.

The records prove that the public expenditures during the six years of President Grant's administration, ending June 30, 1875, have been $4,000,000,000.

FIVE MILLION DOLLARS DEFALCATIONS.

The records prove that the defalcations by Republican office-holders during the last six years of Republican administration amounted on June 19, 1876, to $5,500,536.

A HUNDRED MILLIONS FOR THE WHISKY RINGS.

The records prove that the robberies of the whisky rings, for attempting to break up which Bristow was driven from the Cabinet, amounted to fully $100,000,000.

THE REPUBLICAN RINGS INDORSE THEMSELVES.

The records prove that the number of corrupt rings and combinations surrounding the Republican administration far exceeds anything previously known in the history of this country, and that notwithstanding this every Republican convention, State and national, in the past eight years, has fully indorsed that administration.

THE NUMBER OF OFFICE-HOLDERS NEARLY DOUBLED.

The records prove that the number of office-holders has been increased during President Grant's administration from 54,267 to 94,119, or at the rate of more than 5,000 a year; the during almost the whole of this period the country has been suffering from great commercial depression, and nearly every home has felt the pressure of hard times.

NOT ONE REFORM PLEDGE FULFILLED.

The records prove that the Republican party has pledged itself to civil-service reform in every National and State Convention since 1868; that President Grant has asked Congress to aid him in bringing it about, in almost every message he has ever written; and, that not the first step has ever been taken toward the fulfillment of that pledge, except the unimportant one of the appointment of a Board of Commissioners, which aroused so much opposition among Republicans that it was abandoned; that Gov. Hayes has again promised civil-service reform just as President Grant promised it eight years ago.

NOT ONE SPECIE-PAYMENT PLEDGE FULFILLED.

The records prove that the Republican party has pledged itself to bring about specie payment in every National and almost every State Convention since 1868; that President Grant has asked Congress to aid him in bringing it about in every annual message since that time; and that not the first step has ever been taken toward the fulfillment of that pledge save by the passage of a so-called Resumption act, which was originally framed as an inflation measure, but which worked somewhat differently; that the Republican National Convention did not dare to commend this act, and the Democratic House found itself compelled to vote to repeal it; that Gov. Hayes has promised specie payments now just as President Grant promised it eight years ago.

NEARLY TWO HUNDRED MILLIONS STOLEN BY CARPET-BAGGERS.

The records prove that President Grant's reconstruction policy has resulted in the increase of the debts of Southern States, which were almost nothing at the close of the war, to an aggregate of $194,000,000, and in the almost complete confiscation of property by local taxation; that the lists of estates and farms to be sold for taxes fill column after column and page after page of the Southern newspapers; that this condition of things affects the blacks equally with the whites, and is the direct result of the enormous thefts of Republican officials.

A DISASTROUS INDIAN POLICY.

The records prove that the Indian policy of President Grant has resulted in little else than thieving and bloodshed, and has finally culminated in a bloody and costly war brought on by the violation by this Government of a solemn treaty with the Indians.

A BRIBE TAKEN IN THE CABINET.

The records prove that a Republican Secretary of War has been, for almost the entire period of President Grant's administration, engaged in blackmailing his appointees; that from one post-trader this Secretary derived in this way $20,000, and his accomplice $20,000 more; that he surrounded the approaches to his department with brokers who sold appointments for him, and, in some cases, charged as much as $1,000 for a mere personal introduction to the Secretary; that many of these things were exposed in evidence given four years ago by Gen. W. B. Hazen, a distinguished army officer; that the evidence was brought to the attention of the President, who made no investigation of the charges, and continued the Secretary in his position for four years longer; that when the final disclosure was made, his resignation was accepted immediately by the President "with great regret;" that this acceptance enabled him to escape conviction on his trial by the Senate, on the ground that it had no jurisdiction; that of the twenty-six Senators who voted to acquit him, all but one were Republicans; that within a few days after this disclosure, President Grant's administration was commended by the Republican State Convention of Ohio, which presented the name of Gov. Hayes as a candidate for the Presidency, in terms of higher praise than it found for its own candidate; that the National Convention at Cincinnati cordially indorsed the President and his administration; that Gov. Hayes, in his letter of acceptance, announced his full and hearty concurrence in the platform adopted; that no Republican State convention or national convention, nor has Gov. Hayes, ever expressed the slightest disapprobation of the crimes of the administration.

A CABINET OFFICER AWAITING IMPEACHMENT.

The records prove that the Secretary of the Navy has, for years, violated very many of the laws governing his action without rebuke or remonstrance from President Grant; that for years his former business partners, the Cattells, levied blackmail upon those seeking to obtain contracts with the department, and that during the same period his bank account with the same Cattells shows much larger transactions than could have been found on his salary; that he has had his private furniture manufactured in the workshops of the Government; that he put in peril an enormous sum of Government money in the attempt to prevent the ruin of a bankrupt banking-house, and that $800,000 of this amount has never been recovered; that his department was found to be honeycombed with fraud, and run as a political bureau; that the navy-yards were crowded with men just before the election, who were all discharged immediately afterward; that the House of Representatives authorized the Judiciary Committee to consider the propriety of his impeachment, and it will doubtless report in favor of such a step at the opening of the next session; that the Republicans reported and voted for a resolution whitewashing Secretary Robeson, although there were few Republican journals which dared to defend him; that the single Republican member, Mr. Burleigh, of Maine, who had the courage to sign the majority report against Secretary Robeson, was defeated for renomination, suffering the same fate as Bristow at Cincinnati and Evarts in New York; that Mr. Burleigh's defeat was everywhere known to be due to his fearlessness in exposing Republican rascality.

WHERE THE CAMPAIGN FOR HAYES IS RUN.

The records prove that under a Republican Secretary of the Interior frauds equally upon the tax-payer and the Indian have been committed with impunity, amounting annually to hundreds of thousands of dollars; that the perpetrators went unpunished, and the chief perpetrator, Columbus Delano, retired after years of service with a handsome testimonial from President Grant; that under this same Secretary of the Interior pension frauds were committed amounting to $400,000, which were exposed by a Democratic House, but the perpetrators of which are still unpunished by the Republican administration; that Columbus Delano's appropriate successor, Zachariah Chandler, has been placed at the head of the National Republican Committee, and is managing the campaign for Gov. Hayes, presenting a spectacle of the neglect of official decency in high places never before witnessed in this country.

A DEPARTMENT OF INJUSTICE.

The records prove that Attorney General Williams, while at the head of the Department of Justice, supported his private carriage and horses out of the contingent fund of the department, following in this the example of almost all the Republican officials; that, with one other of President Grant's Attorney Generals, Mr. Akerman, he diverted $34,000 of the funds of the department to election purposes in New York—a proceeding for which the President and these two Cabinet officers have been censured by a committee of the House; that, with the connivance of another Attorney General, Edwards Pierrepont, a letter was written to District Attorneys during the trial of Gen. Babcock for conspiracy, to prevent conclusive testimony being given against him by an accomplice; that this is shown by the testimony of Bluford Wilson, late Republican Solicitor of the Treasury; that the letter, which Mr. Pierrepont said was not to be made public, was given to Babcock's counsel and made public by him; that President Grant took pains to ascertain the evidence against Babcock from Mr. Bristow and Mr. Wilson, who could not refuse to give it to him, and communicated it to Babcock; and that largely by means of this prostitution of justice Babcock escaped conviction.

A DISGRACEFUL DIPLOMATIC SERVICE.

The records prove that under the Republican administration, now nearly closed, the diplomatic service of the United States has been disgraced by almost universal corruption and incompetency; that almost the first act of our first Minister abroad, Gen. Schenck, was to print a treatise on poker-playing; that he afterward, from corrupt considerations, violated all diplomatic decency by giving the great weight of his name and position to a swindling mining scheme; that the corruptness of the transaction was shown by the fact that he paid nothing for his stock, and by other overwhelming evidence; that in the investigation which was made by the Democratic House, Gen. Schenck's testimony was shown to be false in almost every instance by abundant evidence; that the House of Representatives by unanimous vote censured him, after he had left England under cover of his official position to avoid arrest; that the Republican Minister to Austria, ex-Gov. Orth, was corruptly connected with the Venezuelan claims, while in Congress, and being nominated for Governor, in spite of his record, was finally compelled to withdraw, because his defeat was inevitable; that the President's brother-in-law, Mr. Kramer, Minister at the Danish Court, is still retained in his place, notwithstanding the fact that he has frequently disgraced it by drunkenness and public appearances in disreputable company; that Gen. Daniel E. Sickles, who has been on his trial for homicide, was sent as Minister to the Court of Spain; that Silas H. Hudson, a relative of the President, sent to Guatemala, disgraced himself there by conduct unbecoming a representative of the United States; that none of the acts of these men or of the administration, of which they formed a part, were ever condemned by the Republican party, except in the instance when public sentiment forced it to join in the verdict passed upon Gen. Schenck; that, on the contrary, the administration has been profusely commended by all the conventions of the Republican party, State and national, especially by those which nominated Gov. Hayes.

REPUBLICAN REFORMERS RUN OUT OF OFFICE.

The records prove that Mr. Bristow and Mr. Wilson, who were engaged in the work of pursuing thieves, and did not hesitate to enter the doors of the White House when the trail led there, were forced out of office by the President; that Wilson's letter of resignation never received any notice at the hand of the President, while Delano, Belknap, Shepherd and Murphy, the other noted corruptionists and personal friends of the President, were retired from office with extravagant eulogies.

ANOTHER CABINET REFORMER TURNED OUT.

The records prove that under President Grant's favorite Postmaster General, J. A. J. Creswell, the system of "straw bids" grew up, which remains still unreformed; that Mr. Creswell, when he retired from office, was highly eulogized by President Grant; that his successor, who attempted to introduce reforms into the administration of the Department, was removed, and a political subordinate of Senator Morton was appointed in his place.

THE REPUBLICAN TREATMENT OF WOMEN.

The records prove that President Grant's Commissioner of Pensions, Gen. J. H. Baker, combined with a pension agent named Blakely in an attempt to blackmail Miss Ada Sweet; that Miss Sweet had obtained her appointment as successor to Blakely through him, in consideration of a promise to pay him a large share of her salary; that Blakely, being a defaulter to the amount of $3,000, attempted to compel her to assume the responsibility for that amount; that in this he was seconded by Baker, then Commissioner of Pensions; that the individual to whom the moneys were paid throughout was B. H. Campbell, United States Marshal and Gen. Babcock's father-in-law; that after the Cincinnati Convention promised "respectful consideration" to the claims of women, a high Government officer proposed that the reduction of force in the departments, compelled by the Democratic reduction in the appropriations, should be made by the discharge of women, all of them poor, so as to keep the Republican voters on comfortable salaries; and that this policy is now being carried out as far as possible.

HOW REPUBLICAN DELINQUENTS ARE PUNISHED.

The records prove that the public printer was found by a committee of the House to have been charging exorbitant prices for his work, reporting incorrectly the cost of printing the Congressional Record, and drawing money on false vouchers; that when that office was abolished, and one similar to it created, the President appointed the same delinquent official to the new office, and the Senate confirmed him, notwithstanding these disclosures.

THE SAFE-BURGLARY CONSPIRACY.

The records prove that a conspiracy was formed, to which the President's Private Secretary was a party, and of which the Chief of the Secret Service was the principal instrument, to commit a burglary in the office of the District Attorney of the District of Columbia, and implicate in it Columbus Alexander, an old and wealthy citizen, who was outspoken in denouncing, and fearless in pursuing the ring; that the plot was frustrated only in its final stage; that Gen. Babcock is now under indictment for this offense.

REPUBLICAN RING MAKERS—NOT RING BREAKERS.

The records prove that the ring which robbed the District of Columbia as boldly as the Tweed ring robbed the city of New York, was kept in countenance by the favor of President Grant, and was officially recognized by his renomination of Boss Shepherd to be a member of the District Government, after his robberies had been exposed; that public sentiment was so outraged that the Senate, servile as it had been and is, rejected the nomination; that Shepherd still remains one of President Grant's most conspicuous friends and trusted advisers.

THE BLACK FRIDAY CONSPIRACY.

The records prove that the participants in the infamous Black Friday conspiracy of 1869 were Gen. Babcock, Gen. Porter, Jay Gould, James Fisk, Jr., A. R. Corbin, the President's brother-in-law, and Gen. Butterfield, Assistant Treasurer in New York; that, whether President Grant was personally interested in the matter or not, his order to stop the Government sales of gold was the first thing desired by the conspirators, and that they ran the price up from 136 to 163; that the President finally ordered the sales to be resumed, whether through alarm or because he found that he had been duped, cannot be definitely ascertained; that the result was a terrible panic, spreading ruin on every side. The fact of Gen. Babcock's complicity in this conspiracy was brought to President Grant's attention some months since by written documents and proofs, but this did not prevent the President's retaining him as his Secretary and sending him with messages to the Senate of the United States.

THE GRANT FAMILY LOOKED AFTER.

The records prove that President Grant has violated all the precedents of his office by pensioning very many of his relatives upon the Government.

THE PRESIDENTIAL PRESENT-TAKER.

The records prove that President Grant, in contravention of all precedents of his office, has been in the habit of receiving valuable presents throughout his entire administration, and has frequently appointed persons making the largest gifts and the largest [illegible] to his campaign funds, to [illegible]

ARMED INTIMIDATION.

The records prove that the President has repeatedly interfered in the government of States in the South, without warrant of law, using the army to intimidate Legislatures or influence elections; that, in the case of the infamous Louisiana outrage, the entire Republican Cabinet, and the whole Republican party concurred with him.

THE SANTO DOMINGO CONSPIRACY.

The records prove that the conspiracy of Babcock and other members of the White House ring, to have the island of Santo Domingo purchased by the United States, in order to enhance the value of concessions held by them, was abetted, whether knowingly or not, by the President, and that the cost to the country of this scheme was $2,000,000; and that, for Mr. Sumner's opposition to this scheme in the Senate, he was deposed, at the express desire of the President, from the place he had filled with honor for many years at the head of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

GRANT HELPING HIS BROTHER'S OPERATIONS.

The records prove that Gen. Grant, while General of the army, gave a relative an appointment on learning from him by letter that he was to be paid for it; that Gen. Grant, while President, has kept his brother, Orville Grant, fully informed of vacancies likely to occur in post-traderships and Indian agencies, and that, by this means, Orville Grant was enabled to blackmail many applicants into giving him a share in the profits of their places, in return for his influence; that in this way Orville Grant obtained and still holds large interests in post-traderships and Indian agencies, into which he put no capital; that all these facts were admitted by Orville Grant in his testimony before the House Committee.

OFFICIAL KIDNAPPING.

The records prove that during the investigation by the House of the Santo Domingo job, officers of the secret service formed a conspiracy to kidnap a witness, Raymond H. Perry, upon a fabricated charge; and they did not make the attempt, which happily failed in the end, without orders from high authority.

THE PARTY RUINS 70,000 NEGROES.

The records prove that the Republican party, which claimed to be the especial guardian of the negroes of the South, deluded them into intrusting their savings to the Freedman's Savings Bank, and then robbed them of every cent. By this cruel theft 70,000 negro depositors were robbed of $3,000,000.

A GREAT REPUBLICAN JOB FRUSTRATED.

The records prove that the attempt of the Republican Senate to revive the franking privilege was frustrated by the Democratic House.

WHAT THE DEMOCRATS HAVE DONE IN ONE YEAR.

The records prove that the heads of the Republican departments estimated their expenses for the current year at $173,590,822, being an increase on the appropriations of last year of $25,425,698, made undoubtedly with a view to the purposes of the campaign; that the Democratic House estimated that the Government could be honestly and economically administered for $109,244,140; that, yielding some points demanded by the Republican Senate, the appropriations were finally fixed at $120,611,871; that the saving effected by the House on the expenditure of the previous year, was $29,944,252, and on the sum demanded for this year was $55,380,650.

DEMOCRATIC REFORM IN NEW YORK.

The records prove that the State taxes in New York under a Republican administration in 1874, the year before Gov. Tilden's inauguration, were $15,727,482; that in 1876 they are $8,268,196, the reduction being very largely due to Gov. Tilden's economies growing out of his reforms.

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

Letter from the Massachusetts Statesman—A Brief but Powerful Arraignment of the Party in Power.

QUINCY, Sept. 25, 1877.

Daniel Magone, Jr., Chairman N. Y. State Democratic Committee.

DEAR SIR: Absence from home has prevented me from answering promptly your letter of the 20th inst. If I were younger, it would be an agreeable duty to perform the task to which you invite me. But I have not done anything of the kind for fifteen years, and am now in my 70th year. Should I accept one invitation, I should probably give rise to others which would have an equal claim. My judgment is, that I had better stay at home. Yet I think I fully appreciate the importance of this canvass. It is narrowing itself daily more and more into a struggle between the people and the managers who hold the official organization of the country for their own exclusive benefit. From the days of the Credit Mobilier, down to the last exposures made by the investigations of the last Congress, there is only one conclusion to be drawn, and that is the prevalence of corruption almost everywhere in the Republican organization. The honest men do indeed make brave and sincere efforts to resist this baleful influence, but they are too often defeated to raise any just hopes of ultimate success. This struggle has been going on for years, and no material change for the better has yet been effected.

The time has now come for a radical change, and the substitution of a wholly new influence, tied up by no restrictions other than the genuine wishes of honest men of all parties. When in a great popular convention of a party to nominate a candidate for the Presidency, one gentleman deeply compromised by the investigations of a committee of the House of Representatives comes within twenty-five votes of a nomination, and another, who really did honor to himself by fearless and effective exposures of corruption in high places, could not command many more than 100 votes, it seems to me that it is high time for a change in public opinion. Neither is the case improved by a view of the manner in which the canvass has been carried on. The great effort of the Republicans seems to be to operate on the popular passions excited during the late civil war. Instead of repeating the honorable call of President Grant, "Let us have peace," the cry is for raising what may prove another war. And why is this? Only because the people of the Southern States choose to vote as they please [cheers], without regard to the corrupt combinations of office-holders all over the country, wielded by equally corrupt combinations of legislators at the seat of Government, to perpetuate their own power. Verily, verily, if the people are wise they will lay down party and seize the present opportunity to make a change. I am very truly yours,

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

Beaconsfield.

Curious persons generally wish to know what the late Mr. Disraeli's title, Earl of Beaconsfield, means. Beaconsfield was the former home of the English poet Waller and of the Irish statesman Edmund Burke. It was once a splendid place, but the house in which the poet and the statesman lived is destroyed; yet it is not unattractive as a country seat, and bears a noted name to this day. The aristocratic snobs, bent on ruining their language, call the place "Beckonsfield," as they say Darby instead of Derby.

COLE YOUNGER, one of the captured bandits in Minnesota, writes from prison to an inquiring correspondent as follows: "Dear Sir—I am proud to say to you we were raised by Religious Parents, and attended Sunday school regular in our Boyhood, and I had charge of a bible class while in Texas, at Seyene, Dallas County. I have always respected christianity. I have known the right and endorse it. I condemn the rong, but yet the rong pursued." This same canting cut-throat said to a visitor, "I love flowers because those I love do."

THERE has been an interesting inquiry in Paris lately as to which trees stand town life best, and it is decided that beyond all question no tree is so good for urban wants as the plane. The same verdict is returned in London. Smoke does not seem to affect them, and few finer specimens of this graceful and umbrageous tree can be seen than those in Berkeley square in that city.

GOV. TILDEN'S WAR RECORD.

A Complete Refutation of the Charge of Disloyalty.

The Testimony of One of President Lincoln's Assistant Secretaries of War—Giving His Influence and Means to the Cause.

[From a Speech by the Hon. Peter H. Watson, Delivered in Ashtabula, Ohio, Sept. 22.]

FELLOW-CITIZENS OF ASHTABULA: I appear before you in compliance with the request of several of your number, to tell what I know personally having a bearing upon the infamous charges made against the character of Samuel J. Tilden:

I have known Mr. Tilden for more than twenty years, and up to two years ago, when when he became a candidate for election to the office of Governor of New York, he was generally recognized, without distinction of party, as one of the most estimable citizens, as one of the ablest and most trusted lawyers, and as a scholar of exceptionally thorough and broad culture in political science and administration.

When the war broke out, as many of you know, I was residing in Washington city, where, for fifteen years, I had been diligently practising my profession, unconnected with political parties or office, but not altogether an unobservant or an uninterested spectator of public events, and it so happened that I was among the first to realize that rebellion was organizing and would surely break out; and it fell to my lot, in an humble way, to co-operate with men of ability and eminence to ascertain what probably would be the master moves first attempted by the rebels, and then to organize the most effectual means available for defeating them.

Mr. Stanton went into office as Secretary of War in January, 1862, and his appointment was received with the greatest favor by the Democratic as well as the Republican press, as the evidence of a cordial union of all parties in the great work of sustaining the National Government, and because he was then generally believed to possess those high qualities which afterward made him such a gigantic figure in the history of the times. Before and after this period Mr. Tilden was called to Washington to counsel with both the President and Secretary of War; and to the latter, at that time, he was especially welcome, because, although he had opposed the war as long as it seemed possible to avert it, and until it had actually gone beyond call, in which he was in full sympathy with the President and many other distinguished Republicans; yet, now that there was no escape from it, he urged earnestly its more vigorous prosecution, as the most effective means of bringing it to a speedy end, and of restricting its unavoidable woes and enormous expenditures to the narrowest practicable compass.

When, in 1862, the Government concluded that a prudent precaution against possible war with England required that the iron manufacturers of our country should be able to supply us with gun-barrel iron, it asked them to essay its production experimentally, and to supply, as it was wanted, 6,000 tons, at a price that could not yield much profit. This onerous but patriotic duty was undertaken by the establishment in which Mr. Tilden was then a director and a large stockholder, and to accomplish it they stopped other highly remunerative work, thereby sacrificing hundreds of thousands of dollars, the price, as it turned out, being too low to cover the cost of production. But neither he nor any of his associates have ever set up or even intimated a desire to make any claim for indemnity, as I learned in Washington last winter. Neither has he or they asked the Government to receive the balance of iron undelivered under the contract, although not more than two-thirds of it had been called for when the war closed, at which time, owing of the sudden fall of prices, the profits on the residue would have been very large; but the Government no longer needed the iron, and its credit was stretched to the utmost to provide for war debts. Mr. Tilden and his friends, therefore, forbore to make any claim to the large amount they might justly have asked in this matter.

On a previous occasion, when a great emergency arose, the Government called upon the same gentlemen for aid; it asked them to construct a large number of ponderous wrought-iron machines, each weighing many tons, and known in military engineering as mortar beds, and to accomplish the object in less than one-quarter of the time which the Ordnance Department and engineers of eminence had declared indispensable.

Reposing confidence in the patriotism of these gentlemen, it was explained to them that a large number of these huge, unwieldy structures had suddenly been called for by Gen. Grant, and not one was to be found in our arsenals; that they were necessary to complete the armament of gunboats required for the most important military campaign to be made in the West that winter (1862), the advance up the Tennessee and the Cumberland rivers to capture Forts Henry and Donelson and to destroy the Confederate army there gathering, and that a failure to supply these beds promptly would greatly embarrass the expedition, and might defeat it altogether, by delaying until the waters of these rivers fell too low for navigation by gunboats.

Nobly did these gentlemen respond to the confidence reposed in them by their Government. Money to carry on this work could not then be advanced, for the treasury had none to spare. It was then far in arrears for soldiers' pay, and the expense of enlisting and organizing troops. But these gentlemen did not hesitate. They opened their own purses, and, as if by magic, summoned into instant activity a multitude of skilled workmen in different shops and towns, situated in three different States, no single establishment or city being able to support the number of artisans and tools, and the different kinds of material with the promptness and celerity necessary to meet the emergency. It will gratify you to learn that this, under the circumstances, almost impossible task was accomplished considerably within the time limited, and so enabled Gen. Grant to complete the armament of the expedition before the day appointed. This wonderful performance was only achieved through the matchless executive skill of Abram S. Hewitt, who organized and directed the work, and who was one of Mr. Tilden's associates in the Trenton Iron Company, and, like Mr. Tilden, has in many ways and at different times, rendered great and loving service to his country, but never paraded his well-doing, or sought to make of it political or other merchandise.

The account made out against the Government for performing this great feat of mechanical construction embraced no charge for profit, interest, agency, personal service, use of shops, tools, or anything else, but the actual money disbursed for materials and labor.

After the account was approved and a voucher issued they had to wait many months before the treasury could pay them. Greenbacks, meanwhile, were depreciating every day, so that the money in which they were repaid was worth much less than the money they disbursed. This depreciation, together with interest, use of tools and shops, and the value of personal services rendered, would make a very large loss, or patriotic offering, whichever you choose to call it, in this single matter, for which they asked no indemnity, then or since, and never complained that the Government could not use them better.

Such patriotic liberality, on the part of Mr. Tilden and his associates of the Trenton Iron Company, you may safely believe was emulated by none of the men who now are so loud in his detraction. It would, I think, be difficult to find one of them who, in the essential attributes of good citizenship, is worthy to unloose the latchet of his shoe.

If it were necessary I could go on multiplying instances and evidence in support of my averment to you, that on my personal knowledge the charge of disloyalty against Mr. Tilden is untrue; and I have no doubt that all the other charges made against him are equally untrue, for they are inconsistent with the high character which he has borne through a long and very active business life, and with the cordial fellowship and esteem of so many good men, who would scorn instead of respecting him if he were the calculating villain which his political enemies paint.

April 29, 1875.

Wise and great statesmenship recommends reconciliation and harmony between the sections, but Hayes says: "We must have the bloody shirt and revive the bitter prejudices of the war." And that is statesmanship of the Republican party!

* * *

It is rumored that, since the October elections have resulted so unfavorably for the Republicans in the very section where Hayes' boasted strength alone lay, there will be an effort made to crowd him off the ticket and put Grant in his place. But we hardly credit the report.

* * *

It is useless for Republicans to fix upon Grant the sole responsibility of that revolutionary proclamation. It is the proclamation of the Republican party. It is the proclamation of Hayes It is to keep the one in power by electing the other. Has Hayes lifted up his voice against the infamy? Has any Republican leader objected?

* * *

The Charleston News and Courier publishes a list of thirty-eight names, with particulars, of Democrats, white and colored, who have been intimidated and out raged by the Radical negroes of South Carolina. Gov. Chamberlain has not specified a case. He is a man of unbounded imagination. He is himself guilty of intimidating voters by removing some of them from office for refusal to vote the Republican ticket.

* * *

Reports of negro outrages in South Carolina continue to reach us. Six white men returning from a Democratic meeting at Edgefield, a short time ago, were fired upon by negroes in ambush. One was killed and another severely wounded. At the instance of United States officers a Coroner was sent for, and he was also ambushed and shot. It is for this sort of work, we presume, that the army is being sent to South Carolina.

* * *

The Cincinnati Commercial does not enthuse worth a cent over the election in Ohio. Hayes, the American Alliance candidate for President, the man whose oaths about his property requires several more to set them right, and who refuses to give up the Leroy money, added nothing to the strength of the ticket. On the contrary, he probably weakened it, at any rate, the Commercial is gloomy in regard to the future, and says: "Republicans must improve in their methods of managing their strength, or with the solid South bearing down upon them, and the Democratic party disciplined and always alert, striking them flank and rear, they can not hold the country, but will be driven from power speedily, if not at once."

* * *

The Chicago Times says: "A very important rumor is that which has been circulating in Cincinnati, and which represents that Hayes has been unanimously requested by the executive committee to resign, in order to further his "chances for the Presidency." If such advice has been given, it must have been by some malicious enemy of the governor, willing to see him left utterly out in the cold at the close of the campaign. Everybody knows, of course that since the Indiana election Hayes has had no "chance for the Presidency" and of course his chances of a retired private life are the only chances that can be improved by moving him out of the governorship.

Hold The Fort.

The beautiful song entited "Hold the Fort for we are Coming," originated as follows:

Gen. Corse was holding the Fort at Allatoona, Sherman signalled him at a most trying period to hold the Fort for we are coming. Corse at that time sent the following dispatch:

"ALLATOONA, GA., Oct. 6, '64—2 P M
"Capt. L. M. DAYTON, Aide-de-Camp:
"I am short a cheek-bone and an ear, but am able to whip all h—ll yet! My losses are heavy. A force moving from Stilesboro to Kingston gives me some anxiety. Tell me where Sherman is.
"JOHN CORSE, Brigadier-General.

Twelve years later, on the anniversary of the day he wrote the dispatch, Gen. Corse was one of the leaders at the Democratic Soldiers' Reunion at Indianapolis. How must he and his brave comrads feel to hear themselves denounced as rebels and bummers by the Republican press, simply because they vote the Democratic ticket.

* * *

One of Governor Tilden's defamers has taken leg-bail and fled his section of the country. A dispatch from Detroit, Michigan, to the Albany Argus tells the story. The Rev. E. Flowers, author of the atrocious statement that Tilden cursed him and the Union soldiers, has left Detroit permanently, without paying his debts even to his grocery bill. Flowers is entirely discredited by his brother Episcopal clergy man in Detroit, and the Chairman of the Michigan Democratic State Committee says that a prominent minister had written to him to the effect that Flowers had made a radically different statement from the one published. The Republican organs and speakers continue to publish this slander to the country, but not one person out of a thousand believes a word of the story is true.

Republican Prestige Broken.

From the Albany Argus, Oct. 11.

The Democratic party has struggled against terrible odds in Ohio and Indiana. It has had to confront unlimited resources of man and money. It has had to meet an unprincipled organization, ready to sacrifice every great public interest to carry its own selfish ends. The spectacle of a great party selling its honor, and entering into an unholy alliance in defense of its own professions, is degrading and disgusting, and will secure the contempt of the people of the entire Republic.

For the first time since the organization of the Republican party, the Democracy pass the critical period of the October elections without the influence of a depressing popular current against them.

The prestige of the Republican party is at last broken. At last it must face the people throughout the entire length and bredth of the land. At last it must give an account or its stewardship at the general election in November.

No longer can it enter into the November election with the impetus of an avalanche, sweeping everything before it. It must now face the sober judgment of the country. It must abandon its appeals to passion and prejudice. It must abandon its hopes of winning by personal calumny and scurrilous vituperation.

The questions are simple and easily comprehended by every voter.

1. Will this country prosper so long as sectional bitterness is permitted to load the South with heavy and oppressive burdens? Shall the relentless persecution of the South continue? Or shall fraternity and good will between the sections prevail? The Republican party stirs up the rancor of old-time hatred; the Democratic party seeks to heal the wounds of the war, and to reconcile race with race and section with section. A United North grasps the profered hand of a United South. Shall it be?

2. Shall the general administration of the country be conducted upon the principles of the fathers, or shall the Republic be managed by those who have already brought it to the verge of ruin?

3. Shall Reform and Retrenchment be enforced; or shall the destinies of the nation be left in hands utterly unable to comprehend its needs?

The result of yesterday's contests in demonstrating the great impression made by the Democracy in the critical States, gives bright promise of final success in November. The conservative, liberal, loyal, cultured States of the Republic will vote solid for Tilden and Hendricks, Reconciliation and Reform.

Victory is assured!

Gov. Williams Speaks.

It was said in the campaign against "Blue Jeans" Williams, that if he should be elected Governor, and was called upon for a speech, couldn't astonish the representatives of other states by one of those polished, and eloquent responses, which would undoubtedly flow from the lips of Ben Harrison. We give below the speech of Gov. Williams made last week at the ratification meeting at Indianapolis, and for the life of us we cannot see why it is not just as good a speech as any one ought to make on such an occasion. It is brief, earnest and clothed in good common English, the last by no means the least, in these days of hifalutin oratory.

My fellow citizens: I neither sought, desired or expected the nomination for the office to which I have been elected. It was the free will offering of a great party, which I appreciate in the highest degree. The people have approved and endorsed that nomination by my election. I feel thankful to them for it, and will labor to make them the only return in my power, the only return which they will accept, a faithful discharge of the duties of the office. I have had long and important connection with the legislative department of the state, and it is gratifying to me to know that in the fierce political contest through which I have passed and in which scarcely anything has escaped examination, no fault has been found with, not even a criticism of my legislative record After the close of the legislative services it is very gratifying to me to receive from the hands of the people the highest executive position of the state. While I express the highest appreciation of the honor which has been done me, I would not utter one word or sentiment in the spirit of exultation. My full understanding of the responsibilities I am to assume, as well as the proprieties of this occasion, make it improper for me to indulge in such a spirit During the contest, I have been the object of political and personal criticism, and I regret to add that the gentleman whom I had the honor to defeat has felt it proper to speak of me in terms of disrespect, yet I wish to assure you my fellow citizens, that I come out of this struggle with kind feelings towards all, and that no sentiment of personal or partisan bitterness will embarrass me in the discharge of the duties of that high office as the representative of the whole people. It is probable that the term to which I have been elected will close my public career, and is due to the people as well as myself. I will endeavor to make that term both useful to them and to the state, and creditable to myself. The [illegible] the purity of the public service, and economy in public expenditures, and at the same time that liberality of policy which should characterize so great a state as Indiana will guide my conduct. My fellow citizens, I congratulate you upon the result in Indiana in respect to its influence upon the national contest now pending. By both parties and by the people of other states, it has been felt that the result in Indiana would have great influence in every section of the country upon the presidential election. And as the national result involves as I believe, considerations of purity of government, economy in expenditures and the fraturnal relations between great sections, I am greatly rejoiced that the state which has been my home from my youth up, has thrown her great influence upon the side which I believe will promote the honor of our country, and the prosperity and the happiness of the people.

In concluision, I have only to add that great as have been the achievements already reached, the contest is not ended or the great battle wholly won. Inspired anew by this victory, let us go forward in the earnest and honest purpose to make this triumph of the people complete in November.

* * *

The fact that the Democracy has carried the State by over five thousand majority, and elected but four members of Congress out of thirteen, speaks in thunder tones against the iniquitious apportional law of this State. All fair men will admit that the party which has a majority of the popular vote ought to have a majority of members of Congress and a majority of the Legislature; but in Indiana, with a large majority of the people with it, the Democracy is in a minority in its Congressional delegation, and in the Legislature. By such means as these aportionment laws the Republican party has kept itself in power in many state of the Union. For several years the state of Connecticut had a Democratic Governor and a Radical Legislature, and this is now the case in this state. The people will revolt as such manifest unfairness and place their condemnation upon it. The election of Williams is the beginning of the end of Radical domination in Indiana.

STOVES.

We are authorized to say that D. D. Snyder, has just received a fine lot of parlor heating stoves, which will be sold very low. The lot consists of many different patterns, among them the "Garland," a neat, elegant and durable stove for little money. He also keeps a large variety of cook stoves and tinware. Now is the time to make your selections, and get ready for cold weather.

The Latest Administration Outrage.

The Cincinnati Enquirer says: "The mommoth pile of Republican usurpations in the Southern States, and of the recent outrages upon civil law in South Carolina, is crowded this morning with a Presidential proclamation which, for high handed disregard of the Constitution and the civil authority has no mate in our history. Never in a time of peace have the mandates of the Constitution been so flagrantly violated by the solemn act of an entire Administration. The President proclaims martial law in South Carolina for the purpose of giving the electoral vote of that state to Hayes. What are the facts? Gov. Chamberlain has packed the Supervisors, the Returning Board, the Commissioners of Elections in his own interest. He has 90,000 negroes in the State, which 40,000 stand of arms. Forty Companies of the United States Army, it is said by Republican, journals, have been sent to South Carolina to still further aid Chamberlain and Hayes. And now the hope of the rascal's election being still tremendious, the President goes through the formality of issuing a proclamation ordering all armed bands to disperse within three days, and in the same breath orders the General of the Armies to cause the entire Atlantic Army to report at Columbia at once, and directions are given to also bring to the assistance of Hayes and Chamberlain the militia of the States. The Marshals, under Taft's order, have authority to summon every male citizen above eighteen years of age to the avowed assistance of R. B. Hayes. Was ever such a spectacle presented? Was ever such enormous machinery brought to bear upon the election in a State? The President, goaded on by the men who are trying to elect Hayes, counseled by the Cabinet, has violated the Constitution at every step in this official act. He grounds his proclamation upon the constitutional command that the United States shall protect the States "against invasion, and on application of the Legislature, or of the Executive, when the Legislature can not be conrened, against domestic violence." In the first place, according to the testimony of all of the Republicans of the highest repute in the State, there is no "domestic violence" there against which the United States are called upon to protect South Carolina. The Constitution did not declare that the National Government should interefere in a street fight; but only in cases where the "domestic violence" was equally dangerous with an "invation," with which it is catlogued. In the second place, the President could not lawfully interfere at the request of Chamberlain if the Legislature could be convinced; and Chamberlain has been howling at the gates of the Capital week after week, for months, for troops. He made no attempt to convince the Legislature, and it is a trick to say now that there is no time to convene the Legislature. It might have been done thrice. And why were scores of companies sent to South Carolina without even the formality of a lawless proclamation? The President orders these bands to disperse. But they are already dispursed. They have not met, drilled, trained. They have armed themselves as individuals in self-defense against 40,000 Government muskets in the hands of negroes. The President demands them to "disperse in three days," and, without waiting to learn whether or not they obey, instantly orders the army to the State, giving power to summon the milita of the various States to its aid. This is swift lawlessness. It is incontinent usurpation. It is revolution. It is the method by which Hayes is to be elected, if elected at all.

With an effrontery greater than the average Republican, the Chicago Tribune of last Saturday said, that the Republican party had been on trial for four years and come out with a clear record. A record of shame and corruption is not a very clear one to present to the people. The paper also said that the Republican party had exposed all the thieves, and brought all the criminals to justice. Perhaps Babcock is not a thief? and Belknap? and Robeson? Have they been brought to justice? If the Republican party has already reformed itself what is the use of the Radical stumpers talking about reform? If immaculate purity exists to-day in the Republican household why flaunt the bloody shirt and lie outrageously in the campaign? Why import fraudulent voters and raise corruption funds? The Republican party has been on trial for four years and it has a record of extravagance, venality, corruption and malfeasance. It was the record that condemned it before the people last week, and it is that terrible record that will consign it to a political grave at the Presidential election next month.

MOTH-EATEN.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

I had a beautiful garment,
And I laid it by with care;
I folded it close with lavender leaves
In a napkin fine and fair;
"It is far too costly a robe," I said,
"For one like me to wear."

So never at morn or evening
I put my garment on;
It lay by itself, under clasp and key,
In the perfumed dusk alone,
Its wonderful broidery hidden
Till many a day had gone.

There were guests who came to my portal,
There were friends who sat with me,
And clad in somberest raiment
I bore them company;
I knew that I owned a beautiful robe,
Though its splendor none might see.

There were poor who stood at my portal,
There were orphaned sought my care;
I gave them the tenderest pity,
But had nothing besides to spare;
I had only the beautiful garment,
And the raiment for daily wear.

At last, on a feast day's coming,
I thought in my dress to shine;
I would please myself with the luster
Of its shifting colors fine,
I would walk with pride in the marvel
Of its rarely rich design.

So out from the dust I bore it—
The lavender fell away—
And fold on fold I held it up
To the scorching light of the day.
Alas! the glory had perished
While there in its place it lay.

Who seeks for the fadeless beauty
Must seek for the use that seals
To the grace of a constant blessing
The beauty that use reveals.
For into the folded robe alone
The moth with its blighting steals.

JIM.

We belonged to the surplus population, Jim and I, but we did not know it. The big world into which we came was filled to overflowing with just such puny, unwashed, ill-fed little wretches as we were, but we didn't know it, and so we came unconscious into the sunless, teeming alley, where countless others like ourselves herded. We didn't know we were a problem, Jim and I; we didn't know that we and our kind were baffling the wisdom of statesmen, Jim and I; but if we had known all about it, I doubt if we could have occupied the situation more philosophically. We slept as quietly in the under-ground cellar, down whose oozy steps the rain and ruin of years made slippery passage or bestowed ourselves as naturally, if need be, under some stranded wayside cart, as if it were precisely the thing Heaven had adapted us for from the beginning.

Jim was older and bigger than I; a tall, likely lad, fifteen of these hardening and toughening years had made him keen and sharp as a terrier, and just the lad to look after a forlorn little waif of a girl like myself. And Jim, after he had blacked boots all day or sold newspapers all afternoon, was sure to look after me, and we took supper together out of the same bowl of porridge.

Jim wasn't my brother, oh no! I used to wish he was my brother, though, sometimes, just because I was so proud of him.

The old man that kept the cellar, you see, had picked Jim up from somewhere when his folks died, and picked me up from somewhere when my folks died, and so we had somehow fallen together all along.

Just down beyond the jog of our alley, where it turned a sort of gray corner, and was darker and dirtier than ever—just there stood an old gray church with a clock in the tower; an old, old mossy church, with an old, old clock that passed its withered hands over its wizened face, and looked sleepily through them down into our alley on one side, and into a noisy, busy thoroughfare on the other. This old clock had dozed there until its head was all on one side, and you couldn't be sure whether it told the right time or not; but of a summer afternoon, when it was getting quite dusk down in our alley, a red ray from the setting sun used to settle for a minute right down on the face of the sleepy old clock; then it would seem to rouse up out of a pleasant dream, and strike the hour as sharp as need be, and then I knew it was time to look out for Jim. I'd see him turn the corner with his old straw hat on, and his old patched shoes, or barefoot maybe, for that matter, and we'd set off for a stroll together—a stroll to the wharves.

We generally haunted the wharves, Jim and I, when we went a pleasuring. They were so grand, the wharves, so busy, the wharves, so full of light and fresh air, the wharves, so altogether different from our alley, with the ships crowding around them, and the fluttering flags here and there on the masts, and the busy sailors getting in freights. Sometimes Jim would get a job for half an hour, and leave me lurking among the cotton bales, or sitting solitary in some safe corner till he came back. He always came back. And then sometimes we would linger about there till nightfall. Then the wharf was solemn and silent, and you could hear the water washing up against the great beams underneath, and see here and there a light gleaming from some lone lantern among the shrouds, and the gray water stretching beyond, we knew not whither; and if Jim and I had owned it all we couldn't have loved it better.

But one day Jim got a job that lasted longer than usual, and I grew scared and uneasy as night came on and he didn't come back. Wandering from the place where he had set me, shy and fearsome as a water rat, but as determined, I looked for him everywhere, but in vain; then I went back to my post, for hadn't he said, as he always said, "Don't be afraid, Jenny; for I'll come back for sure, you know." And then I waited and waited, till finally I fell asleep among the bales and barrels, and forgot my troubles.

In the morning, a forlorn and desolate little creature enough, I learned from some compassionate longshoremen that the great ship where Jim had been at work had sailed away with him abroad. A wild and passionate burst of weeping greeted this news, and a pitiful throng of people gathered about me, freight men and sailors mostly, but among them suddenly appeared the quiet face of a Quaker lady, who was distributing books among the sailors. They told her my tale, and seeing me utterly friendless, she wiped my tear-stained face with her white handkerchief and took me away. I was no better than a masterless dog, and worth far less. But she took me to a great, clean, quiet place—an institution they called it—where there were many others as homeless and wretched as I. And there they washed me and made me so clean and fresh that I thought the real me, the ragged, red-eyed, unkempt surplus atom of humanity that had been me, was gone away over seas with Jim, and this rosy-cheeked child was another me, newly come into the world.

Then one day there came a grand and stately lady who took me away to live with her and be her own little girl. This lady wore shining silks and lived in a splendid house, and had a lad in a velvet jacket, who was about as big as Jim. It was all like a strange, bright dream, if I could have only forgotten Jim. But I could not.

Jim was surplus population no longer; perhaps he was drowned, his ragged jacket and crownless hat might be buried now away down under the sea. Nobody about me now wore patched shoes or trowsers out at the knees, and nobody, it seemed to me, not even Louis, who was so kind and good to me, not even he, had an eye as bright and soft as Jim's, or a hand as warm. And so I never forgot Jim, but always in my heart of hearts seemed listening and waiting for him.

Sometimes I used to lure Louis down to the wharves, and always when I walked by myself my steps turned thitherward, and thus it was that I never lost sight of the ships, and dimly, faintly, unreasonably, looked for the return of Jim.

But it began to be years since dear old Jim went away, and Louis was a tall youth home from college, and I was—well, folks called me a young lady, and said that I would marry Louis some day. And perhaps they might have been right; but how could I be a lady—a real lady, you know—with an old straw hat and a ragged jacket stowed away in my heart? Even after I grew up I had fits of silent fretting for Jim that seemed as if they would eat my life away. Mrs. Belden said it was because I was growing, and took me away to the seashore. Oh! the seashore! I cannot tell you what I felt when I first saw the sea—the real sea—stretching away from the white line of shore, throbbing and sounding as it brimmed to the horizon's edge. This was the sea, the glorified sea, no longer grimy and smoky and gray with getting its living, but the sea translated, purified, made holy as if after death. The days went and came shining and beautiful; and every day I walked on the shore with Louis, ran races with the breeze, picked up shells, or gathered seaweed, or watched the sun gilding the sails of some far-flitting ship. Louis' face was sweet in those days, and kind as sunlight; and his voice was soft and low when he spoke to me, for he said we were old friends now, and had known each other so many years that we ought to love each other always. One afternoon we strayed farther than usual, and the twilight deepening as we walked, I think we both forgot everything except that we were young and happy, and life was glorious. Love! The word dropped warm from his lips, and seemed to color all my future with rose tints. All my past seemed sinking out of sight. The gates of paradise were open, and I was free to walk therein if I would. Not for me the barrenness, the disappointment that blighted other lives. I might make what I would, with wealth and love for my servants, and luxury and joy at my command. Ah, well I remember that afternoon by the sea!—the long line of white beach, the overhanging cliffs, the twilight touching the water with a golden glow, and glittering on the tall masts, and the ship lying at anchor beyond. Oh, life was so beautiful!—oh, love was so beautiful! A lightness of heart, a capricious intangible, elf-like mood fell upon me, born perhaps of the very overflow of bliss. I remember clapping my hands as I skipped along, challenging Louis to a race. Perhaps he had urged me too persistently to respond to his affection, to say when I would be his wife. Wife! I wanted to be no one's wife just then, but only to love and to live. Would I answer him? sighed Louis.

"When you catch me," I responded, mockingly, flitting along the sand. Away I went, with Louis following, breathless. We rounded the curve of the shore, and I was just sinking down upon the sand to wait for him, when an old boat with a broken oar caught my eye; it lay swinging in the shadow just where a great rock overhung the beach. Lightly, thoughtlessly, I stepped into the tiny craft, and waving my handkerchief laughingly to Louis, caught up my oar and set myself afloat. I scarcely thought what I was doing; it was a mere caprice born of the lightness of heart and youthful thoughtlessness. But a single glance at Louis' countenance roused me to the folly I was committing.

"Come back! come back!" he cried; "the current will carry you out of reach in a moment!"

Still laughing, I endeavored to obey. Dextrously I worked the broken oar, diligently I steadied the frail little vessel; but all my efforts seemed to bear me further and further from the anxious face that was watching me.

Perhaps if Louis then had plunged into the water, a few strong strokes of his arm might have reached and saved me. I do not know. Louis was no swimmer; and, besides, that was not his way of doing things. His was a deliberate and thoughtful rather than a rash and venturesome nature. He called to me eagerly that he was going for help; I should wait; I should drop the oar; in a few moments he would get a boat. I saw him hastening along the shore at the top of his speed; I saw the solitary shore, the deserted fisher huts, the far stretches of sand he would have to travel before reaching the little fishing village; I saw it all, but dimly now, for I was floating further and further away.

Wearily I dropped the oar and sank back in the boat. Surely I need do nothing more. Oh, surely Louis would save me! he would not let me die alone in reach of his loving arms! Night was creeping on with twilight on its garment's hem. I could see that lone and shadowy ship lying at anchor beyond the bar. If only I could reach that ship! But the current would drift me past her in an instant. Wildly and longingly now I called for help, stretching my arms out yearningly toward that silent vessel; but nothing answered me. The shore had grown far and dim, and dimly, strangely the stars coming out with their unfamiliar beauty made me afraid. Sad, solitary, and deserted, was I going to my death out of all that bright afternoon, that overflowing love, that fullness of life and pleasure proffered me?

Afraid? Well, yes, I was afraid; for one brief moment, as I cowered back into the boat, shrinking in the solitude of the awful waste of waters, a fear of that unknown world into which I seemed sailing oppressed me. But I bethought myself if I must die, it were better to die bravely. Perhaps I was going to meet Jim. If he was in that other world, that ought to be a cheery thought. No doubt he died bravely. But was he dead? Jim, my old, staunch friend, whose glad, good face had brightened my wretched childhood, oh, where was he?

It is said in the hours of death the memory of past events is preternaturally vivid. And as my mind reverted to those old days, forgetting my latter life, forgetting my later friends, and forgetting Louis, I felt sure that I was going to die. A trance of peace fell upon me, in which I seemed to clasp Jim's warm hand again as in days of old. Jim! Jim! I called aloud, rousing myself as from a dream, yet dreaming still. But nothing answered me. The darkness was growing deeper, the current more rapid, and Louis, with his soft taper fingers would never reach me now.

Unconscious, half delirious, I must have been, perhaps, for it seemed to me that Jim, on whose name I called, was a spirit, and that his presence, somewhere near me, was upholding me in this hour of need as I drifted further and further away from all earthly help. How long, I know not; how far, I know not; it seemed to me I had been on the way to eternity, and—. Had I had not heard through that death-dream an answering cry? Did I or did I not see mistily, as through a vail, the spars and shrouds of that silent vessel that had stood afar off, watching my struggle with death? And, great God! was it Jim's face—dear old Jim's face—bending over me, and was this heaven?

"My dear," said Mrs. Belden, coming into my room one morning, "you are getting quite strong again; the sea air has done you a world of good—in fact, you look better, I think, than before your accident. I am thinking we may as well return to the city as soon as you like."

I was lying on a couch by the window looking out upon the sea.

"Well," said I, absently, in a half reverie.

"You feel very strong, do you not, dear?"

"Oh yes, ma'm," said I, rousing myself; "quite strong—stronger than ever."

I was stronger than ever; since that night when Jim saved my life, swimming out to my sinking boat against the current, and risking his life to save an unknown waif, unwitting that it was his nursling of old who was in deadly peril. Since that night a world of new thoughts had come crowding in upon me, searing me with their strength and making me ashamed of the silken life I was leading. I know not what premonition of change, of banishment, was tugging at my heart that morning as I looked out over the gleaming waters, and filled my eyes with tears.

"You are sorry to leave the sea shore?" said Mrs. Belden.

"I was thinking of Jim," said I, honestly. "How can I leave Jim?"

Mrs. Belden's face flushed.

"Jenny," said she, severely, "of course we all think a deal of your sailor friend for saving your life; but you must be aware that he is no fit companion for you, and that his constant attendance upon you since that accident has been a matter of much annoyance both to myself and Louis."

At that moment Louis' tall figure appeared at the door, a queer smile was on his pale thin face, as holding out his long white hand to me, he said, "Jenny, your sailor's below."

"I have just been telling Jenny," said Mrs. Belden, "that we must get away from the sea-shore to free her from these low associates."

Low associates!—Jim, my prince of men, my savior!

I see but one course, and yet these two had been so kind to me all these years, they had made my life so luxurious and pleasureable; should I go away from them into the obscurity and poverty of my early life again?

At that moment Jim's sunburned face appeared at the door. He stood with his cap in his hand, eager yet modest, his face alight, his eyes gleaming behind Louis' thin, calm countenance. "I sail the day after to-morrow, Jenny," he said, "and I couldn't miss the chance of not seeing you."

Mrs. Belden made a haughty gesture with her hand, as if she would have ordered off the intruder.

"Wait, mother," said Louis, calmly. "Of course Jenny's good sense will tell her what is right, and she belongs to me, you know."

I saw Jim give a great start. The blood flushed up hotly in his brown cheeks. There was a pause for a moment; then Jim said, passing his hand over his forehead, as if he were not quite clear as to what he heard:

"Is it so with thee, my little Jenny? Will my little girl be happy always away from her poor old Jim?"

"Poor old Jim." That was what I used to call him in my childish days, stroking his hand and comforting him when he was in trouble. Should I desert him now?

For an answer I took from my finger a glittering ring which Louis had made me wear. I unclasped a costly bracelet he had given me, and drew a gold chain from my neck. I put the shining heap in his hands.

"Louis," said I, "I have loved you with these, and perhaps for these; but I loved Jim without them long ago, and I will love him without them the rest of my life. Forgive me, Louis; I am not fit, as you see, for wealth and splendor; it is natural for me to return to my kind. Come, let us part in peace."

Mrs. Belden rose; her eyes were like the flaming sword that drove out Adam and Eve from Paradise. She would have spurned us from her presence.

But Louis laid his hand calmly upon her shoulder. "Mother," said he, "Jenny is right."

I have often said to Jim since, as we two are chatting in the cabin of Jim's good ship, "Capt. Jim, Louis was a gentleman, after all, though he wasn't man enough to save my life."—Harper's Weekly.

SINGULAR DISCOVERY.

A Remarkable Mammoth Cave in Maryland.

Several days ago there was noticed in the columns of the Baltimore Gazette the discovery of a mammoth cave near Cumberland, Md., on the place of Mr. Snyder. A correspondent of the Alleganian and Times gives some additional particulars of this remarkable discovery. He states that on last Saturday Mr. Albert Dowde penetrated the outer cave and secured some very fine specimens of stalactite and stalagmite, with a few fossils. In the afternoon, however, two young gentlemen of this city, deeply interested in science, made every preparation to give the cave a thorough investigation. Ensconced in rubber coat and high-topped boots, each with a dark lantern, they bade adieu to sunlight and penetrated the mountain depths. Entering the first cavern they threw their bull's-eye upon the perpendicular sides, the roof and the bottom, and all reflected back in brilliant colors the rays of light falling upon them. Then commenced the research. Here and there upon the floor were soft clay and sand-spots, and delving among these they brought to light some very fine specimens of the pre-historic age. We have not seen them, nor do we believe they have exhibited them to any one. Penetrating still further to the rear of the first cavern, they came upon a huge rock which had fallen or been rolled to the mouth of the entrance. To get beyond this was impossible without a greater force than their muscular efforts could put forth. But placing their lanterns to a crevice they threw the light beyond into the deep recesses of the mountain. Far in the darkness could be seen room after room, apparently divided up regularly, and the rays of the lamp were radiated until the interior looked as if it might be the gilded palace of the genii of old. The young gentlemen were awe-inspired with the solemn grandeur of the dark caverns. The rising pyramids, the apparently carved niches, the glittering doorways, as if studded with diamonds—all tended to stir up within them a feeling never before experienced. Whilst thus meditating a rumbling sound from the depths within suddenly restored them to consciousness, and being afraid that the mountain would fall in on them, they beat a hasty retreat, wondering what occasioned the noise away back in the depths of the earth. These young gentlemen are not to be deterred from their purpose of seeing what lies hidden within this deep cavern. Mr. Snyder, the proprietor, has promised to have this obstacle at the mouth of the inner cavern removed, and on next Saturday the cave will be open to inspection from its mouth to its subterranean depths, and all parties interested in bringing to light what may be hidden in the depths of the earth are invited to enter without money and without price.

How Many Apples Did Adam and Eve Eat?

Some say Eve 8 and Adam 2, a total of 10 only. Now we figure the thing out far differently. Eve 8 and Adam 8 also. Total, 16.—Boston Journal. We think the above figures are entirely wrong. If Eve 8 and Adam 82, certainly the total will be 90. Scientific men, however, on the strength of the theory that the antediluvians were a race of giants, and consequently great eaters, reason something like this: Eve 81st and Adam 82. Total, 163.—Gloucester Advertiser. Wrong again; what could be clearer than, if Eve 8 1, and Adam 8-1-2, the total was 893?—Lawrence American. If Eve 8-1-1st, and Adam 8-1-2, would not the whole be 1,623?—Boston Journal. I believe the following to be the true solution: Eve 8-1-4 Adam, Adam 8-1-2-4 Eve. Total, 8,938.—Veritas. Still another calculation is as follows: If Eve 8-1-4 Adam, Adam 8-1-2-4-2 oblige Eve; total, 82,056. We think, however, this not to be a sufficient quantity, for though we admit that Eve 8-1-4 Adam; Adam if he 80-8-1-2-4-2 keep Eve company, total 8,082,056.—New York Mail.

Doing the Centennial in One Day.

Enthusiastic Philadelphian, speaking to a friend from the rural districts: "Have you been to the Centennial, and what do you think of it?"

"Yes; it's magnificent; went all through it yesterday and saw everything; it's a big show."

"Then you saw the $20,000 set of diamonds; beauties, ain't they?"

"Lem'me see; they are in Machinery hall, ain't they? Yes, I remember them; they're very nice, but I ain't much on things of that kind; I like machinery better."

"Ah! Then you must have been pleased with the immense Corliss engine!"

"I don't exactly remember it. Oh, yes I do; it was in the Women's Pavilion. Yes, it's a mighty fine thing."

"My friend, I guess you and I saw things a little differently. But tell me, what do you really regard as the best thing in the Exposition?"

"Well, I think 'The Cheese of Paris' is about the best to my notion."

"You mean the 'Siege of Paris,' don't you?"

"It looked like a cheese to me, and I thought it got its name from that."

"Oh, a slight mistake. What else did you see to admire?"

"Heaps of things. The five-legged calf, the two-legged horse, the——"

"You have employed your time very profitably, and will be able to tell your friends all about it," interrupted the Philadelphian, as he bid his rural friend a hasty good-by. And the man, so the story runs, went back to Bucks county and told his wondering neighbors how he had done the Exposition in one day.—Washington Chronicle.

The Late James Lick.

The foundation of Mr. Lick's fortune was laid in South America, where he was engaged in the manufacture of pianos. In 1847 he arrived in San Francisco, and, by the judicious purchase of real estate, acquired the immense property which he left on his death. He was never disturbed by the mining excitement of '49, but in the midst of it continued quietly to buy all the real estate he could get, with a keen eye to the future, often paying as much as $20 per day to men who were required to protect his land from the invasion of squatters. "Lick's Folly" was a magnificent flouring-mill, finished in mahogany and other hard-woods. When he became tired of his plaything he gave it to the Tom Paine Society, with whose principles he had some sympathy; but when that body afterward sold it for less than its value, he abjured Tom Paine forever. Lick was not of a social disposition. He rarely touched a glass of wine, and never indulged in social excesses of any description. He was arbitrary and severe in his dealings with others, and towards the close of his life was full of crotchets and prejudices. He died of paralysis.

Philadelphia Gilt-Edged Butter.

Many judges of good butter aver that the best butter that can be found in the United States is made near Philadelphia. But if the same degree of neatness and care be observed in other localities where the cows are supplied with good grass, there will be no difficulty in making the article fully equal to Philadelphia 'print' butter. The milking is done quietly and rapidly, the same milk-maid always attends the same cow.

The spring-house is usually of stone, on a side hill, the floor covered with running water, and, therefore, always cool and free from odors. Deep tin pans, painted on the outside, with bails for handling, are filled to the depth of three inches, placed on an oak floor, surrounded with cool, clear water of a temperature of fifty-eight degrees. The cream is taken off in twenty-four hours, kept in deep vessels holding two gallons, and stirred whenever a new skimming is added.

A barrel churn is used, the churning lasting an hour, when a little cold milk is added to cause the butter to gather. The buttermilk drawn off, ice-cold water is added twice, a few turns given to the churn each time, and the last water is scarcely colored with milk. A gentle rocking of the churn soon collects the butter, which is left two hours to drain off the remaining water through a small hole left for the purpose.

The butter is worked by a corrugated wooden roller revolving on a shaft, supported over the center of the table, which also revolves under the roller. The roller does not quite touch the table, so there is no crushing of the particles, but a separation, which permits the water or milk to flow away.

A cloth wrung dry in cold spring water is repeatedly pressed upon the butter until not a particle of moisture is seen upon it as it comes from the roller, and the butter begins to adhere to the cloth. This is called "wiping" the butter. An ounce of salt to three pounds of butter is then thoroughly worked in by the aid of the same machine.

It is then weighed in pound prints, deposited in trays and set in water to harden. The next morning it is wrapped in damp cloths, each pound by itself, put in a case upon wooden shelves, with two compartments of pounded ice to keep it cool, and, surrounded by a cedar tub, it is sent to market and sold at 95 per pound.—New York Herald.

Overwhelmed by an Avalanche.

A fatal disaster happened on the Felik Joch on Aug. 28. Two English gentlemen, Mr. Hayman and Mr. Johnston, accompanied by two brothers, Ignatze and Franz Sarback, guides of St. Niklaus, left the chalet of the Cour-de-Lys, at the head of the Gressoney valley, at 5 a. m. on Monday morning, with the intention of traversing the Felik Joch to the Riffel Hotel, on the Zermatt side of the range. Owing to a fog the party kept too much to the right, but succeeded in almost reaching a ridge east of but a good deal higher than the Felik Joch. Here it was necessary that they should proceed along a very steep slope of snow, overhanging an icy wall of great depth, and, when on it, an avalanche of snow precipitated the whole party down the icy wall. Two of the party—Mr. Hayman and Ignatze Sarback—escaped with their lives, but the other two—Mr. Johnston and Franz Sarback—were buried under the avalanche, and probably smothered instantaneously, as their companions could neither see any traces of them nor get any response to their shouts, although they remained on the spot for some hours. Ignatze Sarback managed to make his way out of the avalanche, and succeeded in taking Mr. Hayman over the ridge to the Zermatt side of the Felik Joch, where, exposed to the inclemency of the weather, and totally devoid of provisions, they passed the night on the snow, half an hour below the summit of the Col. Here, at 10 a. m. on the following day a large party, which had started from the Riffel Hotel to make the ascent of Castor, found Mr. Hayman almost in a state of collapse, with both hands frost-bitten, and Ignatze Sarback, with the use of both hands also gone from the same cause. With great difficulty Mr. Hayman was conveyed to the Riffel Hotel, and although yesterday evening in a very critical state, to-day he is out of danger.—Cor. London Times.

A Disappointed Maid.

Miss Stokes considers work very unladylike, and kitchen labor "perfectly shocking." But when an industrious and sensible young man began to occasionally drop in and spend an evening, she very wisely refrained from expressing these convictions, after hearing him on several occasions severely denounce the frivolity and indolence so fashionable at present with many of the young ladies of Philadelphia.

Entertaining a high regard for the young man, she determined to surprise him by some great feat of her industry and perseverance, and last evening, as they were seated together on the parlor sofa, after the conversation had began to flag, she artfully allowed a sigh to escape her.

"Are you unwell?" he tenderly inquired.

"No, I am quite well."

"But you sighed," he persisted.

"Yes; but I suppose it was because I felt so tired."

"Have you been busy?"

"Oh! yes, indeed," was the reply. "Why, would you believe it? I cut out a towel and made it all by myself to-day."

There has been a coolness between the parties ever since, the reason of which he has never been fully able to explain, but she angrily remarked the next morning that some men were foolish enough to imagine that a woman ought to do more work than a fifty-horse power steam engine.

THERE are one-fourth more blondes than brunettes.

A VERY OLD SONG.

"To-morrow, ma, I'm sweet sixteen,
And Billy Grimes, the drover,
Has popp'd the question to me, ma,
And wants to be my lover;
To-morrow morn, he says, mamma,
He's coming here quite early,
To take a pleasant walk with me,
Across the field of barley."

"You must not go, my gentle dear,
There's no use now a-talking;
You shall not go across the field
With Billy Grimes a-walking.
To think of his presumption, too!
The dirty, ugly drover,
I wonder where your pride has gone,
To think of such a lover!"

"Old Grimes is dead, you know, mamma,
And Billy is so lonely!
Besides, they say, to Grimes' estate,
That Billy is the only
Surviving heir to all that's left;
And that, they say, is nearly
A good ten thousand dollars, ma,
And six hundred yearly!"

"I did not hear, my daughter dear,
Your last remark quite clearly;
But Billy is a clever lad,
And no doubt loves you dearly;
Remember, then, to-morrow morn,
To be up bright and early,
To take a pleasant walk with him
Across the field of barley!"

When I could crack a nut
With my molars in my jaws,
With teeth all white and steadfast
And innocent of flaws,
I laughed at angry Fortune,
Made light of coming sorrow;
Was happy all to-day,
And careless of to-morrow;
I trusted men and women,
And women best, maybe!—
Oh, pleasant was that Spring-time
To my teeth and me!
But now, when teeth are shaky,
And going one by one,
I find, like Israel's monarch,
Small good beneath the sun.
I cannot crack a nut,
I cannot find a truth,
Or man or lovely woman,
Like those I found in youth.
Fall back, oh cruel Fortune,
Thy sword into its sheath,
Let me believe in something,
And contradict my teeth!

A JUDGE WHO WON'T SENTENCE MEN TO BE HANGED ON FRIDAY.—The fact that the negro Williams, whose sentence was commuted by Gov. Brogden, was to have been hanged Saturday, at Tarboro, calls to mind the fact that Judge Moore, who presides on that circuit, never sentences a man to be hanged on Friday. He is disgusted with the old superstition which calls Friday an unlucky day, and in stopping the hanging of men in his circuit on that day is doing what he can to break up the superstition, which is as senseless as it is old.—*Raleigh (N. LIFE IN COREA.

The Curious Customs of a Very Curious People.

[From the London Times.]

One of the leading Secretaries of the Japanese mission, which visited Corea early in this year to negotiate the treaty between the two countries, gave, on his return, an account of the condition of Corea, so far as he could observe it on its southwestern coast and in the neighborhood of Kok'wa; and his statement, transmitted by Sir H. Parkes, is included among papers recently presented to Parliament. The Secretary says that the houses of the common people are little better than dog kennels. Though Kok'wa is a fine place, the houses are only six or seven feet high. Houses in Corea are warmed by means of a horizontal passage extending under the whole length of the floor; a fire is lit at one end, and the smoke goes out at the other. Dried fish and persimmons, tobacco and straw sandals are apparently the chief objects of trade. Chairs of a very rude kind seem to have been made for the special accommodation of the Japanese mission; skins of leopards were placed over the chairs.

The Government offices are built of brick, and recognizable at a glance. In respect to conveniences they are very deficient; and, for like reasons, the public roads are filthy. The city walls are about five miles long, only from two feet to three feet high, partly of mud and stone and partly of brick; the gates have fallen out of repair. The Coreans dress in garments undyed and unornamented, and which once were white; a long sleeve is the badge of higher rank. The head-dress is a large round hat fastened by strings passing under the chin, and said to be made of horsehair. Custom exacts that the hat be placed on the head when greeting a friend. The hair is worn long and fastened with pins into a bunch at the top of the head.

The women are said to be dressed something like Europeans, but the Japanese did not see one; the women are excluded from the public gaze, and it is said that even among the Coreans themselves visitors are not permitted to see the wife. The writer of this account thinks it probable that there may be much mineral wealth in Corea, but he says that only the iron mines are worked. Copper, gold and silver, if such metals exist, are yet untouched. This, he thinks, may have arisen from a notion that their discovery would be prejudicial to the nation. He believes the soil to be poor. There appears to be no old trees, the demand for fuel being such that they are not allowed to grow to maturity. The cattle and pigs are very fat, and the hides of the former are among the exports of the country. The horses are very small, and only about a third of the size of an Arab horse.

The chief drink of the people is an infusion of dried ginseng or ginger and dried orange peel. Goma (sesamum orientalis) of excellent quality grows in the country, and its oil is largely used in cooking and also for lamp fuel. The Secretary says: "The Coreans eat more meat and fat stuff than we do, but not much fish; the beef and pork are excellent. When the treaty was signed we were entertained with a repast, at which music was performed. There was a sort of confectionary made of sugar, flour and oil, cut into small square pieces; a great heap of boiled eggs; a pudding of flour, goma and honey; dried persimmons; pine seeds; honey-like food covered with roasted rice, painted red and white; macaroni soup with fowl; boiled legs of pork; and with everything wine of about the potency of Japanese sake of inferior quality; but the wine usually drank by the Coreans is a strong spirit. The dishes were of earthenware; the table was square, rudely made and painted with persimmon juice. Oiled paper was used for a tablecloth, and the wine was served from copper vessels."

Texas and the Centennial.

Among the conspicuous omissions of the Centennial Exposition none is more noteworthy than the absence of Texas. For, save a few bales of cotton, which are of very superior quality, she has no exhibit of her splendid products and vast resources. It is certainly her misfortune, for there is a widespread interest in the Lone Star State. And had her exhibit been equal to her acknowledged resources, the immigration it would have attracted to her fertile lands would have greatly increased her wealth and population. As an instance of this interest, and an evidence of what Texas has lost, a well-known correspondent of a prominent Southern paper a few days since gave notice that he would distribute Guides to Southwestern Texas, and give information concerning it; and for many days one might have thought that he was a successful candidate at a county election, dispensing patronage, so many sought him for information. He receives letters on this subject from all parts of the country. The apathy of the Texas people with regard to immigration is surprising. Did they manifest the enterprise which Kansas has displayed their recompense would be great. But there are forces at work which promise greatly to improve the condition of Texas.

The Galveston, Harrisburg and San Antonio railroad will reach San Antonio in a few weeks, and then a magnificent country, as rich as any in the nation, will be opened to the immigration of the world. The climate of this region is surprisingly healthy. Consumptives go there from all parts of the country and have their lives prolonged. The soil produces corn, cotton and sugar, and all the small cereals in abundance. In the western portion large fortunes are made by grazing herds of cattle and flocks of sheep. It is not surprising, then, that the overcrowded inhabitants of cities, and the occupants of worn-out lands in the North are seeking, in Western Texas, a shorter and easier road to a competence and independence, which all thoughtful men wish to provide for themselves and families.

Mr. M. Whilldin, during the Exposition, can be addressed at Newspaper Pavilion, Centennial Exhibition, Philadelphia, in regard to this section of Texas, or W. G. Kingsbury, St. Louis, or E. M. Stackpole, 4 Cedar street, New York.

The Christians of Asia Minor.

An Armenian in London sends to the papers the following extract from an Armenian newspaper in Asia Minor: "These (Turkish) oppressions, instead of decreasing, grow daily in dimensions. It has become a crime for us to be Christians; we give the Government the greater part of the fruit of our labors, we never give them the least trouble, yet our clergy, our women and our children and ourselves are dishonored daily. Neither the captivity of the Israelites in Egypt, nor the sufferings of the Bulgarians, nor the past sufferings of the American negroes, can compare with the present miseries of the Armenians of Anatolia. The European powers are now considering how to insure the welfare of the people of European Turkey; but if they wish to perform a philanthropic and Christian duty, they will remember that, in Asiatic Turkey, also, there are millions who are at this moment suffering merely because they bear the name of Christ."

CENTENNIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Exhibitors and Awards—J. Estey & Co.'s Organs—Boomer & Boschert's Power Cider Press.

To say that the great majority of exhibitors here are dissatisfied with the Awards of the Judges is stating the case very mildly. That all could not be pleased was inevitable because all could not get medals. But as three-fourths of the exhibitors received awards, and the medals are of equal merit, many of the prize-holders are displeased, because when awards are so nearly universal they become comparatively worthless. Indeed, there is more dissatisfaction among those who received medals than among those who received none. Those who had superior exhibits are offended because those having inferior goods, in the same class, received equal honors. And some of the really deserving got no medals, while some that every intelligent person that has examined their exhibits knows did not deserve medals got them. And so little confidence had some of the most deserving and worthy exhibitors in the justice and value of the awards that they refused to compete, preferring to let their goods stand on their own merits, having more faith in a discriminating public than in the decision of the judges, appointed as they are under this system. That many of the recipients of medals eminently deserved them is undoubtedly true. And in some departments the distinguished scientific character of the judges was strikingly illustrated by the discriminating verdicts they rendered. But there was not enough of this class to redeem the general and wholesale bestowal of medals from being looked upon as a farce. It is hoped that the reports which are to contain the reasons for awarding the medals will enlighten the puzzled and dissatisfied exhibitors.

As the really distinguished exhibitors are the few who received no medals I examined with some care many of the exhibits of this class, and I found not a few, without medals, decidedly superior to those which had received them. And especially was this true of the exhibits of those who declined to compete for prizes, preferring the verdict of that comprehensive and impartial jury who have tested the character of their goods for years.

As a good representative of this class I examined the exhibit of a well-known house of world-wide reputation as organ manufacturers, who have been in the business thirty years, whose goods are sold not only all over the United States and Canada, but this present year have exported to Europe nearly as many organs as all other American manufacturers combined. I refer to the celebrated organ manufacturers,

J. ESTEY AND CO., OF BRATTLEBORO, VT.,

the clear, sweet, inspiring tones of whose parlor and church organs are familiar to so many thousand lovers of good music in both hemispheres. Their parlor organs are distinguished for their great compass, from smooth, soft and almost inaudible notes to the loudest sounds, sufficient to fill a church, for the purity and exquisite sweetness of their tones, and also for the instantaneous response they give to the touch, so that quick music, a waltz or a march, can be played on them as well as on a piano. So great is the popularity of these organs that their sales are constantly increasing, even in these dull times, being larger the last month than ever before. Their prices range from $70 to $1,050. Unceasing care that all their goods shall be perfect, in material and workmanship, has won for them public confidence—a prize worth more than the medals of a thousand Expositions.

A very enterprising firm here, whose exhibit took the first and only prize in their line at this Exposition, have excited a lively interest among fruit-growers and farmers, by publishing the following notice:

CIDER-MAKING EXTRAORDINARY.

The Boomer & Boschert Press Co., of Syracuse, N. Y., will exhibit their Power Cider Press in Agricultural Hall, Philadelphia, Thursday, Oct. 26, 1876, when they propose to perform the unprecedented feat of pressing 100 barrels of cider from 800 bushels of apples, in ten hours.

A Singular Divorce Case.

A suit for divorce was entered upon the dockets yesterday, and disposed of last evening by Judge Hayes in chambers, which is one of the most singular cases we have ever met with, in its legal status: Years ago, in Pennsylvania, Miss Fannie Hurd allied herself and lived with a gentleman in that State as his wife—lived, kept house together, and to their friends, acquaintances and the world at large were as man and wife. The union thus formed was without the formality of any ceremony by priest, parson or law officer. They vowed to be true to each other, to live as man and wife—and that's all there was to it. A few years of this wedded life, and the husband of the lady left Pennsylvania, and she came to this city, where some eight or nine years ago she taught select music school, and formed the acquaintance of Mr. D. D. Babcock, who, we believe, was also a teacher. This acquaintance led to a marriage between the parties, but the lady kept the fact of her former marriage life a secret from the present husband. This of late years seemed to weigh upon her conscience, for her first husband was living and she had never been divorced from him. It would appear that some three or four years ago she informed her present husband of her former status, but they have continued to live together, and even a child was born to them since that confession on the part of the wife. But of late they have made up their minds that they were not living legally in wedlock, and agreed upon a separation. The application was made out, and the case heard by Judge Hayes in chambers last evening, who dissolved the marriage relation existing between the couple. Two children are the fruit of this union. One of them remains in the custody of the mother and the other in custody of the father.—Davenport Democrat.

THERE is hardly a school-boy in the land that has not read of Merchant's Gargling Oil. Before the public for the last forty years, it has become almost a household word from the Atlantic to the Pacific. As a liniment and exterior application in burns, scalds, sprains, bruises, frost bites, flesh wounds, and the numerous ailments of flesh and limb in both man and beast, Merchant's Gargling Oil stands unrivaled in the world. Merchant's Worm Tablets, a certain and safe remedy for worms, in either children or adults, have likewise become famous for their effectual curative properties. These remedies can be obtained at almost any drug store in the land.—Sandusky (Ohio) Register.

GRASSHOPPERS.

A Serious Outlook in Minnesota.

To the Editor of the St. Paul Pioneer-Press:

A short trip through Nicollet, Sibley, and a part of Brown counties, has convinced me that the grasshopper question is one of much more serious importance than our people suppose. In a drive of thirty miles I did not see a furrow turned. Vacant houses and deserted farms are not infrequent. Those who remain cannot possibly hold out much longer. Many of them are actually facing starvation. Unless a change soon comes our western counties must be depopulated. The crisis is reached. The people have struggled for their homes and farms during the last four years of devastation by this terrible scourge, but they cannot hold out much longer. The issue is now positive, simple, and well-defined. Shall the country be occupied by the people or the grasshoppers! They cannot both inhabit the same country much longer.

If the greater part of the eggs deposited shall hatch out, there will be grasshoppers enough to devour every green thing in the State of Minnesota next year. The deposit of eggs is probably hundreds of times greater than it has ever been before. If they shall develop into full-grown grasshoppers, and remain in the State, the result is fearful to contemplate. I am satisfied that if a universal raid were made upon them wherever they are, immediately upon their beginning to hatch out, disaster might be averted. But action must be prompt and in every part of the region infested. I do not believe that men can be driven out by grasshoppers, if a combined effort is made with a determination to win.

Now, as to the theory of the eggs being destroyed by the red worm. I investigated this matter, and while it is unquestionably true that the worm is at work, yet at the present rate of destruction it will absolutely amount to nothing at all. For every egg destroyed there will be a thousand left, speaking within bounds at that. So, too, some of the eggs are rotting, but the decrease from this cause will also be infinitesimally small in comparison with the whole number deposited.

It is possible that very unfavorable weather in the spring might destroy and prevent the eggs from hatching out. It is also possible that favorable winds might drive them away as soon as they are able to fly, but these are contingencies that cannot be taken into account in deciding the question, "Men and brethren, what shall we do to be saved?"

Yours, respectfully, E. J. HODGSON.

Another Submarine Tunnel.

Stimulated, doubtless, by the project of joining England to the Continent by a subway under the Straits of Dover, which has arrived at its first practical stage, a Madrid pamphleteer purposes to tunnel the Straits of Gibraltar, and unite Europe and Africa, while turning the flank of the fortress of Gibraltar, on the English occupation of which the Epaniards have long looked with an evil eye. He suggests that the passage should commence between Tarita and Algesiras on the Spanish and come out between Ceuta and Tangiers, on the African side. The submarine part of this tunnel would be little more than a third of the length of that between England and France. On the other hand, as the maximum depth of the sea at the point in question is 500 fathoms, and as it is proposed to leave 300 feet of rock between the arch of the tunnel and the sea bottom, the tunnels of approach would have to be nearly six miles long on each side. The cost is estimated at about £4,000,000. It is very questionable, however few the engineering difficulties, whether such a work could ever become a commercial success; but in connection with the submarine way under the channel, it would, as its projector points out, allow of an overland railway route to India without change of carriage.

Four Hundred Pounds of Honey in One Tree.

The Burnie brothers, in the town of Glenmore, inform us that they have at various times secured a considerable amount of honey by hunting out the "bee-trees." A few days ago they found a tree in Glenmore, from which they secured about fifty pounds of honey, and five years ago they found one containing about 400 pounds. The hollow of the tree was filled with honey for a distance of about sixteen feet.—Green Bay (Wis.) Advocate.

WOOD'S IMPROVED HAIR RESTORATIVE

What It Does!

It restores, quickly, Gray Hair to its glossy Natural color. It has the effect of Restoring the Hair to prematurely Bald Heads. It Removes Dandruff, Humors and all Eruptions from the Scalp. It prevents Irritation, Itching and Scaly Dryness of the Skin. It Restores faded, dry, harsh and falling Hair, & removes dandruff, softens and gives vigor to the growth of the Hair. It accomplishes more desired effects in a short time than any Restorative ever made, always leaving the hair soft, lively and glossy, whether used as a Dressing upon the natural hair or upon the hair in an unhealthy condition; thus rendering it, for the Old and Young, an article of unequaled excellence. No preparation offered to the public produces such wonderful results. Try it! Try it!! Call for "Wood's Improved!" as it contains no injurious qualities.

It was originally introduced 20 years ago by Prof. O. J. Wood, but the recent change of ingredients in this article is making a demand for it in all parts of the United States, Canada and foreign countries.

ANNOUNCEMENT —TO— CONSUMERS!

The great radical improvement introduced in this article has induced us to take the agency and advertise its virtues to the world. Its effects as a Restorative are what has been long sought for and wanted for many years, being more decided and satisfactory than has ever before been attained. No Druggist in the world knows its composition, and cannot make it; therefore when you call for it, "Wood's Improved," do not let any unprincipled dealer convince you that he has a Restorative or Renewer as good, or something similar, as there is none like it! Insist upon having "Wood's Improved," and take no other, for your money! It will not be long before all dealers everywhere will have it. If you should fail to find it, you can send $1.00 to us by mail for a bottle, or $5.00 for six bottles, and we will send it to you, prepaid, to any Express Station desired.

Democratic Arguments.

$30,000,000	saved in annual federal expenses be the action of one branch of Congress in one Session.
$55,000,000	of retrenchment proposed and the amount not cut down only in consequence of the Republican Senate and Executive.
$6,000,000	saved to the tax-payers of New York State in one year by Governor Tilden.

The New York Clipper is a non-partizan journal, but in its "Asnswers to Correspondents," we find the following:

S. M. P.—"Did Samuel J. Tilden equip and arm soldiers at his own expense during the war? If so how many?" Were we to begin to investigate the stories set afloat by partisan newspapers in the heat of a Presidential campaign, we should have no time for anything else. Samuel J. Tilden was at the head of a committee that sent troops into the field from this State, and it is quite probable that he contributed as much money for the purpose as any one else on the committee or in that town.

A Fresh Disgrace for the Country.

[St. Louis Times.]

The South Carolina programme has assumed definite shape at last and the administration promptly rallies to support Governor Chamberlain in his dastardly scheme for re-election. It was hoped that better counsels would prevail and that the voice of leading Republicans who assert that no emergency has arisen to warrant Federal intervention, would obtain precedence at Washington over the incendiary appeals of a faithless and frightened executive; but in this place the people are disappointed and the country experiences a fresh disgrace.

Culture and Refinement.

[Cincinnati Enquirer.]

Indiana will probably never recover from the "disgrace" into which she has been plunged by the election of "Blue Jeans" Williams to the governorship. Mr. Williams is an honest man and a thorough representative of the agricultural interests of the great hog-raising State of Indiana. He lacks culture and refinement. He cannot play a piano. A lot of swell-heads through the State want a man of "culture and refinement' in the governor's office. The ancestors of some of these snobs were flatboatmen and teamsters who never saw a kid glove big enough to cover one of their horny paws. The gentlemen who abhor coonskin caps and "red wamuses" have an idea that the State has lasped into barbarism. George Harding, who would be mistaken for a herder even in Vinita, calls Mr. Williams a boor, and bemoans his election on account of the blow that has been struck at culture and refinement. We sincerely trust that the State will survive.

We have 5,900,000 farmers, 1,200,000 trades people, 2,700,000 mechanics, 2,600,000 professional men, 43,000 clergymen, 40,000 lawyers, 128,822 teachers, 62,000 doctors, 2,000 actors, 6,200 journalists, 1,000,000 laborers and 975,000 domestic servants.

And now because the largest part of the above, the farmers, the mechanics the laborers, elected a man from their midst, for Governor, the Republicans are mad, and use naughty words towards "Blue Jeans," because he don't wear kid gloves, nor play on a piano, nor dress in find clothes. Mr. Williams will make a good Governor, because he has experience far in advance of Mr. Harrison, and education enough to discharge his duty in an honest practical manner, and not make it the stepping stone for political intrigues and selfish advancement. Honest Old Abe was not a handsome man but he did very well as a President, and the same can be said of Mr. Williams. Besides he has the manliness to treat Mr. Harrison with great respect and in return Harrison has made mean, contemptible flings against Mr. Williams and has shown himself anything but a gentleman.

CATARRH.—It you would avoid being rendered deaf or unfit to mingle in society, on account of foul and nauseating discharges from gangrenous ulcers in the head, use Dr. Detchon's celebrated Catarrh Remedy. It is the greatest cure and control for the hideous destroyer, the world ever saw. It will save every life threatened by it. It immediately arrests its progress and if perseveringly used, will never disappoint a cure. Go to Davenport's Drug Store, an get a sample bottle free. Sept. 30

ANOTHER WAR GOVERNOR

Another War Governor has come out for Tilden and Hendricks. None other than Gov. Wm. Sprague, of Rhode Island, whose promptitude in equipping and leading a body of troops to Sumter was so much applauded, and received the hearty commendation of President Lincoln. Meantime Blaine and others are reviving the memories of the scenes in which they did not dare to take part.

Gov. Palmer, of Illinois,
" Curtin, of Pennsylvania,
" Parker, of New Jersey,
" Blair, of Michigan,
" Doolittle, of Wisconsin,
" Sprague, of Rhode Island,
" Adams, of Massachusetts,
" Blair, of Missouri,
" Koerner, of Illinois,

All formerly Republicans, now for Tilden, Hendricks and Reform. They want a change, so do the people, and the 7th of November is the day on which this change can be had. The farmer, laborer and tax-payer are interested, will you stand by the giant men and assist in the great work. Let your ballots speak for a change by voting for Tilden.

FIGURES WON'T LIE.

Some idea of the extravagance of the Republican party and the cause of the hard times can be had by noting the amount of money collected by taxing the people and spent to carry on the government and to line the pockets of the office holding plunderers.

For the six years ending June 30, 1875 the total expenditures under President Grant were $4,008,48,451.82.

Or at the rate of $668,078,076 97 a year.

Or at the rate of $55,672,756.11 a month.

Or at the rate of $12,913,163.10 per week.

Or at the rate of $1,998,312.68 a day.

Or at the rate of $82,842.19 an hour.

Or at the rate of $23.01 a second.

Let the reader take out his watch and imagine that at every tick of it the Republican party takes over $23 from the pockets of the American people and spends it to support the machinrey of the government, which is managed by such men as Grant, Belknap, Chandler, Morton and Babcock, and it will give a correct idea of the situation and the demand for Reform.

STAND BY YOUR GUNS!

Democrats, stand by your guns. The enemy is still in sight, and will make desperate efforts to regain their lost ground. You did nobly in the late great contest. You won a glorious victory that sent a thrill of joy to Democratic and Liberal hearts throughout the land. There is still another great battle to be fought, and this is not for one state alone, but for the whole country, a battle for an honest and economical administration of affairs, against a terrible misrule. The world looked upon your action in October, with great interest Thousands of hearts were made glad at the victory you achieved. The poor of our land looked up with increased hope for the future. Laborers and mechanics, now almost begging for work, have been cheered by the result. Even the farmer, the most independent of all, sees the dawn of a better day, if this demand for a change is heeded. It can only be brought by the election of TILDEN. Then again we say stand by your guns, once more to the breach, and work inceasingly for Reform. See that every man is in line and every vote polled.

It May Save Your Life.

There is no person living but what suffers more or less with Lung Disease, Coughs, Colds or Consumption, yet some would die rather than to pay 75 cents for a bottle of medicine that would cure them. Dr. A. Boschee's German Syrup has lately been introduced in this country from Germany, and its wonderous cures astonishes every one that try it. If you doubt what we say in print, cut this out and take it to your Druggist, F. E. Davenport, and get a sample bottle for 10 cents and try it, or a regular size for 75 cents.

Trustees Appointment.

Notice is hereby given that J. E. Woodford has made a voluntary assignment of all his real and personal property in trust for the benefit of his creditors, under an act of the general assembly of the State of Indiana, apporved March 5th 1859 and acts amendatory thereto and that the undersigned has been duly appointed and qualified as such trustee.

THOS. H. SPROTT, Trustee.

Hays Don't Respond.

Just before the battle of Winchester a soldier named Leroy, of Wisconsin, gave Gen. Hayes, his commander, $1,000, asking that he send it to his father, giving Hayes the address, if he should be killed on the morrow. The next day Leroy was among the dead. Several of his comrads knew that Hayes had this money and supposed he sent it to Leroy's parents. Several years after the war one of these comrads being in Wisconsin heard the name of Leroy addressed to a gentleman and he asked the person if he had a son in the army. Leroy said he had, that he was killed at Winchester. After a long conversation the old soldier remarked, "Of course you got the money left by your son with Gen. Hayes." "Money, no, sir, I did not know my son left any." This supprised the soldier, and he told him all about it, having been present when Hayes received it. Mr. Leroy took a memoranda and wrote to Gen. Hayes, giving him the main points of this conversation. Hayes replied that he never knew any soldier by that name. Mr. Leroy was not satisfied. He wrote to Hayes again. Hayes replied, that he knew nothing about the matter and thought Leroy was trying to blackmail him. Leroy got the State officers of Wisconsin to certifiy to his good name, and wrote again. Hayes replied that he did remember a soldier by that name but that said soldier had never given him any money. Leroy still persisted and wrote a fourth time. Hayes responded that Leroy did give him some money, but that he paid it back again. These letters written by Hayes and Leroy have been published sometime, and yet Hayes fails to explain the matter. There is no doubt as the letters being genuine. Mr. Leroy has other witnesses that this money was paid to Hayes. He is a Republican, but he says cannot go for Heyes until he shows up in this affair.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

AN old physician, retired from active practice having had placed in his hands by and East India Missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy, for the speedy and permanent cure of consumption, bronchitis, catarrh, asthma, and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for nervous debility and all nervous complaints, after having thoroughly tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases feels it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a conscientious desire to relieve human suffering he will send free of charge to all who desire it this receipt with full directions for preparing and successfully using. Sent by return mail by addressing with stamp naming this paper.

J. C. Jackson, of Sedan, the popular jewelry and notion man, gave us a brief call yesterday.

Here is the verdict of a Kansas jury: "Died from a kick in the stomach from his wife, and he never knew what hurt him.

It is singular that every time a lot of Republicans get together now talking over the situation they generally wind up with something to stimulate.

NOTICE.

The firm of Totten & Bodine having this day dissolved partnership, by mutual consent, the firm will now be known as Bodine & Siler.

Repairs have been made on the Auburn House. Mr. Traxler keeps a good hotel, and is getting his share of the patronage.

All go to the ball to-night, and let the fellow who dances with the girl with "a hole in her stocking" make it known throughout the land.

The DeKalb County Teachers' Institute will meet at Auburn, Nov 6. We hope to have the usual full attendance.

J. A. BARNS, Co. Supt.

We hear on the street that one of Dr. Chamberlain's trotting horses was stolen last week and the thief was caught at Laporte.

Rev. Mr. Welsh baptised several ladies, at the creek, last Sunday. The day was pleant and a large crowd attended the sight.

D. D. Snyder, T. J. Cuppy and F. E. Davenport arrived last Monday from the Centennial. They report 100,000 people in daily attendance.

Weamer says both branches of the Legislation are Republican. Look again and notice that you are incorrect in your statement.

Mr. Klotz has just received a fine assortment of piece goods and nobby suits can now be had made in the best of style.

A. J. Nichols, in Bodine & Siler's drug store, is a practical jeweler. Any one having difficult jobs please give him a call.

Democratic watchword: "Peace and Reform

Republican watchword: Discord and Extravagance.

Married, October 12th, 1876, by Justice Walborn, Mr. Aaron W. Camp to Miss E. Husselman. All of DeKalb county.

Mr. Benedict will open out in his new store room next week. He will keep an extensive assortment of confections, &c in connection with a fine restaurant.

If you want a good, substantial job of horse shoeing done call on Johnny Knoder, at Shaffer's old stand on Main-st.—He shoes a span of horses for $3 and puts on steel corks.

The firm of Totten & Bodine has changed, Mr. Siler taking the place of Mr. Totten. They have a handsome store and keep a fine assortment of drugs, &c.

We learn Eugene Carter, son of our popular saloonist, lost the billiard badge of Ohio, he has so long been in posession of. He will hereafter make his home in this city.

The wild goose is occasionally heard in our midst. Pheasants and quail are said to be quite plenty, and the lovers of hunting are out nearly every day after them.

A party of hunters started in the vicinity of Spencerville last Tuesday and returned to-day. The weather was very unfavorable, but their luck was counted good.

Mr. Bender and family will return to Fort Wayne next week, their old home. A few years ago they located among us in tolerable good circumstances and are now leaving us almost pennyless.

Is there not cause for rejoicing, Democrats. Let our jubilation in November be over a redeemed nation. It can be done if every Democrat does his duty.—Columbia City Post.

"A bloody shirt campaign" in Indiana is played. So says the chairman of the Republican State Central Committee. It wasn't a winning card. Neither was Chandler's money bag.

Lookout for the fine burgains to be had in Boots and Shoes at Rayan's.—He has a fine stock of everything from a baby shoe up to No 14, and a fine assortment of each which he is selling very low for cash.

Bodine & Siler are now prepared to offer the most complete, well selected stock of Drugs, Patent Medicines, Oils, Soaps, Fancy Goods and notions in general ever brought to this market. Dont fail to call and see them.

The new school edifice is rapidly approaching completion. The floors are about made, and one coat of plastering already on. It is thought that it will be ready for occupancy by the first of next month.

The new church building now being constructed by the Presbyterians will be the handsomest and most commodious in town. We love to see things getting better and better rather than worse and worse like the present administration.

Two weeks after the election Weamer shouts a feeble victory, doubtless because they loose one Congressman over for years ago, one branch of "the legislature over four years ago, and a large majority of the State officers over four years ago. Hanged if we don't believe Weamer wants to swing around the circle.

STILL GROWING.

Five thousand, five hundred and forty five, is Williams official majority for Governor. Some of the State ticket run more than that.

The long nights are upon us and lamps will be needed. Mr. Zacher has just received a large line of these goods of all styles and prices. Call and see them.—Also a new stock of Queensware of every description very cheap.

Davis' Sewing Machine.

You who are contemplating buying a machine should not fail to see the DAVIS. Call at the drug store of Bodine & Siler.

When Hayes was pocketing the money of Leroy, Tilden was assisting the committees in New York in sending troops to the front, and spending time and money for the restoration of the union.

Hayes refuses to return the Leroy money, and from the published accounts the transaction is more infamous and contemptible than any they charged Belknap, Babcock, Boss Shepherd or any other Representative Republican.

During the first three years of Grant's administration nearly all of the Southern states were controlled by Radicals, who robbed them of nearly two hundred million dollars. The solid South against thieves is the result.

Ohio Democrats are not discourrged. Hayes is discouraged and crest fallen, while the Democrats are sanguine. The Cincinnati Enquirer says: Push on the fight. The Democrats of Ohio are encouraged and ready for the canvass.

The firm now Bodine & Siler have determined to come down to the cash system as we must keep replacing our stock. Therefore we will sell for cash only and will give you such low prices that will convince you that we must have the money when we sell.

The Republicans tried their hands at making a second Tippe-canoe out of Harrison. They were only partly successful—they got the canoe, but the Democrats tipped up their expectations, and now Harrison and the canoe have gone up salt river.

The Richland Township Sunday School Worker's Institute will hold its first quarterly Institute in the Lutheran Church at Sedan, Saturday Nov. 4th, '76 All friends of the Sunday School are cordially invited to attend. The Institute opens at 10 am.

L. W. TREESH, Pres.

A. J. Nichols wishes to inform the people of Auburn and vicinity that he has opened a first-class watch, clock and jewelry repair shop, in Bodine & Siler's drug store opposite the Swineford House. Parties wishing anything done in that line I would be pleased to have them call on me. Also fine engraving done.

A. J. Nichols, in Bodine & Siler's drug store, has a variety in the line of Jewelry having just returned from California. He brought with him an assortment of the famous Abalone Shells, which he manufactures into jewelry.—Anyone wishing something that everybody has not got can get it there.

The Grant-Hayes party are not finding that 20,000 majority in Ohio, as they claimed. They may have Barnes and their State ticket by a small majority; but all the signs indicate Tilden, Hendricks and Reform in November. The people want a change Grantism is a stench in the nostrils of honest citizens.

Weamer says probably the six or eight hundred copies sent to Noble county and the hundred sent into Steuben Co. "done so and so." Weamer's circulation at home must be very small, for all he issued that week did not amount to as much as the regular weekly edition of the COURIER, and it only has about a thousand.

"Oh, of course, West Virginia goes Democratic," says the Republican papers. But why "of course?" West Virginia voted for Grant in 1868, Grant in 1872, and against the regular Democratic ticket at the last gubernatorial election. Mr. Zachariah Chandler also placed it in the "sure for Hayes" column only a couple of months ago. Why this thusness?

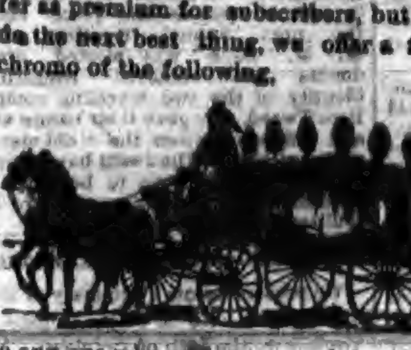
The "Kangaroo" is elected Governor of Indiana by about 4,000 majority. Don't we Hoosiers feel proud?—Elkhart Review.

Yes, don't "we Hoosiers" feel proud that we have among the editorial fraternity "little creatures" so lost to every sense of propriety as to designate our Governor-elect a "kangaroo," simply because he happens to be a hard-working farmer and a plain citizen?—Ligonier Banner.

The Waterloo Press is somewhat exercised over the fact that Keyser has more votes than Waterloo. She beats us too, Charley, but that don't make us a bit mad. In fact we like Keyser better than ever before, because she gave a good Democratic majority. That's what hurts Baxter. We are as much opposed to illegal voting as any one, but when one side indulges as much as the other, if there was any indulgence at all, we don't like to see either side squeal. If you are just a little bit patient now, Charley, you will get used to that Democratic majority in a few years.

SPECIAL INDUCEMENTS.

We have no Harper and Mower to offer as premium for subscribers, but we do the next best thing, we offer a fine chromo of the following.



to any one who will get us a club of ten thousand subscribers. We put it down low so that anybody can make the effort if they don't succeed.

The Republicans expect to carry New York because the Tweed ring and Canal ring, will be for Hayes. They count largely on the influence of these rings, and yet some of their speakeas say Tilden was connected with these rings.

The Democracy of DeKalb can go up head. They did nobly, electing their entire county ticket, and making a gain on Governor over the vote of 1872 of 156. Tom, we congratulate you.—[Columbia City Post.

Thank you, and in return we can rejoice with you in the thorough work of gallant Whitley, in cleaning out the rings that have had sway there for two years past.

We forgot to speak of the fine artillery company from Defiance, which visited our place just before the election. They were as jolly, clever, respectable a set of boys as ever threw a shell or jerked a ramrod. They conducted themselves like gentlemen and were much admired by our citizens especially the ladies. We fell in love with one of the Sergeants and let him ride White Stockings.

Weamer says, "what would an enlightened people think of a man that would publicly insult a lady." We would think more of him than of the man who would stand by and know that lady to be his wife. Mr. Moody is too much of a gentleman to do that, but if he did, and it was not resented then and there, we would hardly make a pitiable attempt through a paper to defend ourself.

The present condition of affairs in South Carolina is a gross outrage on the constitution and laws of the land.—Journal.

For once the Journal is correct. The order of Chamberlain for the whites to throw down their arms and quietly submit to being slaughtered while the power of Federal bayonets is brought to bear to enforce submission, is indeed a great outrage upon the constitution and laws of the land.—Sentinel.

Democrats, you are welcome to the glory of voting for and electing Blue Jeans Williams, Governor of the State of Indiana. No Republican desires such glory.

The Standard says the above, indicating that it is a little bit "riled" yet. It don't want any glory for the very thing it fought against. The fable of the sour grapes is in order. Of course we are welcome to the glory, for did we not accomplish it, against the united effort of the Republican party?

We understand that our accomplished minister, of the Baptist Church, Rev. W. L. Sanders, will give a course of lectures in Ohio, the first week in November, among which will be his celebrated discourse "Backbone," which has already been delivered in the leading cities in the north-west. He has consented to give it here on the 9th of November, at the close of the Teachers Institute, and we would advise those spinally affected to turn out and be benefited.

That 300 Tilden Club.

Some of our Republican friends are circulating the story that a Tilden club of 300 in New York, hearing of the election of "Blue Jeans," immediately turned over for Hayes. We wrote to New York to a friend and an honorable gentman, Smith Ely, Jr., who was nominated last week for Mayor of New York, and he says he has made earnest inquiry and has failed to find any fact to corroborate any such statement, and that he has no doubt of its absolute falsity, like a hundred other campaign lies invented by the enemy to blind the people, in regard to Tilden. So much for that lie.

When you hear a Democrat rejoicing over the election in this State, ask him what they have gained to rejoice over.—Kendallville Standard.

Well, to enumerate, we have elected honest Old Blue Jeans, over a kid gloved lawyer, the best man the Republicans had in the State, as an available candidate. We have increased our majority since 1872, from 1,148 to 5,545 We have elected the entire State ticket. We have one more Democratic Congressman than we had in 1872. We have half of the State Senate, and have reduced the Republican majority over that of 1872. And above everything else, we have an expression from the voters of the State that they are for reform, for a change from a corrupt administration to one of purity and economy.

A. Toten will still attend to filling all prescriptions and compounding medicines in the most careful and reliable manner at Bodine.

THE DIFFERENCE.

The last Republican House of Representatives appropriated $15,500,000 in excess of the estimates of the amounts needed by the respective Departments to carry on the Government. As a contrast to this, the first Democratic House of Representatives has appropriated $40,000,000 less than the estimates. The difference in favor of Democratic economy and retrenchment is therefore $55,500,000.

The Republican leaders don't want any change. Why, they laugh at the idea. They have all the offices in their control, and are working hard to retain them, while the Democracy goes before the people on the great principle of Retrenchment and Reform. Hayes has never uttered a word in favor of Reform. They ignore the demand of the people, and now the people must look to Tilden as the only chance to bring it about. If elected, he is bound by the most solemn pledges to bring about this Reform.

Not one Republican Congressman in the State got the half of 5,000 majority. Not one Democratic Congressman got less than 5,000. The four Democratic Congressmen had 7,000 majority over the nine Republican Congressmen, which shows that the Radicals redistricted this State so that a majority of the voters would only get four while they got 9 members.

It is quietly told, we know, but then its too good to keep. We wont say anything about names. Mr. ——, went to the Centennial. When he arrived in Philadelphia and after taking a glass of beer or two, he proceeded to what he understood to be the Centennial grounds Passing where the famous circus is located in the suburbs of the city, he was just in shape to look upon that as the great show. He purchased a half dollar ticket and went in and saw nothing but a circus. He supposed that was the whole thing, so after staying around the city several days enjoying the good beer which is found in the quaker city, he started for and arrived at home alright. He was asked how he liked the great Centennial, "Oh, first-rate, but it aint any better than any other circus" was his comprehensive reply. Snyder can tell you all about it.

Our Republican friends claim a victory in Indiana on Congressmen. Well, over two years ago, such would be the case, but a presidential year should be compared with the same kind of a campaign last past. To get a correct footing we must go back to 1872, when a Governor was elected, and not compare with an off year, when a full vote is never polled. In 1872, Hendricks was elected, but the Republican Lieut. Governor, Secretary, Auditor, Treasurer and Reporter of Supreme Court were elected, the Democrats practically loosing their State ticket. This year we carry the ticket clean through by majorities ranging from 5,545 to 8,000. Is that not a gain? As to Congressmen, in 1872 the Republicans had ten members and the Democrats three. This year we elected four against nine. Is that not a gain? Next, the Legislature in 1872 was Republican and elected Morton to the Senate. This year 25 out of 50, of the Senators are Democrats. Take it all in all it is a great victory, one that Democrats may well be proud of.

"A Better Government can be secured under proper economy, with all unnecessary and improper leakages stopped, than under a system of extravagance which tends to make all public officers indifferent and reckless. This is the true secret of administrative Reform. In New York we are running the Government for little more than half what it cost two years ago, and the work is at least as efficiently done."—Governor Tilden.

Five Minutes 'Till Nine.

We have some fast young men; regular timers. Last week, one evening, he put on a boiled shirt, parted his hair in the middle and waltzed off to spend a while with his Jane. Jane was out of whack that night because the kitten had carried her switch into the potato patch. This young man entered the rear door of that Jackson street cottage and wrang the bell. She said, "come on," in a low voice. A few minutes past, more like hours to the young gent, and she had finished washing the supper dishes. The short, but sweet, conversation then took place:

"Nice evening, Jennie. Lets stroll down Main?"

"Harry, how long will it take you to walk home?"

"About five minutes, little one. Any thing you want me to do?"

"Yes, there is something I want you to do, you bet. What time is it now?"

He went down into his hip pocket and said that his time piece was at home, but looking at a clock on the wall he said:

"Its just five minutes 'till nine, my own dear Jane."

She stepped to the door, held it ajar, and said:

"Well, young kid, git up and git and you will be at home in good time. Say your prayers before you snooze off and come again when you can't stay so long."

She'll be at the ball to-night with another feller.

Corunna Items.

—Mrs. Slayman is confined to her bed with sickness.

—L. D. Britton and others have started to the Centennial. Only a few at this place have gone as yet.

—We did'nt see Joe, but a little boy standing on the bridge told us that he'd gone to vote and was waiting 'till they counted out—him out he meant.

—Kade MacMillin has charge of the telegraph office. Mike don't come around much any more. He'll operate in the Recorders office after this month, you know.

—A new millinery shop has been opened out in Park's old stand, and quite a large stock is kept on hand. The gals can now spread on "the jockey hat and feather."

—The agent, L. Miller, Esq., was compelled to hire extra hands last Sunday to fill cars with grain. Orin thought Sunday work was thin. He believes in remembering the Sabbath day and keeping it holy, but he worked all the same.

—The boys have organized a Brass Band, all new instruments. They are doing splendidly thus far, and we hope to see them ere long up with the best on 'em. It is said it takes lots of lip to play a horn. If you run out, boys, get some of Joe—not the horn, the lip.

—Lafe Miller has purchased a Lexington running colt. It's a clipper and can get up and git with any 'o them. Lafe has ways more like a granger than one who would delight in fast stock, but his ways deceive him. He has more life and fun now than all the boys in the town.

—Dr. Mercer has sold his stock of drugs to Mr. Charley Knapp, who will continue the business at the old place. The Dr represents him to be fully qualified for the business, and with his excellent habits and fine business qualities he is certain of success. The Doctor will leave many warm friends and a large number of patrons who will miss him while he serves as Senator.

—It is a positive fact that this little village handles more grain than Auburn and Waterloo put together, and you can count Garrett in too if you want to.—Farmers that live south of this town take wheat to Corunna. Why is this? Is it because they pay more for it?—There's a nigger in the woodpile somewhere. Last week they were paying $1.15 at Corunna and the other towns $1 Brace up, pull down your vest, and keep pace with that little burg

—Last week two dwelling houses were destroyed by fire. It originated as of old—through carlessness. The lady of house, Mrs. ———, had taken ashes, —we mean live coals—from the stove and when sitting them down got the ash bucket as close as possible to the house. After a short time she took up her knitting and went over to chat with a neighbor. The boys yelping "fire, fire" soon brought a crowd and by an earnest effort on the part of the citizens several buildings near by were saved. Corunna could't stand it to have more than 400 or 500 dwellings burn down. It would make rents rather high.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

A frightful row occurred the other day at the grounds of the Westchester County Driving Park Association, near New York city, which resulted in one man being shot in the arm, another having his skull badly fractured by a bludgeon, a third being stabbed in the neck and a fourth having the muscles of one of his hands severed, while several others are reported more or less injured. It seems a negro, employed on the grounds, got drunk and took possession of the liquor stall, when a free fight, with the results stated, followed.... The Centennial people are preparing an elaborate programme of ceremonies to be observed on closing up the big show.... An express train from Fall River for Boston, on the Old Colony railroad, came in collision, a few mornings ago, with a local freight train at Randolph, Mass. Two engines of the express train and the engine of the freight train, with the baggage and crate cars were completely wrecked. The engineers and firemen of the three locomotives were killed, and several passengers injured.

A dreadful murder took place in the woods near Pittsburgh, Pa., one night last week. Henry Schaffer, a cattle dealer, was found dead, with the top of his head crushed in so that the brains protruded, and the left side of the face battered dreadfully with a heavy stone. The pockets had been rifled of their contents, the boots removed from the feet, and hat, vest and boots carried away. Suspicion rested on Henry Lenkner, partner in business with Schaffer, and he has been placed under arrest.....Gen. Rufus King, for many years a prominent citizen of Milwaukee, died in New York last week. He was the grandson of Gen. Rufus King, first United States Senator from New York, and was a graduate of West Point. Leaving the army in 1836, he became editor of the Albany Advertiser, and in 1840 accepted an editorial position, which he filled for five years, on the Albany Evening Journal, and was Adjutant General of the State under Gov. Seward. In 1845 he removed to Milwaukee, and became part owner and editor of the Sentinel and Gazette, which he retained until 1861, when Mr. Lincoln appointed him Minister to Rome. He was on the steamer, ready for sailing, when news came of the firing on Sumter. He at once left the steamer, resigned his position, was made a Brigadier General, and for a time was in command of the First Division of the First Corps of the Army of the Potomac. His health failing, he resigned from the army, in 1862, and in 1863 was again appointed Minister to Rome, and remained there until the abolition of the mission in 1868....A desperate conflict between tramps and drunken miners occurred near Shomokin, Pa., a few days ago. The fight lasted several hours, and resulted in the death of four of the participants—Nick Taylor, Joe Lordner, George Grady and John Dugan, alias the "Big Bully." The first two were tramps, and the other two miners.

A New York telegram of the 18th says: "European advices concerning the Turko-Servian war created a great deal of excitement during the day on the Produce Exchange, legitimate sales being made at the wheat table of nearly 500,000 bushels, purchased mostly for export and speculation. The telegraph was surrounded by an eager crowd of telegraph operators, who bought or sold on options between 10,000,000 and 12,000,000 of bushels. Wheat advanced 5 to 6 cents. A considerable amount of money changed hands among the operators. Many small fortunes of $10,000 and $25,000 were made and lost during the day, which was the most active for some years."

The French residents of New York have appointed a numerous committee to solicit subscriptions among the Franco-American population of the United States for the completion of the colossal statue of Liberty....A man named Sam Benners, who is believed to have been connected with the disappearance of little Charley Ross, was arrested the other day in Philadelphia. At first Benners denied all knowledge of Charley Ross. He was given another hearing by the authorities, and this time he confessed that he knew all about the missing boy; that he was in Pennsylvania, and had never been out of it; that he was not many miles from the city, and that he (Benners) had seen him about three weeks previously. Benners is still in custody, but he will not tell where the boy is.

THE WEST.

Frank James, one of the Missouri bandits, was arrested last week at the residence of Dr. Noland, ten miles west of Kansas City. Pinkerton's detectives, five in number, surrounded the house and made the capture without any excitement save such as the female portion of the family manifested. Frank was at the doctor's under treatment for a gunshot wound in one of his knees, received in Minnesota.... There is some show of activity in military circles in the Black Hills country, and some necessity for it, too, judging from the numerous reports of Indian depredations in that region. Gen. Merritt, with 500 soldiers, has started on an expedition, the destination of which has not been made known, though it is supposed there is a party of hostiles somewhere among the Hills who can be induced to wait for the troops to come and fight them.... The Chicago Journal of Friday says: Mr. McVicker has gone to New York to prepare the Lyceum for the engagement of Edwin Booth. Meanwhile he is catering well for Chicago. We are promised five weeks of opera before the 1st of January; the introduction of Miss Anderson, who is making quite a stir in the theatrical firmament; and also the production of a grand spectacle for the holidays. McVicker has always been fully up to the demand of the times, and seems fully determined to make Chicago a "center" for the legitimate drama.

A horrible murder has been perpetrated at Michigan City, Ind. A German laborer by the name of John Schultz cut the throats of his wife and two children, then cut his own throat and hung himself. The wife and children (a boy about 8 years and a girl 3 years old) were found in bed with their throats cut from ear to ear; the father with his throat cut and hanging in the next room. A letter written in German was found, saying: "They have tried to kill me, and now I will kill them." The cause is supposed to be fear of want, although $28 was found in his pocket.... The business and fashionable circles of Springfield, Ohio, were thrown into a fever of excitement the other day, by the suicide of Frank W. Deshler, the well-known teller of the Franklin National Bank, of that city, and one of the prominent leaders in fashionable social life. At first it was thought by some that financial troubles might have induced this sudden taking off, but examination of the bank books speedily dissipated such an idea. It was then discovered that domestic infelicity was the only reason for the rash act....A Salt Lake dispatch of the 15th says: "The Ann Eliza vs. Brigham Young case came up before Judge Shaefer to-day, who decided that unless the money previously adjudged the plaintiff was paid in ten days an attachment should issue to bring defendant into court for contempt. Even bets are made that Brigham will not pay the alimony decree, and will go to jail. His lawyers have exhausted all their legal powers to save him, and, unless the Lord comes to his aid, it is likely to be a hard case with the old man."....Twenty head of horses and mules were recently stolen from the Government camp, near Custer City, Wyoming, by a Mexican and white man. A detachment of soldiers trailed and overtook the thieves on the following day, and after a desperate fight succeeded in killing both and recapturing eleven head of stock.

A large number of citizens of Indianapolis have been arrested and will be prosecuted for betting on the recent election.

Gen. Terry's command, consisting of the Seventh Cavalry and a small force of mounted infantry, followed by a wagon train conveying supplies, left Fort Lincoln on the 19th inst. Its object is understood to be co-operation with Col. Merritt, moving from Custer City, Black Hills, in an attack upon the large hostile camp believed to be located near the fork of the Cheyenne river.... Chicago elevators, as per official figures, contain 1,891,843 bushels of wheat; 2,044,444 bushels of corn; 595,317 bushels of oats; 181,918 bushels of rye, and 758,263 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 5,424,784 bushels, against 2,841,986 bushels at this period last year.....The man recently arrested by St. Louis detectives at the residence of one Dr. Noland, near Kansas City, Mo., and supposed to be Frank James, turns out to be John Goodwin, a respectable and law-abiding citizen. It is said he will bring suit against the city of St. Louis for heavy damages for false imprisonment.

A Cheyenne dispatch says that almost every hour brings news of new depredations by Indians upon ranchmen located west and north of the Chug. A large body of Indians are encamped at the head of the North Laramie, distant from Fort Laramie fifty miles....An embassy from Sitting Bull visited Fort Peck the other day, and presented a modest request that his warriors be permitted to visit the post for the purpose of buying ammunition....A dispatch from Yuma, Arizona, says that ground was broken Oct. 18, on the Texas Pacific railroad, on both sides of the Colorado river. The work will be vigorously prosecuted both east and west.

A man named Kavanagh, who lately returned to St. Paul from the Black Hills, thinks about half those in that region reported killed by the Indians are killed by whites, and the miners are in more danger from robbers than from regular scalp-takers.

THE SOUTH.

The emergency in the yellow fever ravages of the Southern coast cities is passed, word having been sent from most of them that further aid is not needed, as the epidemic is subsiding rapidly, under the influence of frosty nights. All humane people will heartily rejoice that this terrible visitant of the South has been thus checked without reaching the devastating proportions of some previous years....Gen. Ruger, commander of the Department of the South, arrived in Columbia, S. C., last week. He had a long consultation with Gov. Chamberlain and with the Chairman of the Democratic State Committee, and assured them both that as far as it was in his power he would secure in South Carolina a fair and honest election. He would, he said, protect Democrats and Republicans alike.

The reports of the Department of Agriculture indicate a reduction of the condition of cotton during the past month in the ten principal cotton States, from an average of 92.2 to 88.2. The figures for the condition of the States are as follows: North Carolina, 84; South Carolina, 80; Georgia, 85; Florida, 80; Alabama, 70; Mississippi, 88; Louisiana, 82; Texas, 91; Arkansas, 86; Tennessee, 94.

Louisville, Ky., was last week visited by the most destructive fire the city has experienced in many years. Several large wholesale establishments were swept away, involving a loss of at least $600,000.

As a quantity of converted steel was being poured into an ingot mold at the Vulcan Steel Works, in South St. Louis, last week, the mold burst, scattering the melted steel in every direction. A large number of men were working in that part of the building at that time, six of whom were badly burned and otherwise injured, two of them perhaps fatally.

POLITICAL.

Complete official returns of the Indiana election give the Republicans fifty-three members of the House of Representatives, the Democrats forty-five, and the Independents two. This gives the Republicans two majority on joint ballot over the Democrats and Independents. The official majority of Williams over Harrison is 5,424.

Fernando Wood and Abram S. Hewitt have been renominated for Congress by the Democrats of New York city.

The official vote of Ohio, at the October election, gives Barnes, Republican candidate for Secretary of State, a majority of 6,632....The official vote of Indiana on Governor (except Stark county, estimated) is as follows: The total vote of the State is 433,403, of which Williams received 213,098, Harrison 207,979, and Harrington 12,226. Williams' plurality over Harrison is 5,119. The official majorities on the Congressional vote is as follows: Democratic—First District, 1,569; Second, 5,153; Third, 5,460; Twelfth, 6,385. Republican—Fourth District, 332; Fifth, 1,509; Sixth, 276; Seventh, 1,398; Eighth, 1,100; Ninth, 1,410; Tenth, 1,148; Eleventh, 1,448; Thirteenth, 2,022. The Independent vote for Congress is as follows: First District, 1,240; Second, 944; Third, 1,034; Fourth, 378; Fifth, 9; Sixth, 816; Seventh, 1,595; Eighth, 4,760; Ninth, 3,349; Tenth, 26; Eleventh, nothing; Twelfth, 675; Thirteenth, 186.

Since the surrender of Tweed, some informal action has been taken with a view to negotiate an extradition treaty between the United States and Spain....The rush of Centennial pilgrims to Mount Vernon has so enriched the Association as to enable it to pay all its debts and to leave besides a handsome sum for further improvement of the grounds and surroundings.

Francis Preston Blair, Senior, the father of Montgomery and Gen. Frank P. Blair, died in Washington last week at the age of 87.... Orders have been issued for various detached bodies of troops to report to Gen. Ruger at Columbia, S. C. Gen. Sherman states that the available force in the Military Division of the Atlantic will not exceed 5,000 men....The McPherson statue was unveiled last week with imposing ceremonies.

GENERAL.

Martin Farquhar Tupper, the English poet and philosopher, is now on a visit to this country....James Ryan, a wealthy merchant of Peterboro, Ontario, has been sentenced to death for the murder of his wife.

The quarterly circular on the business outlook for the past nine months has just been issued by R. G. Dun & Co., of New York. It will create surprise and some disappointment to learn from figures which it contains that mercantile failures throughout the United States for the past three months, 2,448 in number, show an increase over those of the second quarter of the year equal to 25 per cent. The amount of liabilities involved in the failures of the third quarter of the year show a decrease in proportion to the number of failures reported. The average amounts of liabilities for each failure in the last quarter is $19,500, against $24,300 in the preceding quarter, and against $30,600 in the corresponding quarter of last year. Taking a range of the whole seven quarters of the two years thus far elapsed, the indebtedness involved in each failure of the past three months is $5,000 less than for the quarter preceding. A comparison of the past nine months of 1876 with those of 1875 is not at all cheering, as will be seen by the following:

	Failures.	Liabilities.
First nine months of 1876	7,050	$156,272,000
First nine months of 1875	5,334	131,172,000
Increase	1,716	$25,100,000

The expelled students refused to [illegible] to save other students from being expelled for "hazing," for which there is the additional penalty of being "cashiered." The expelled cadets may be reinstated, but a "cashiered hazer" cannot.

The Society of the Army of the Tennessee, at their recent annual meeting in Washington, elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President, Gen. Sherman; Vice Presidents, Gens. Logan, Cole, Woodworth, M. D., Mel. Powell, Gen. W. T. Clark, Col. Know, Capt. Gill, Capt. Hand, L. T. Stevenson, Maj. W. B. Moore, Maj. Spear, and Capt. Laid; Corresponding Secretary, Gen. Hickenlooper; Treasurer, Gen. Force. St. Paul, Minn., Sept. 6, was chosen as the place and time of the next annual meeting, and Gen. M. M. Bane was elected orator....All doubts are removed concerning the identity of the two traveling companions of Boss Tweed, who gave their names as "Hunt" and "Sands" when the "old man" was arrested at Vigo. The twain have arrived in New York, and they prove to be what they were claimed to be at the time, Richard Tweed and William King.

THE OCTOBER ELECTIONS.

We present below a summary of the result of the elections held in Ohio, Indiana and West Virginia on the 10th of October:

OHIO.

STATE OFFICERS.

Milton Barnes, W. W. Boynton and James C. Evans, the Republican candidates, respectively, for Secretary of State, Supreme Judge, and member of the Board of Public Works, are elected by majorities ranging from 6,000 to 10,000.

CONGRESSMEN.

The result of the election for members of Congress is as follows—Republicans in roman, Democrats in italic:

District.		District.
1.	Milton Sayler.	11.	*Henry S. Neal.
2.	H. B. Banning.	12.	Thomas Ewing.

*Gain.

Andrew Humphreys and Nathan T. Carr, Democrats, were elected for the short Congressional terms in the Second and Third Districts, to fill the vacancies caused by the resignation of Governor-elect Williams and the death of Speaker Kerr.

WEST VIRGINIA.

The following State officers were elected in West Virginia by about 12,000 majority. They are all Democrats:

Governor—Henry M. Matthews.
School Superintendent—W. K. Pendleton.
Auditor—Joseph C. Miller.
Treasurer—Thomas J. West.

Members of Congress will not be chosen in West Virginia until Nov. 7.

FOREIGN.

A cable dispatch informs us that the Russian Government has determined to issue a loan of 300,000,000 roubles. This, in connection with the Czar's outspoken and undisguised sympathy for the Sclavic portion of the population of the Turkish provinces, carries with it a more pronounced flavor of war than has heretofore manifested itself in connection with the Eastern difficulty....A telegram from Madrid states that the Bishop of Minorca has issued a new circular enjoining on the masters of primary schools not to admit the sons of Protestants and other dissenters.

The European news is decidedly warlike, and indicates unmistakably the early precipitation of active hostilities between Russia and Turkey. Russia has not been idle during the discussion of the armistice proposal. Quietly but rapidly she has been engaged in gigantic preparations for the great struggle. Arrangements have been completed for massing an army of 250,000 men upon the Turkish frontier, the Roumanian railway companies having engaged to transport Russian troops at the rate of at least 25,000 daily. England is bestirring herself to be in readiness for her part in the bloody business whenever that part shall have been defined by the unfolding of events. An autumnal session of Parliament is to be convened; the Government has applied to the Lloyds for ships for the transportation of troops to the Mediterranean; and three army corps have been ordered to be in readiness for the voyage. A London dispatch says: "All Russians in Paris under the age of 40 have been ordered home. The new Russian ironclad Peter the Great is to leave Cronstadt immediately for the Mediterranean. Russia has issued a circular note announcing that, in the interests of humanity, she feels bound to march troops into Bulgaria and Armenia. There are 82,000 men at the camp of Bender, and 64,000 around Tiflis. Austria's Eastern policy will conform to that of Russia and Germany."

SOUTH CAROLINA.

A Proclamation by the President.

Whereas, It has been satisfactorily shown to me that insurrection and domestic violence exist in several counties of the State of South Carolina, and that certain combinations of men against the law exist in many counties of said State known as "rifle clubs," who ride up and down by day and night in arms murdering some peaceable citizens and intimidating others, which combinations, though forbidden by the laws of the State, cannot be controlled or suppressed by the ordinary course of justice; and

Whereas, It is provided in the Constitution of the United States that the United States shall protect every State in this Union on application of the Legislature, or of the Executive when the Legislature cannot be convened, against domestic violence; and

Whereas, In pursuance of the above it is provided in the laws of the United States that in all cases of insurrection in any State, or of the obstruction to the laws thereof, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States, on application of the Legislature of such State, or of the Executive when the Legislature cannot be convened, to call for the militia of any other State or States, or to employ such part of the land and naval force as shall be judged necessary for the purpose of suppressing such insurrection, or causing the laws to be duly executed; and

Whereas, The Legislature of said State is not now in session, and cannot be convened in time to meet the present emergency, and the Executive of said State, under Sec. 4 of Art. 2 of the constitution and laws passed in pursuance thereof, has therefore made due application to me in the premises for such part of the military force of the United States as may be necessary and adequate to protect such State and the citizens thereof against domestic violence, and enforce the due execution of the laws; and

Whereas, It is required that whenever it may be necessary in the judgment of the President to use military force for the purpose aforesaid, he shall forthwith by proclamation command such insurgents to disperse and return peaceably to their respective homes within a limited time;

Now, therefore, I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States, do hereby make proclamation and command all persons engaged in such unlawful and insurrectionary proceedings to disperse and retire peaceably to their respective abodes within three days from this date, and hereafter abandon said combinations and submit themselves to the laws and constituted authorities of said State, and I invoke the aid and co-operation of all good citizens thereof to uphold the laws and preserve the public peace.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington, this 17th day of October, in the year of our Lord 1876, and of the independence of the United States one hundred and one.

[L. S.] U. S. Grant.

By the President: John L. Cadwallader,
Acting Secretary of State.

Order of the Secretary of War.

War Department,
Washington City, Oct. 17, 1876.

Gen. W. T. Sherman, Commanding United States Army:

Sir: In view of the existing condition of affairs in South Carolina, there is a possibility that the proclamation of the President of this date may be disregarded. To provide against such a contingency, you will immediately order all the available force in the Military Division of the Atlantic to report to Gen. Ruger, commanding at Columbia, S. C., and instruct that officer to station his troops in such localities that they may be most speedily and effectually used in case of resistance to the authority of the United States. It is hoped that a collision may thus be avoided; but you will instruct Gen. Ruger to let it be known that it is the fixed purpose of the Government to carry out the spirit of the proclamation, and to sustain it by the military force of the General Government, supplemented, if necessary, by the militia of the various States. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. D. Cameron,
Secretary of War.

Why Are Civilized Races White?

Some very curious physiological facts bearing upon the presence or absence of white colors in the higher animals have lately been adduced by Dr. Ogle. It has been found that a colored or dark pigment in the olfactory region of the nostrils is essential to perfect smell, and this pigment is rarely deficient except when the whole animal is pure white. In these cases the creature is almost without smell or taste. This, Dr. Ogle believes, explains the curious case of the pigs in Virginia adduced by Mr. Darwin, white pigs being poisoned by a poisonous root which does not affect black pigs. White sheep are killed in the Tarentino by eating hypericum ertscum, while black sheep escape; white rhinoceroses are said to perish from eating euphorbia candelabrum; and white horses are said to suffer from poisonous food where colored ones escape. The explanation has, however, been carried a step further, by experiments showing that the absorption of odors by dead matter, such as clothing, is greatly affected by color, black being the most powerful absorbent, then blue, red, yellow, and lastly white. For few, if any, wild animals are wholly white. The head, the face, or least the muzzle or the nose, are generally black. The ears and eyes are also often black; and there is reason to believe that dark pigment is essential to good hearing, as it certainly is to perfect vision. We can, therefore, understand why white cats with blue eyes are so deaf—a peculiarity we notice more readily than their deficiency of smell or taste. But though inapplicable to the lower animals, this curious relation of sense-acuteness with colors may have had some influence on the development of the higher human races. If light tints of the skin were generally accompanied by some deficiency in the senses of smell, hearing and vision, the white could never compete with the darker races, so long as man was in a very low or savage condition, and wholly dependent for existence on the acuteness of his senses. But as the mental faculties became more fully developed and more important to his welfare than mere sense-acuteness, the lighter tints of the skin, and hair, and eyes, would cease to be disadvantageous whenever they were accompanied by superior brain-power.—A. R. Wallace at the British Association.

Sir William Thomson on the Center of the Earth.

A remarkable address has been delivered by Sir William Thomson, in the Physical Section of the British Association, on the subject of the fluid or solid nature of the earth's kernel.

While not denying that certain portions of the earth's interior are in a molten or fluid state, Sir William Thomson maintained, on various more or less recondite grounds, that no large proportion of the earth's interior can, by any possibility, be in the condition of molten fluid. "I may say, with almost perfect certainty, that whatever may be the relative densities of rock, solid and melted, at or about the temperature of liquefaction, it is, I think, quite certain that cold solid rock is denser than hot melted rock; and no possible degree of rigidity in the crust could prevent it from breaking in pieces and sinking wholly below the liquid lava. Something like this may have gone on, and probably did go on, for thousands of years after solidification commenced—surface portions of the melted material losing heat, freezing and sinking immediately, or growing to the thickness of a few meters where the surface would be cool, and the whole solid dense enough to sink. This process must go on until the sunk portions of the crust build up from the bottom a sufficiently close-ribbed skeleton or frame to allow fresh incrustations to remain, bridging across the now small areas of lava pools or lakes."

That is a striking picture of the growth of the "round earth," which was once supposed to have been made from the first "so fast that it cannot be moved." We are rather sorry to be robbed of the belief in the central lava ocean after all.—London Spectator.

Honors to Canine Sagacity.

There is a native dog in Newfoundland now 16 years old. He is gray and his fangs have fallen out; but he is provided with a cozy kennel and food that does not need much mastication. Around his neck is a glazed collar bearing three medals, one of silver and two of gold. One of the latter is from the Royal Humane Society of England, the other is the gift of an American Captain, and the silver medal is from a former Mother Superior of St. Michael's Convent in St. John's. All three are testimonials in recognition of the animal's sagacity in saving lives.—Toronto Globe.

Well Done.—A good work is being done by the new Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, which has established active branches in most of the large cities in the United States. In Oakland, Cal., a 4-year old child used in circus feats has been rescued, and another in Washington.

While a well-digger named Welch was tamping a charge of powder in a well he was digging in Llano county, Tex., the other day, the blast exploded driving the tamping-rod through his heart.

BULGARIAN ATROCITIES.

More Horrid Cruelties—Destroying Over 1,000 Persons in a Church.

(From the London Times.)

The next part of the report deals with the case of Barak—the most fearful tragedy that happened during the whole insurrection.

The Medjliss of Tatar Bazarjik, hearing that preparations for revolt were going on in this village, ordered Achmet Agha, of Dospat, to attack it, and this individual, having joined his forces with Mohammed Agha, of Dorkeva, proceeded to carry out these orders. On arriving at the village, he summoned the inhabitants to give up their arms, which, as they mistrusted him, they refused to do, and a desultory fight succeeded, which lasted two days, hardly any loss being inflicted on either side.

On the 8th of May the inhabitants, seeing that things were going badly with them, and that no aid came from without, had a parley with Achmet, who solemnly swore that if they only gave up their arms not a hair of their heads should be touched. A certain number of the inhabitants, luckily for them, took advantage of this parley to make their escape.

The villagers believed Achmet's oath, and surrendered their arms; but this demand was followed by one for all the money in the village, which, of course, had also to be acceded to. No sooner was the money given up than the Bashi-Bazouks set upon the people and slaughtered them like sheep. A large number of people, probably about 1,000 or 1,200, took refuge in the church and churchyard, the latter being surrounded by a wall. The church itself is a solid building, and resisted all the attempts of the Bashi-Bazouks to burn it from the outside; they consequently fired in through the windows, and, getting upon the roof, tore off the tiles, and threw burning pieces of wood and rags dipped in petroleum among the mass of unhappy human beings inside. At last the door was forced in, the massacre completed, and the inside of the church burned. Hardly any escaped out of these fatal walls.

The only survivor I could find was one old woman, who alone remained out of a family of seven. When the door was broken in and she was expecting immediate death, a Turk took her by the hand, and saying, "Come old woman, I am not going to hurt you," led her away and saved her life. The spectacle which the church and churchyard present must be seen to be described; hardly a corpse has been burried; where a man fell there he now lies, and it is with difficulty that one picks one's way to the door of the church, the entrance of which is barred by a ghastly corpse stretched across the threshold. I visited this valley of the shadow of death on the 31st of July, more than two months and a half after the massacre, but still the stench was so overpowering that one could hardly force one's way into the churchyard.

In the streets at every step lay human remains, rotting and sweltering in the summer sun—here the skull of an old woman, with the gray hair still attached to it; there the false tress of some unhappy girl, slashed in half by a yataghan, the head which it adorned having probably been carried off to be devoured by some of the dogs, who up to this have been the only scavengers. Just outside the village I counted more than sixty skulls in a little hollow, and it was evident from their appearance that nearly all of them had been severed from the bodies by axes and yataghans. From the remains of female wearing apparel scattered about, it is plain that many of the persons here massacred were women.

It is to be feared, also, that some of the richer villagers were subjected to cruel tortures before being put to death, in hopes that they would reveal the existence of hidden treasure. Thus Petro Triandaphyllos and Pope Necio were roasted, and Stoyan Stoychoff had his ears, nose, hands and feet cut off. Enough, I think, has been said to show that to Achmet Agha and his men belongs the distinction of having committed, perhaps, the most heinous crime that has stained the history of the present century, Nina Sahib alone, I should say, having rivalled their deeds. As regards the number of killed, I have before stated that about 5,000 is my estimate. I am aware that others place it higher, but be this as it may, whether the slain are to be counted by hundreds or by thousands, does not lessen in the least the criminality of the slayers. The intention was to exterminate all except those few girls (probably about eighty) whom they carried off to satisfy their lusts. Those that escaped owed their safety to their own good fortune, and not to the tender mercies of their neighbors.

Goethe and Schiller.

Prof. Max Muller gives the following character sketches of Germany's two great poets in a late number of Macmillan's Magazine: "Goethe had his cold, repellant hours. He could play the privy counsellor even toward Schiller. But who could triumph more nobly over his own weakness than Goethe, when he recognized in the long-avoided Schiller the long-sought-for equal and friend? Schiller, too, suffered from attacks of narrow-mindedness. Sometimes he longs for Goethe; then, again, he is miserable when near him. At times he rejoiced in the halo of the court; then, again, he mourned over the self-deception which made him see ordinary things in a false radiance. Schiller's mind suffered from Schiller's body; and how truly and touchingly he expresses the consciousness of his own weakness, the sufferings and struggles of his genius, when he says, 'How difficult it is for a suffering man to be a good man!'"

A Devoted Indian Chief.

A touching story is told which shows the better Indian character. Back in 1841, a party of hunters in a Wisconsin forest came upon a solitary grave over which floated the tattered remnants of an American flag. They soon met a band of friendly Indians, of whom they inquired the meaning of the strange sight. The reply was that it was the grave of an Indian chief who was a brave ally of the Americans in the battle of Tippecanoe. After the fight, Gen. Harrison presented him with a silk flag in token of his appreciation of his services, which the chief preserved as more valuable than life, and commanded that his body be buried in the wilderness, and the flag presented by Gen. Harrison be unfurled above his grave, there to flutter in the breeze unmolested so long as a thread remained. This command was religiously obeyed by the Indians, who frequently visited the grave to see that the flag was undisturbed.—Boston Transcript.

JENNIE BONNETT'S FATAL FREAK.

The Tragic End of a Woman's Masquerading in Male Attire.

A letter from San Francisco says: The persistency of Jennie Bonnett in wearing male attire, after making her whim for several years a diversion for herself and her acquaintances, has ended in her dreadful death. She was born in Paris twenty-seven years ago, and her father and mother were actors. The family came to San Francisco in 1852, and Mr. Bonnett, being able to speak English with sufficient accuracy, was employed during the next dozen years or so in the poorer theaters. After that he was employed in a mercantile establishment. Jennie grew up about as she would, and her ways were wild. One of her fancies was the wearing of male attire, and she wore her hair short in order to assist in the disguise. Her features were not femininely delicate, nor her voice as light as is common with her sex; and consequently no stranger would guess that she was not a good-looking, boyish fellow. Her dash in amusement was in keeping with her business vim. She dealt in frogs, supplied the large hotels and restaurants with them, and derived from them an ample income. The money thus secured was spent in luxurious living.

Yesterday Jennie started out in her favorite disguise, with a young companion named Blanche Buneau, on an excursion of fun. They hired a horse and carriage at a livery stable, and drove to San Miguel, stopping there at the San Miguel Hotel, a small establishment that thrives on its restaurant, being close by the railroad depot. The landlord knew Jennie because she had often been in his house, and her free expenditures made him a safe guardian of her secret. That day Jennie and Blanche went horseback riding, and in the evening they dined sumptuously at the hotel, drinking more wine than women usually do. They had intended to return to the city earlier, and had so informed the livery man, and, alarmed by their continued absence, he followed them to regain his property. He quarreled with Jennie and was about to strike her, whereupon the landlord told him that she was a woman and he desisted. The horse and wagon were then taken away by the owner, the women deciding to remain all night.

Blanche had an accepted lover, William Deneve, whom she was engaged to marry. He was a Frenchman, and extremely jealous. Once he saw her with Jennie, who was unknown to him, and whom he at once regarded as an interloping young man. Deneve at that time upbraided Blanche, but she did not undeceive him as to Jennie's identity. It is believed that he saw, or in some way learned of her departure yesterday for San Miguel, was furiously excited by her apparent fickleness, followed them, and watched their movements until the terrible end of the adventure.

The room in which Jennie and Blanche were to sleep was in the first story, adjoined a balcony. They retired late. Blanche got into bed first, and Jennie was preparing to do so. Suddenly, without previous warning, there was a gunflash and a report at the window, and a heavy charge of buckshot entered Jennie's side, killing her instantly. Blanche ran screaming to the door, arousing the household with her cries. The frightened landlord hesitated to go to the balcony, and before he braced his courage sufficiently to make a search the murderer had escaped.

A Clerical Hit on the Head.

Ministers will have their little jokes like other people.

"Come over and preach for me to-night," said a Chicago divine to a clerical friend whom he met on the street not many days since.

"I can't to-night," was the reply; "I'm almost down sick with a headache."

"Well," drolly observed the other, "I guess you can do it, for if you preach as you usually do, you won't have to use your head any!"

Then they both laughed, and pinched each other in the ribs, and said it was a good one, just as heartily as though they had been the worst kind of sinners all their lives.—Chicago Journal.

IS THE WAR OVER?

Prof. Sumner on the Real Issues of the Day.

A Political Sermon that Everybody Ought to Read.

The crisis of a heated political campaign is not a favorable opportunity for urging moderation, reflection and justice, yet it can never be admitted that the people are not amenable to reason in regard to justice toward their neighbors, and when the questions of the campaign are such as involve the continuation or the abandonment of a policy tending to embitter sectional hatred and perpetuate internal discord, the attempt to appeal to sober reason and honest love of justice ought not to be abandoned. In the Liberal movement of 1872, justice to the South was a prominent factor. It disappeared with the failure of that movement, and four years more of experiment in the policy of coercion and distress have been added. If any sincere advocate of liberty for the blacks then entertained misgivings in regard to the results to be expected from the restoration of the South to a full share in political power, he was assured that the experiment of doubt and repression should have a fair trial. On the approach of the present campaign, little was said about the Southern question. Other issues filled the public mind. It seemed that the shame and disgrace of misrule in the South, brought about by violation, as well of all sound doctrines of political science as of all the theories of our system of government, had so far affected the public mind that the old policy of suspicion and hate would be at least tacitly abandoned. The expectation has proved false. Other issues have been thrown into the background, and we are fighting to-day a sectional fight, under the inspiration of narrow prejudice, sordid interest, ignorant dogmatism and base passion. The power of the current has been so great that it has swept away those who, as it seemed, were to be relied upon for intelligent revolt against the old catch-words and the worn-out appeals to prejudice. The Northern people seem not only to forget the painful conviction which had slowly forced itself upon them, that they were not acting wisely or honorably, and were pursuing toward the South a disastrous policy, but they boast of their fidelity to prejudice, and hug themselves in their resubjection to suspicion and doubt. They have, as it appears, at last come to the point where hysterical rhetoric of the Victor Hugo type is welcomed and repeated as political wisdom. Slavery is gone forever, and the issue, as now raised, is simply this: "Will the North continue to govern the South as subjugated territory, and use a combination of demagogues with the black vote, under coercive legislation, as the machinery to do it, or will they restore the South to self-government and equal rights in the Union and leave its population, the blacks being irrevocably endowed with freedom and the franchise, to settle for themselves the relations in which they will live together?"

At the close of the war the Northern people boasted that they had shown no blood thirstiness and no desire for revenge. Their anger was aroused, however, by the assassination of Lincoln and by the attempts of some Southern States to legislate against the blacks, and they took to a policy of civil repression and political coercion which oppressed the South in all its interests with a weight which no criminal prosecution of the leaders in the civil war ever would have exerted. Reconstruction was planned and carried out as if there were only one interest, that of the blacks, at stake. The terrible significance of the Southern problem as a race problem, big with the consequences to civilization which lie in every race struggle, were entirely overlooked. The guidance of public opinion in such a crisis lay in the hands of certain men and women who had no training whatever in history, law, politics or social science, but who had easily tacked together a few phrases and notions bearing on the emotional and, as they called it, moral side of the conflict. Political adventurers of various grades quickly allied themselves with these persons to do the "practical work." They had never expected such an easy task in politics as this, when a few commonplaces about the vaguest and most difficult social relations, "sympathy with freedom," "loyalty," "equal rights," etc., etc., would be received as legal tender for sterling sense about public questions and for practical statesmanship to mould the interests of a great nation. These two classes combined passed over, naturally enough, from the old injustice toward the blacks to a disposition to pet them, equally removed from fostering the free play of independence and self reliance, which is all we ever mean by freedom under our institutions. The moral leaders filled the public mind with Quixotic and impossible conceptions of human nature and human life. Untrained in the difficult art of legislation, incompetent to judge of the forces which their projects would arouse and be compelled to deal with, unacquainted with the historical parallels which would have offered them warning, they set out by arbitrary legislation to control a social revolution a thousand miles away, to employ law to make slave owners love slaves as equals, and so make rebels loyal. Enjoying a majority so overwhelming that an opposition could scarcely be said to exist, they crushed out such criticism as might have been made under the previous question, and passed over the Presidential veto with such lightness that it only added an element of fun to their activity. One act was speedily supplemented by another, and then a third was added to explain the other two. Forthwith the party whose interests were neglected or unjustly sacrificed took refuge in scheming, and then in secret and depraved violence. Other acts of Congress followed, each surpassing the last in the minuteness of its regulations, the severity of its provisions, the power with which it endowed distant and irresponsible officials, and the reckless abuse of power to which it encouraged them. Finally the excess of newly emancipated slaves were endowed with the franchise, thus jeopardizing the highest and most permanent interests of the nation as a makeshift to provide for an incidental and temporary political difficulty. The object was said to be to secure the safety of the blacks, although the entire experience since has shown that it is more difficult to protect the blacks in the franchise than it was to protect them in civil nature without it. In fact the enfranchisement of the blacks was the employment of a great political and in the way of a small political [illegible], and the arguments by which so bold a step, freighted with such awful possibilities, was, and still is, defended, are a fair gauge of the political philosophy of those who carried it out.

Next, however, came in the activity of the political adventurers. They speedily saw the grand field opened to them. While the Southern mind was full of the reconstruction questions, it could not pay attention to fiscal affairs. Protection to home industry, subsidies, and paper-money inflation could be worked with impunity and success. While the issues could be kept, at one election after another, close to the great question of "equal rights," the most blatant orator on the favorite topic was the preferred candidate. His personal character, his fitness and ability, were not even discussed. The arena for political corruption was free and easy of access. What wonder that we have had "corruption?"

The South, however, presented the grandest chance. Here were offices which presented power and chance of gain equal to Persian satrapies. Responsibility to the people among whom the power was exercised did not exist. Every complaint from them was proof of energy on the part of the officer in the work expected of him. Responsibility to the President was so distant and uncertain as to have no terrors. The newly-enfranchised blacks offered an opportunity for the activity of demagogues such as never existed before. The arts of organization, of electioneering, of wire-pulling, of ballot-box stuffing, of counting-in, were pursued with a zeal and skill unknown anywhere else in the world. Ignorance and venality, led by craft, seized upon the organization of civil government and [illegible] all which government is [illegible]. The proofs do not [illegible]. Take Mr. Nordhoff's letters as sufficient.

Under all this a society of white men, with education, [illegible], had to live. They possessed, at least at the outset, all the property. They knew something of the functions and duties of Government. They knew when its proper services to the community were neglected, and could measure something of the consequences of its abuse. They saw themselves, their property, the future of their children, made the sport of ignorance. Every remonstrance or appeal, however, was made the cause of new insult, new suspicion and renewed constraint. Testimony is abundant that many men in positions to command the respect of any community, and to win leadership anywhere, sought by all fair dealings and generosity to win the affection and confidence of the blacks, and that they succeeded socially, but that politically they were powerless against the mere name of Grant or Butler fraudulently used by an organizer. Reason and argument and effort to explain to the blacks the effect of political measures were all in vain against the slightest appeal to race and color prejudice. The color line was imposed upon the whites as a consequence, because they must stand together for property and civilization against either innocent or corrupt ignorance. It would be amusing, if the stake were not so serious, to see how some persons, who inveigh against the color line, assume, as a matter of course, that the States in which the blacks are in a majority must be Republican, and how, while they rage about intimidation of blacks by whites, they skip over the intimidation of blacks by blacks, by which the color line is established.

The controlling factor, however, in the development of reconstruction was the action of the Federal Government in sustaining the status. How can any fair-minded man, who is at all capable of putting himself in another's place, read such accounts as are given by Mr. Nordhoff, certainly with no Southern bias, and fail to realize what must be the exasperation of Southern men? How can it be expected that love for the Union or peaceful relations to the negroes will ever be brought about by this system? How long must it go on before it begins to bear the fruits which are expected of it? Where else in life does any one see the forces of suspicion, hatred, fear and distrust, produce love, confidence, harmony, peace and prosperity? Austria, after striving for fifty years to coerce Hungary, and produce hatred and discord, changed her policy to peace and concession, and, for ten years, she has enjoyed advancing comfort and property. England, after striving in vain to coerce Ireland for centuries, set about inquiring into the causes of Irish discontent with a view to justice, and the fires of sedition die out for want of fuel. There is for us a greater risk in this internal discord from the nature of our union. It can only exist permanently if the bond of harmony, free consent, common feeling and mutual regard for rights and interests binds it together. Some say that the war has cemented it forever, and they seem not to fear to put it to any strain. Another war is in no case to be feared, but every Federal law might be annulled in the Southern States unless a standing army were maintained there, and they might be in the Union, but not of it. We might have an armed peace such as Austria kept up with Hungary, but sooner or later, if we are to live together at all, we must seek the path of peace, justice and conciliation. We must abandon our attempt to decide for them the lines on which they must deal with their own social problems, and must leave them to full self-government, with equal rights in the Union, such as we demand for ourselves.

The South now comes up to another Presidential campaign as a new epoch at which its effort for self-government and full rights in the Union may be properly repeated. Its white people, divided on other issues, are agreed in this: that the first object of all is to recover self-government. They are "solid" on this issue. Their solidity would seem to be a proof of the intensity of the compression to which they have been subjected, since it has crushed out all divisions. We are told, however, that this solidity is a new crime, a new proof of perversity, a new exhibition of the old rebel spirit, and the unanimous plea of the South that the Northern people will at last abandon prejudice and suspicion, listen to their grievances, try to understand their case and give them relief, is met by a renewal of all the old war passions. If there is one duty more imperative than another upon every fair-minded Northern man it is to refuse to listen to the croakers of suspicion and fear, and to free himself from the dominion of that barbarous impulse which makes us first think of using force against those who do not act to suit us, and, in the light of wisdom and common sense, to seek the path of freedom, confidence and concord. If this question of the South is raised again, the answer ought to be that the policy of coercion is a failure and shall not be continued, that the power of the General Government shall no longer be used to sustain a horde of adventurers in plundering the South, and that the men who would continue sectional hate shall no longer enjoy the public confidence.

Up to this time it must be confessed that such has not been the effect. The politicians themselves must have been forced to grin with contempt to see how quickly the puppets have responded to the old string. Meanwhile the great interests which are at stake in this contest have been lost sight of. The moral fervor of last winter has died out amongst those who, as independents, represented it most distinctly. The old leaders who had been relegated to obscurity, damaged and broken in reputation, come back, now that the contest is removed to their old arena, and are welcomed as heartily as ever. They are reciting again their old bits of phrases, and eliciting the old applause. In other words, the revival of the Southern issue has been the signal and the occasion for a restoration of all the old forces of corruption, and no sign of opposition is made, even by those who come forward distinctly as anti-corruptionists. We are in danger of falling back again into four years more of impotent fault-finding, while we drift along without dealing with a single great public question, or doing anything to secure for ourselves the advantages which other nations are reaping from advances made in political and social science. So it will be until the war is over, and the parts of the body politic, restored to peace and harmony by mutual respect and love of justice, are able to turn their attention to hearty co-operation in the enterprises and reforms which produce prosperity.

W. G. SUMNER.

The Polar Expedition and Symmes' Theory.

The recent news from England is that the steamer Pandora that was sent north about the first of last July, to bring the news from the exploring expedition that went out last year under Capt. Nares, had got as far north as Upper Navic, which lies beyond Disco, and is the residence of the Governor of Greenland, and the last point north from whence there is communication this way, and she reports no news from Capt. Nares, but would steam on northward as the sea was clear of ice, and would reach Smith's Sound in a few days, at which point Capt. Nares was to leave a report of his discoveries up to that time. He is to remain a year longer, and the Pandora is to bring home some news from him, and she may be expected home in a few days; and if Capt. Nares is fortunate enough to reach the open Polar Sea as the Swedish expedition did last year, and runs into a warm and genial climate, and can report the finding of a rich country abounding in rich land, large rivers and splendid forests of timber, as the Swedes report, then the "Symmes theory" will be proven beyond a doubt, and the country of "Symmzonia" will become a fixed fact. Who is not anxious to hear the news from Capt. Nares?

AN IMPARTIAL VIEW.

What are the Real Issues of the Campaign?

Charles Francis Adams, Jr., on the Two Presidential Candidates.

[From an Article by Charles Francis Adams, Jr., in the North American Review.]

Just before the first meetings intended to have a bearing on the presidential nominations for the campaign now going on were held, Mr. W. M. Evarts one day remarked to Carl Schurz that the Republican party in its then condition reminded him of nothing so much as an army whose term of enlistment had expired. Mr. Evarts is justly famed for the witty and incisive way in which he expresses what other people think, but he has not often had the good fortune to hit off a happier simile than this. It included in ten words a phamphletful of political insight, and accounted at once for that large amount of individual action which is such an essential feature in the present canvass. The field is full of stragglers.

So far as the momentous political issues of twenty years ago are concerned, little remains over which to struggle. During the present canvass false, side issues and after issues will, indeed, be manufactured out of it; sometimes by very honest and very dull men who, having once learned to talk on a certain subject, have no faculty of speech on any other, and sometimes by very cunning and unscrupulous men, who will work on the old passions and the old hatreds as long as they can possibly hope to get themselves into office, or to keep themselves there by so doing. In all this, however, there is something very uninviting and even repulsive to men who look upon politics as anything more than an occupation, and upon officeholding as anything more than a means of support. The continued dwelling upon the last phases of a stale excitement is neither a philosophical nor an ennobling pursuit. It is small matter for wonder, therefore, that the number of those who act independently of all party affiliations is continually increasing. The wonder rather is that the majority still cling to these ruts.

WHAT ARE THE ISSUES OF THE CAMPAIGN?

In considering the questions of the day it is well in the first place to try to get a perfectly clear perception of the issues involved in the campaign. That he may do this it is absolutely necessary for an intelligent being to close his ears to the discussion generally carried on. In that, words supply to an altogether inordinate degree the place of ideas. Of the three elements, therefore, in which every campaign discussion may be decomposed—rubbish, formalities and essence—it is here proposed to devote very few words except to the last. Under the head of campaign rubbish may, in the present case, safely be classed all the rambling discussion of the war records of the several candidates, and their opinions prior to the rebellion or the Mexican war; also the charges and countercharges made as to their transactions in mules, their stealing railroads, plundering widows and orphans, "dodging" [illegible] "shinplaster" currency, the number of watches they own, and the date at which they may have purchased pianos. Personally all the candidates are respectable gentlemen. They have passed their lives before the communities in which they lived, and been honored and trusted. As to the views they may have entertained twenty years ago, it is to be remembered the war of the rebellion closed in the year 1865. The issues at stake between the years 1848 and 1860 are now just as much settled beyond the paradventure of reversal as those involved in the war of 1812 or the Revolution. The records of Gov. Hayes and Gov. Tilden anterior to 1861 have, therefore, sentiment apart, just about as much bearing on the living issues of this campaign as their opinions on the Hartford Convention or the Darwinian theory of evolution. No one can deny that the mass of trash and rubbish of this description—constituting, as it does, nine-tenths of the campaign literature—has its influence. Unhappily, mud-flinging is to a very large class of mankind one of the most enjoyable features of every canvass; and, as there are said to be German counties in Pennsylvania where votes are regularly at each election cast for Gen. Jackson, so a not inconsiderable portion of the community does, and for the next five years will, measure every candidate, not by his acts of the day, but by what he said and thought in 1860, or did or did not do during the rebellion.

There are three great phases into which all political movement resolves itself—the revolutionary, the constructive, and the administrative, and these three also necessarily succeed each other in the order in which they have been named. Within the last sixteen years it is apparent that this country has passed through two, and the more momentous two, of these phases, and is now entering upon the third. The period between 1861 and 1865 was one of unquestioned revolution; that since 1865 has been one of construction, which, well or ill done, will be completed as soon as South Carolina and Louisiana are permitted to reach the position of rest toward which they are irresistably tending. That time cannot long be deferred.

THE ADVANTAGE OF THE DEMOCRATS.

It is hardly better worth while to waste time over empty political formalities than over unadulterated rubbish. Passing on, then, to the essence of the campaign, the candidates are first to be considered.

In this respect, unquestionably, the prima facie advantage is with the Democrats. If there is one thing wholly opposed to the spirit of our institutions and the earlier and better usages of the country, it is the political trick of nominating unknown and untried men, on the ground that, being unknown and untried, they have no "record" to defend. Every voter is thus left free to imagine what he pleases, and, of course, omne ignotum, etc. In such a matter as this it is best, perhaps, to try to see ourselves as we would see others, and as others must see us. As practical men, priding ourselves on our capacity for self-government, what would we Americans say if we saw, for instance, the Liberal party of England, on a defeat of the Disraeli ministry and a dissolution of Parliament, select as their candidate for Premier, not Gladstone, not Forster, not any well-known or experienced leader, but some unknown, untried Lord Lieutenant of Canada, who had been a Colonel in the Sepoy insurrection, and a silent member during one short Parliament? In the days of Washington and Jefferson and Madison we should have smiled, not without just pride, and remarked that Republicans though we were we at least did not make a farce of our Government. Yet this is exactly what was done by the Republican party in the case of Gov. Hayes. Of that gentleman all that is known is to his credit; he seems to have been a gallant and meritorious officer during the war, a faithful though uninfluential member of Congress after its close; and more recently a respectable, though not brilliant, Governor of Ohio. Since his nomination the verdict of those most intimately acquainted with him has been decidedly in his favor, and they have joined in warmly recommending him for the Presidency. All this, however, ill supplies the place of public service. To fill the Presidential chair with success a man must have a great deal more than those good purposes, fair talents, and high character which serve to make him locally respectable. He must have judgment, firmness, insight, and, above all, experience to a much more than ordinary degree; and that he has these is only shown by trial. Even the most enthusiastic supporters of Gov. Hayes can hardly, as yet, claim that his election would be anything more than a political experiment. It is therefore difficult to see why Gov. Hayes does not fall within that class of candidates who were so well pictured in the address adopted by the Fifth Avenue Hotel conference, as candidates whom independent voters would not support; men "who, however favorably judged by their nearest friends, are not publicly known to possess those qualities of mind and character which the stern task of genuine reform requires; for the American people cannot now afford to risk the future of the Republic in experiments on merely supposed virtue or rumored ability, to be trusted on the strength of private recommendations."

TRIED MEN AND TRUE.

The Democrats, on the other hand, whatever may be thought of the men, unquestionably have put in nomination candidates both of whom were among their most prominent party leaders—men with whose and whose records the whole country was thoroughly familiar. That [illegible] essential, [illegible], and especially that of the country, [illegible] leaders would [illegible], for it is surely proved that they were party leaders, and all who considered such variance a good ground for refusing to support the ticket had full notice of the fact, and could shape their course accordingly. Good or bad, the candidates were tried men, and the whole country knew how to measure them; the appeal was to facts, not fancy; to the record, not to the imagination. And this is the only sound practice. In so far, therefore, the Democratic party has in this campaign approached much more nearly than its opponents to a correct usage; its record may be bad otherwise, but it has at least nominated the most distinguished reformer in its ranks.

A thorough and correct appreciation of circumstances and an accurate adjustment of means to end is generally looked upon as a first essential to human success. Don Quixote performed, perhaps, a very gallant feat of arms when he ran a tilt with the wind-mill; but he came out of the tournament badly damaged none the less. It is surely to be supposed that Gov. Hayes appreciates the fact that if he is elected President of the United States, his powers as such will be limited, and his administration can be saved from lamentable and utter failure only through the hearty and united support of some organized party. No President in this country can carry on an administration to suit himself on sentimental or guerrilla or Ishmaelite principles. He has got to have a party behind him, or fall. Not only this. Common sense, as well as political usage and party courtesy, always dictates to the President elect who are to be his confidential advisers and whom he can look to for effective support. These are, in the first place, his unsuccessful competitors in the nominating convention; and, in the second place, those who brought about his nomination and subsequent election. Not only does this usage exist in our political system, but it is a sound one. Through it alone, can a responsible, in place of a personal, administration be secured. President Grant, looking upon his Cabinet as a sort of civic staff, ignored the usage, picking up his heads of departments as he met men he fancied in the cars, at dinner tables, or in the club-rooms; and the result became known as "Grantism." Lincoln always recognized it, and it saved his administration. In the early days of the republic no President thought of disregarding it. In the case of Gov. Hayes, who are the advisers thus designated to him in advance? His chief competitor in the convention was Mr. Blaine; his rivals, who secured his nomination over Secretary Bristow were Messrs. Morton and Conkling. Senator Sherman, from Ohio, first named him prominently as a candidate; Secretary Cameron manipulated the Pennsylvania delegation in his favor at the decisive moment; and Secretary Chandler is the head of the National Executive Committee which is organizing the campaign for his election. Under these circumstances how is President Hayes to form a Cabinet in sympathy with his views as respects the civil service?

THE OPPOSITION RECORD SOUND.

It is usually argued that it will not be safe to trust the Democratic party in office, even for the brief term of four years, in view of the possible mischief it might accomplish in that time. The deprivation of the blacks of all civil rights, the payment of the rebel war debts, the pensioning of Confederate officers and soldiers, and numerous other similar visions of terror are conjured up. With an argument of this character it is almost humiliating to have to deal. Again, the existence and obstructive power of an organized opposition, this time controlling the Senate, is ignored, and that, too, by the leaders of a party which, in complete control of the Government in its every department, through six years out of eight, piteously claim that its utter failure during all that time to fulfill any of its pledges was due to the presence of a contemptible minority. Experience is, however, after all, the best of guides, and experience is not without its lights on this subject. The "ins" always do, and always have, unanimously averred, with a fervor which can only spring from heart-felt conviction, that the incoming of the "outs" will be shortly followed by the crack of doom. A good many credulous people, from force of habit chiefly, can always be relied on, also, tiresomely to accept this view of the subject. Two years ago it was nervously argued by the party leaders, in the same spirit, that the country could not be so rash as to elect a Democratic House of Representatives; to trust, etc., etc. Yet, looking over the field, and judging by the record, no truly independent voter could probably now be found who would not admit that the existence of an opposition majority in one branch of Congress has been, during the last year, a piece of national good fortune; and, also, that the record of that opposition body will, as a whole, compare more than favorably with the records of either the Republican Senate or the Republican executive.

THE END FOR REFORMERS.

The single great end to which all reformers, whatever their private theories may be, must look is distinct enough; it is to overcome the tendency of our political system to corruption. All political systems, no doubt, have some tendency, greater or less, toward corruption. The peculiarity of ours is that it moves, and for [illegible] years has moved, in that direction with accelerating pace, and it has now arrived at a point where even the blindest patriots see that, unless the evil is checked, our political system must break down, and some new experiment must be substituted in its place. The ground, therefore, and the only ground on which all honest men can unite, and insist with one voice upon reform, is that of resistance to the corruption of our political system.

All these measures of reform, necessary as they are, attack merely the outposts of corruption. They would, if successful, considerably reduce the resources of the political organizations; but when it is considered how infinite the ramifications of these party supplies are, and how extraordinary the skill with which new sources are constantly developed, it is ridiculous to suppose that these measures, even if adopted to their utmost extent, would offer any permanent cure for the radical evils of our political system.

No serious impression can ever be made on those evils until they are attacked at their source; not until the nation is ready to go back to the early practice of the Government, and to restore to the constitutional organs those powers which have been torn from them by the party organizations for purposes of party aggrandizement.

THE UNION FOREVER.

No North, No South, No East, No West in America, Says Uncle Sam—Patriotic Address by the Tilden National Committee—The Surprising Revolution in the Ohio Valley Attributable to a Genuine Desire for Reconciliation—Northerners Generally Having Tired of Passion and Hate Which Disastrously Blight Prosperity—Ringing Appeals to the Masses to Discard the False Prophets and Join in the Reform.

To the People of the United States:

FELLOW CITIZENS—We congratulate you as patriots and partakers with us in the common destiny of American freemen upon the results of the October State elections. We rejoice in the victory which the people's ballots have achieved upon the friends of reform in the valley of the Ohio, where the Republican hosts have had overwhelming ascendency in every Presidential election since 1856.

We rejoice in the assurances these elections convey that your ballots will bestow decisive majorities to the allied forces of Democracy and reform in the November elections throughout the Union; but we rejoice not as partisans. We rejoice with you as fellow-citizens, and when the decision of this week of 1,000,000 voters along the valley of the Ohio shall be ratified next month by the fiat of 8,000,000 voters throughout the whole republic, we shall still rejoice, chiefly for the reason that not one of its citizens can [illegible] an equal share with us, who are Democrats, in the political peace and good will which will then and there be established among all sections, races, classes, and conditions of men, and in the prosperity of which political peace, based on equal rights and fraternal good will, is the first condition. Upon the three states of West Virginia, Ohio, and Indiana were concentrated all the influence of the administration, all their efforts, and, all, the vast sums of money forced from 100,000 officeholders of the party in power. These were fearful odds, not again to be contended against so concentrated; for in the November election the contest will be in every one of the thirty-eight States upon the same day. Nevertheless, against these odds the Democrats and Reformers of West Virginia and Indiana have been victorious, and in Ohio they have all but rescued a State hitherto deemed hopeless, and have created an assurance of victory in November. It is fit, therefore, as the National Democratic Committee, to congratulate the people of the Union upon this victory in the first battle of the reform campaign. [illegible] the Democrats have been honored to be the leaders of the people in the work of national regeneration. The victory won and the victory still to be won will be deliverance as much to the Republicans as to the Democrats. The patriotic masses of the Republican party may be thankful that the misdeeds of their unworthy leaders have been rebuked and arrested. The suffering whites of the South may lift their heads to greet the dawn of a better day for them as well as the nation at large. The colored citizens may share [illegible] for them to welcome every ally, every friend, close up the ranks and press on shoulder to shoulder under the banner and with the one watchword—reform. Fellow-citizens, peace between all sections, prosperity in all our homes—of these you have been for years deprived by the mistaken solicitude of patriotic Republicans, played upon by selfish and corrupt leaders who have kept warm the dying embers of civil strife in order to escape the inspection of the trusts which they have betrayed. For eleven years you have had the name of peace, but at no time have you had the substance of peace. In lieu thereof you have had the grinding taxation and the wasteful expenditure of war. Just before every election every year you have had the preaching of a new crusade against the section utterly defeated in war and anxious only to be completely reconciled in peace. For eleven years the power of the men who have seized away the control of their party from the hands of its statesmen and founders has been supreme in almost every department of the Federal Government. Discarding the hopes of prolonging their domination by beneficent public measures, they have credited and trafficked upon public calamities. The policy they adopted has been worked out. Its failure has been absolute. In place of the past performances these same corrupt and selfish leaders now proffer promises already broken as their titles to further trust. Having prostrated our manifold industries by vast aggregates and worse methods of Federal taxation, they now again solicit your confidence as instruments of retrenchment and reform. Having debauched the public service and having just now in the face of open day assessed their army of 100,000 officeholders—the people's servants, paid by the people's taxes—in order to create immense corruption funds to frustrate the people's will, they now profess to be champions of civil-service reform. Having imposed upon the Southern States the rapacity, fraud and plunder of carpet-bag government; having almost ruined the prosperity of the North by destroying the prosperity of the South, and having created terror, uncertainty and confusion in all the productive industries of the South, which furnish most of the exports of our whole country, keep in motion the commerce and manufactories of the North and East, and furnish a market for the agricultural products of the West, they now propose by a renewal of the same fatal policy to prolong their own power, in the hope of concealing their misdeeds, and for this purpose they do not hesitate to renew the cry of intolerance, to revive the dying memories of fraternal strife, and to appeal to the fears and prejudices of the timid and ignorant.

Fellow-citizens, these men and their measures have been completely tried and have completely failed. Oppressive taxation, an exhausted South, an impoverished North, a fluctuating currency, the enterprise of an industrious people locked fast in the paralysis of hard times—such is the outcome of their political policy; such are the achievements of their long supremacy.

Your ballots in November can alone dictate a change of measures and a change of men. Shall not the uprising of patriotism along the valley of the Ohio go on to a complete and beneficial revolution in the administration of the Government of the United States? Will you not by the voice of overwhelming majorities at the polls proclaim your invincible faith, after all these years of corruption and passion, in the high, immortal principles of a government by the people, for the people, in simple honesty and strict economy, as the supreme wisdom of public policy, in justice as the mother of power, and in civil freedom as the hallowed end of a true republican nationality? Will you not build up a new prosperity for all the people on the old foundations of American self-government, on peace, reconciliation and fraternity between all sections, all classes, and all races embraced within our system of American commonwealth; on frugality and economy in all governments; on the honesty and purity of the administration, and having lost your prosperity through governmental misrule, regain that prosperity through governmental reform? We commit this great issue to the intelligence and conscience of the American people, with an unfaltering trust in the wisdom and justice of their decision.

By order of the National Democratic Committee,
ABRAM S. HEWITT, Chairman.

The Monument to Christopher Columbus.

The Philadelphia Columbus monument, dedicated last week, was made by Prof. Salada, of Carrara, Italy, of the purest Italian marble. The figure is ten feet high, representing Columbus in the costume of his age and clime—low shoes, tights, tunic reaching nearly to the knees, and neatly decorated about the neck, and a long, loose cloak with a sailor's broad collar. The head is bare, and his abundant hair flows back from a high square forehead. His physiognomy is nearly the same as it is represented in the famous "bust" at Genoa, and in what are supposed to be his most authentic pictures. His right hand rests upon a globe fifteen inches in diameter, upon which is traced in black the outlines of the continent which he discovered, and which rests upon a hexagonal column. In his right hand he holds his chart, and around his feet are artistically arranged an anchor and tackle belonging to ships. Around is waist is a plain belt, from which hangs a beautiful sword. The figure rests upon a cap four and a half feet high, on the front of which is inscribed, "Presented to the City of Philadelphia by the Italian citizens," and on the back, "In Commemoration of the First Centenary of American Independence." On the back of the die, the next piece below the cap, is the inscription, "Dedicated on October 12, 1876, by the Christopher Columbus Monument Association, on the Anniversary of the Landing of Christopher Columbus, October 12, 1492." In front of the die is a beautiful bas-relief representing the landing of Columbus. In the foreground is a small boat from which he landed with a few of his followers, the land being on the right and the vessel on the left. On either side of the die are the coat-of-arms of Italy and America. The total height of the monument is about twenty-two feet, and its base is seven feet long and six feet broad; it weighs thirty-five tons, and cost $18,000.

New and Fatal Horse Disease.

A strange and fatal disease has attacked the horses near the foothills above Rockville. Some ten have died in few days. Upon a post-mortem examination the membrane that supports the bowels is of a yellowish color, and is soft and rotten, while the whole cavity outside the intestines is filled with water. Messrs. Alex and Joe Blake have lost six, while several other gentlemen in the neighborhood have lost from one to two. No remedies yet applied have arrested in the slightest degree the disease when a horse was attacked.—Santa Rosa (Cal.) Democrat.

A Bride Not in Her Teens.

A unique wedding took place at Cloverdale last Sunday, at the residence of one of our citizens. The happy pair were from the Dry Creek mountains. The bridegroom was about 19 or 20 years of age, and over the bride's head some 12 summers had lightly danced. The happy twain left for Texas the next day. We were told the bride quietly informed a couple of ladies that she "guessed she wasn't the first one what was married young."—Santa Rosa (Cal.) Democrat.

GIRLS IN CHINA.

The Misfortune of Being Born in the Celestial Kingdom.

From a letter from Mrs. Julia F. W. Plumb, in China, to a friend in this city, we glean some items relative to the treatment of girls in that far away land. Mrs. Plumb, prior to her marriage, lived in Des Moines, and has many acquaintances and friends in this city. She is the wife of a missionary in that country, and is living near Foochow. The latter says:

"Some time ago [illegible] went out walking, and a man came out of a house with a tiny little black-eyed baby in his arms, about 2 months old. 'Two years old' he called it, for it was born during the last month of the old year, and so had lived in two years. Thus the Chinese count ages. It was clean and bright, and almost pretty, and he begged us to accept it. They were very poor; had no clothing or rice for it, and it was a girl. This last was the crowning misery. I was sorry there was no foundling asylum in the Mission, as there has been at one time in its history. I think if it had been a white baby we would have accepted the gift. As it was, Nathan exhorted the man to keep it and not drown it, as he was suggestively near the river. He told him how wrong it was to wish to kill babies because they were females, and much more which the man seemed to understand, and promised us he would let the baby live. It is not an unusual thing to find little girl babies cast out to die.

"Some time ago I was at East Street Chapel, attending my women's meeting. A strange woman came in, and after the services were over I entered into conversation with her. She seemed to be quite an intelligent woman and in good circumstances, the keeper of a shop. I inquired about her family. She said, 'I had but one child.' I said, 'Only one child? No girls?' She replied, 'Oh, yes; girls in plenty; five or six, I forget which. I drowned them as fast as they were born.' I had never heard such an avowal before, and I was shocked. I said, 'How could you? Was it not hard to do?' She said, 'Yes, it was hard; some of them were unwilling to die, and one took hold of my finger and held on to it; then I was frightened greatly.' I said, 'But how could you drown your own little babies, which you ought to love and nourish? Did you not love them?' She answered, 'They were girls. They must be clothed and fed, and if they had their feet bound like mine, to make ladies of them, they could not work and bring in money like boys. I have one son. He eats opium and gives me a great deal of trouble. It's better they were killed! It's better so.'"—Iowa State Register.

A Plausible and Beautiful Demon.

Catherine de Medicis was essentially a type of her age and nation. Iago's phrase, "Virtue, a fig! 'tis in ourselves that we are thus, or thus," might well have been the motto of the Italian of the sixteenth century; to be honest, honorable, and ingenuous, was, in his creed, to be a fool; to be crafty, cunning, and dissimulating, was to be a man worthy of all respect; the most pitiless of assassins when his interests were balanced against human life, but wholly destitute of that sanguinary ferocity, that tigerish love of blood, which breaks out in the Frenchman whenever his passions are aroused by political or religious fanaticism. Thus Catherine was by nature tolerant, and averse to cruelty; but ruthless as destiny to all who threatened her ambition. A skeptic to revealed religion, she was profoundly credulous to every superstition; an astrologer attended her wherever she went; she never engaged in any scheme without first consulting the stars; and after her death all kinds of amulets and charms were found upon her person. She is accredited with having been profoundly skilled in the science of poisoning, which reached such a terrible perfection among the Italians at the close of the middle ages; a pair of gloves, a bouquet, a perfumed handkerchief, could convey death to an enemy and yet defy detection. Marvelously tenacious of purpose, fertile in resources, and unscrupulous in action, she might have crushed all who opposed her dominion, and rendered her power absolute, had she possessed more of the grandeur of wickedness; but her policy was ever temporizing, ever emasculated by an excess of subtlety; she preferred poison and the dagger to the ax and sword, preferred to maim rather than crush an enemy; she excited terror, but never awe. Yet, when occasion required, her courage was unquestionable. She was a dauntless huntress of the stag and the wild boar, and had frequently sustained severe injuries in their pursuit. And Brantome tells us, speaking of the siege of Rouen: "She failed not to come every day to Fort St. Catherine to hold council and to watch the firing of the batteries. I have often seen her passing along that hollow way of St. Catherine, the cannon and musket shot raining around her, for which she cared nothing. * * * When Monsieur the Constable and M. de Guise remonstrated with her, saying that misfortune would come of it, she only laughed and said she would not spare herself any more than them, since she had as good a courage as they had, but not the strength their sex had designed them." In manners she was affable and courteous, and had the sweetest of smiles and the most musical of voices; and, rarest praise of all in that licentious age, scandal scarcely tarnished her reputation.—Temple Bar.

The Deadly Lightning.

The differences in the effect of lightning in various countries is remarkable. It is believed to be more dangerous in England than here. From statistics collected it appears that on an average seventy-seven are killed by it each year in France, and the annual list of killed and wounded there by this cause amounts to 250. The low-lying departments are less subject to it. Eighty were wounded and nine killed in one thunderstorm at Chateauneuf-les-Moutiers in 1861, and within one week, when the air was highly charged with electricity, thirty-three fearful flashes of lightning were observed, each bringing death to some victim. Twenty-two people are killed by lightning every year in England, nine in Switzerland, and three in Belgium.

Out of 1,000,000 men and women 2,152 reach the age of 95 years.

There is a good deal of speculation about the State of Wisconsin. The Democrats have reason to hope that its electoral vote will be given to Tilden

◆ ◆ ◆

Republican newspapers turn to the "Rebel Claims" in dispair. They failed to frighten the people of Ohio and Indiana with this bugaboo, but it's all that is left, and the threadbare "Claims" come up for consideration again.

◆ ◆ ◆

The Republicans count Illinois in their Maine and Colorado column. they do not take into consideration, however the unanimity with which the germans of that state are supporting Tilden, nor the 75,000 Independent voters, who stand where they did in 1874. The State is at least doubtful—and so is Wisconsin.

◆ ◆ ◆

Some cross-gained woman with a sour stomach has written a letter from Philadelphia to the Cleveland Herald in which she charges General Goshorn with "toadying to the South." Mr. Goshorn is a gentleman and treats everybody with respect. He has probably tried to induce Southern people to visit the Exposition, and when they have come he has not spit in their faces and called them rebels.

◆ ◆ ◆

The Philadelphia Times, an Independent newspaper, doubts whether a worse case of gerrymandering can be found anywhere in the union than in Indiana, where the Democrats are only permitted to elect four or five Congressmen out of thirteen. In Ohio, with ninety votes less than half of the whole number polled, the Repulicans elect twelve of the twenty Congressmen. Their infamous districts will be knocked on the head one of these days.

◆ ◆ ◆

Gen. Benjamin F. Butler, in his canvass for Congress in the Seventh Massachusetts District, virtually admits that Tilden will be President, and tells his hearers that for this reason he should be elected to Congress to assume the leadership of the Republicans in the House, while Blane attends to them in the Senate. Butler is a very good political prophet. We are glad to know that he thinks Tilden is the coming man If he is elected to the House we will watch him.

Some of the Methodist ministers in Chicago, last week, were discussing the 'sinfulness' of the running railrod trains to camp-meetings and street-cars on Sunday: Some saw in this direction of the Sabbath a great sin; others were not disposed to discuss it, for they held high positions in the Methodist world, and didn't feel disposed to do away with their private carriages on Sunday. If it is sinful to patronize street-cars on Sunday, it was equally sinful to ride in private conveyances. So the matter dropped. A Chicago newspaper which publishes a great deal about piety on week-days, suggests in this connection that "the question might, perhaps, be divested of some of its difficulties if the preachers would close some of their churches on Sunday. Church-goers would then be freed from the temptation to use the cars." It might with equal propriety be suggested that the ministers leave the church doors unbarred on Saturday nights for Sunday, take up collection on Monday, and issue a general edict making the Sabbath a fast day. We are compelled to ride on Sunday as well as to eat.

THE OUTRAGED SOUTH.

PEOPLE OF ALL CLASSES DENOUNCING GRANT'S ORDER.

An Appeal to the People of the United States.

CHARLESTON, October 26.—The President of the Chamber of Commerce has united with the Methodist, Catholic and Episcopal Bishops and leading Presbyterian, Lutheran, Baptist and Jewish ministers, and Presidents of all the National and other banks in Charleston, in an address on the condition of South Carolina to the people of the United States, which denies that the white people of South Carolina are disloyal or disaffected to the United States Government; that any part of the State is in insurrection; that the law cannot be duly enforced within the limits of the State; that any lawful cause exists for Federal interference; that the white people of the State are disaffected toward to colored people, or desire to infringe on their political or civil rights; that the Rifle Clubs in the State are conbinations against law, and that in the recent rare collisions the white people have been the aggressors.

The Republican newspapers in Ohio have a valuable coadjutor in the person of an Irish lunatic named Paul O'Conor. This individual wasts his time by writing flaming appeals to his Irish bretheren to roll up, tumble up and vote for Hayes In a recent address he appeals to his friends to know whether Irish history furnishes any such a man as Tilden. He answers nay. Then says the exulted lunatic: "We shall not seek in vain in Irish history for distinguished men who bear resemblance to Mr. Hayes. Its pages are teaming with them. There we find an Earl of Tyrone, an Earl of Bantry, a Brien the brave, a Grattan, a Curran and an O'Connell. These were Irish warriors and statesmen, not demagogues who fatten upon the spoliation and ruin of their people. There we find also the defenders of Limerick, the participator in Steinkirk, and the bullet riddled hero of Neerwindon—the man whom history delights to call the gallant Sarsfield. Is there no resemblance between this man and General Hayes? Is there no resemblance between Neerwinden and South Mountain? Hayes was carried bleeding from South Mountain. Sarsfield was borne from the village of Neerwinden, riddled with bullets and a corpse. Do you see no resemblance between them?"

We think we do. It is grand and sublime. Hayes looks very much like the Earl of Bantry about the feet. Sarsfield at Neerwinden and Hayes at South Mountain will readily suggest themselves to the casual reader. The fact that they were both carried off a battle field, shows how accurately history repeats itself, and how Fate intended that Hayes should have a claim on the Irish vote.

The Duty of the "Independents."

There is a class of voters in the country, and a very large class, to whom a word should be candidly said—by somebody. They are fitly named "Independents." They are independent, unselfish, noble. They are hopeless of spoils; they are working for a cause. They have no expectation of obtaining an office: they labor for an idea. They have not the faintest glimmer of a hope to elect even a Constable anywhere, but they are still devoted to their faith. None but idiots will call them fools. If they are called insane the question will arise whether the accusers or the accused are the madmen. An essayist once described a notable "fanatic" as a "sublime madman, or else the one sane man in a nation mad." We can not legitimately question the motives, the purposes, the patriotism of these people There unselfishness is beyond question. The beneficence of their intent will not be intelligently disputed. They are in earnest. Men do not cut themselves loose from party traces without conceivable hope of reward unless they are possessed of convictions. They are believers, to a praiseworthy degree, in the doctrine that one man with God on his side is a majority. We insist that these valorous voters, who have a Presidential ticket in the field, are not to be sneezed at. If they are, the worse for the sneezers. But while their motives are high and generous, and while the ends they aim at are lofty and beneficent, their methods may not be the wisest, and may be subject to revision. The "Independent" party has a ticket in the field that is hopeless of shore, and it has announced a platform that touches but one phase of our public affairs. It is the honest apostle of Democracy, reform. It has believed the question of the currency to be the foremost one in our National politics, and the members of the Independent party have been willing to sacrifice party ties and bury party allegiance to testify their faith. Inasmuch, as it is not party not personal preferment, not political aggrandizement that they seek, they are, we feel safe, willing to take any action that will most contribute to the success of the ideas to which they are devoted. They are, we believe, too sagacious to foolishly waste effort. It is the end, not the means they care. And now what is the situation that confronts them? They can choose between three courses. They can vote for Cooper and Cary and fritter away their formidable and honorable force. They can vote for Hayes and Wheeler and the Republican party, and thus vote against every principle they hold dear. They can vote for the Democratic ticket for the Democratic party, which alone offers them a pathway toward the goal of their desire. The promise of the Democratic party is not all that the "Independents" desire, but the party platform and the party tendency are in the direction of their desires. The Republican party is committed to forced resumption on the 1st day of January, 1879, and the Democratic party is committed against it. The Democrats in this Congress sought to remonetize silver and the Republicans would not permit it. The Democrats in the House passed the bill repealing the law commanding forced resumption two years heance, and the Republicans defeated the measure. It is the Republican party that passed the coin bill of March 1869. It is the Republican party that demonetized silver in the interest of the gold mongers and bondholders. It is the Republican party that enacted forced resumption in whose train would follow disasters, no business man even could foresee. We insist that the "Independent" voters, if they vote by them selves, throw away a noble strength. If they vote the Republican ticket, they are voting against themselves. If they vote for the Democratic party, they vote for all the essential things they can hope to gain in the present and for all the hope of the future.

THE SOLID SOUTH.

From the New York Sun.

The last stalking horse bestrode by a spectre to frighten those non-combatants in war, who have become doughty warriors in peace, is the solid South. It has no terrors for us. We hail with joy the indications of a united front in the South. It is more than time the carnival of Republican crime in the Southern States should be brought to an end. Plunder should be brought to an end. Plunder should have its appetite stinted Misgovernment has long enough run riot. It must be stopped.

There is and can be no new rebellion. That peril is past forever. What is won for human rights will never again be the trophy of the sword. The clarion blast may be blown by the brass trumpets of agitation, but the agitators are weak in numbers, and wicked as they are in purpose, they are powerless for evil

The solid South proclaims that the intimidation bayonets must cease, and the sabre be returned to its scabbard. How long, we ask, is the ballot to be cast to the tread of armed men and the roll of the drum? We venture the prediction that after we have finished celebrating the glory of the century just ended, and sounding the march of that just begun, the presence of military uniforms will not be suffered to profane the casting of our suffrages. Look at South Carolina, with tramp of the soldier over a soil black with the cinders of war. Missisipi, also, is the campaign ground of the Goth and the Hun. the hot ploughshares of peace have cut the deeper furrows than those of war. Nor is the list complete without Alabama, Georgia, and Florida.

Georgia, with Bullock, its venal Governor, and its purchased Legislature and Judiciary, was loaded with a debt whose only payment was by repudiation; and it may be remembered, as exemplifying the Divine justice, that the Northern agent of subsidy and bribes are each and all in financial ruin. "Why,' asked one of the Senators, "does Georgia give a majority of 80,000 against us?" Simply because in the righteous law of the universe, after the wrong comes to reaction, and payment is exacted with interest. Let us then have a Solid South and have it now.

WASHINGTON, D. C. Oct. 28, 1876

Just previous to your late election, the Hon. Jno. C. New, of Indianapolis, ex-Treasurer of the U. S., wrote to a Republican office-holder in this city: "If Indiana goes Democratic, you may as well begin to pack your baggage and prepare to go home." Since the election the "Widow" Butler, in a speech at Andover, Massachusetts, on the 18th inst., acknowledged that Hayes would be defeated as follows: "I say it frankly, that Tilden's election is not impossible; nay, not improbable." These opinions uttered before and the other since the October election, fairly express the general sentiment of Eastern Republicans, and are prophetic. Indiana lost after all the resources of the Republican party had been drained to win it, and Ohio, the home of the Radical candidate, barely saved by a paltry 6,000 majority—so unmistakeably indicates that with the overthrow of Grantism, Mortonism and the value of the ring, that even Ben Butler has not the hardihood to attempt to conceal it. The office-holders in this city are the bluest looking individuals imaginable. They have been taxed by Chandler's committee, by Edmund's committee, by the various Republican State associations that they are compelled to keep up in this city, and finally by the Radical candidates for Congress in their respective districts until in a fit of desperation they put all the paltry balance of their salaries into a "pool" and bet on Indiana, and lost that too. They have nothing left now to loose, but their offices, and as they begin to realize that these will be lost after the 4th of March next, their feelings can be better imagined than described. While the Radicals are thus fallen and despondent the National Democracy are enthusiastic and confident. Emulating the example found in the conduct of the Hoosier brothers in the greatest political campaign fought upon the American Continent, they are closing up their ranks and preparing all along the line for the final assault on the 7th of November—that will drive the Republican party from power, and restore Constitutional government in the land.

The rush of Centennial visitors in this city continues, and all places of public interest are crowded from morning 'till night. One day last week the President shook hands with upwards of 2,000 persons. This was undoubtedly the most laborious day day's work performed by Grant since his election to the Presidency.

The court of commissioners of Alabama claims resumed its session in this city Wednesday, and proceeded with the consideration of claims mostly of seamen and shippers.

Dr. Mary E. Walker is making things lively for Secretary Chandler, assistant Secretary Gorham, Major Bell, and other officials at the Interior department because they don't hurry up her claim for a pension. She fell upon Major Bell the other day and in the course of her remarks denounced the Republican party as a set of tricksters and theives, which shows that Dr. Mary has a "level head.

The honorable Francis P. Blair died on Wednesday last at his home, at Silver Springs, Maryland, seven miles North of this city. The venerable Virginian retained his physical vigor, his mental faculties, and his sprighliness of disposition to a remarkable degree, and always took the deepest interest in the events of the time. He was, perhaps, the best informed man in the country concerning all the political intrigues and exciting epochs through which the country has passed during the last half of a century. In the exciting issues which divided men and parties in the days of President Jackson, Mr. Blair, as an editor, an advisor and a politician, was most prominent and exerted a powerful influence. In the period preceding and during the civil war he was also a prominent figure. He has outlived most of those with whom he took an active part in public affairs. When his son, Gen. F. P. Blair, Jr., was a mere boy, Mr. Blair said his hope was to live to see that boy a man. The boy died at the age of 53 years, after a most eventful career, and his father has survived him many months. Mrs. Blair survives at a venerable age. Two children living Hon. Montgomery Blair, Postmaster-General in Lincoln's first cabinet and Mrs. Lee, wife of Rear Admiral, J. P. Lee, U. S. Navy.

THE TWO ARMIES.

BY O. W. HOLMES.

As life's unending column pours,
Two marshaled hosts are seen—
Two armies on the trampled shores
That death flows black between.

One marches to the drum-beat's roll,
The wide-mouthed clarion's bray,
And bears upon a crimson scroll,
"Our glory is to slay."

One moves in silence by the stream,
With sad, yet watchful eyes,
Calm as the patient planet's gleam
That walks the clouded skies.

Along its front no sabres shine,
No blood-red pennons wave;
Its banner bears the single line,
"Our duty is to save."

For those no death-bed's lingering shade;
At honor's trumpet call,
With knitted brow and lifted blade,
In glory's arms they fall.

For these no flashing falchions bright,
No stirring battle-cry;
The bloodless stabber calls by night—
Each answers, "Here am I!"

For those the sculptor's laureled bust,
The builder's marble piles,
The anthems pealing o'er their dust
Through long cathedral aisles.

For these the blossom-sprinkled turf
That floods the lonely graves
When spring rolls in her sea-green surf
In flowery-foaming waves.

Two paths lead upward from below,
And angels wait above,
Who count each burning life-drop's flow,
Each falling tear of love.

Though from the Hero's bleeding breast
Her pulses freedom drew,
Though the white lilies in her crest
Sprang from that scarlet dew—

While valor's haughty champions wait
Till all their scars are shown,
Love walks unchallenged through the gate,
To sit beside the throne!

THE JUDGE'S STORY.

It was when I first began to practice, commenced the Judge, lighting a cigar. I was admitted and opened an office in the village—now city—of C——, in the spring of 186–. I had had but little business, and the case you have mentioned proved the key to my future success. I was sitting in my office, trying to keep comfortable, the clock already pointing to 10:30, when the door opened and the keeper of the county jail entered.

"We have a guest at our house who is quite anxious to see you, and requested me to bring you up to him if you had not retired."

I gladly put on my coat to accompany the jailer, for I needed every cent I could earn just then, and announced myself ready to start. It was not far to the jail, and we soon arrived there. After unlocking the usual number of iron doors, the jailer admitted me to the prisoner's cell, and remarked that when I was ready to go he would come and let me out. The huge door closed with a clang, the bolt was sprung, and I was alone with my would-be client.

As I had supposed, as soon as the jailer was out of hearing the prisoner came forward. He was a young, gentlemanly-appearing fellow, apparently about 24 years of age. Extending his hand to me he said:

"I am glad to see you, Mr. ——, you are indeed kind to come to me at this untimely hour, but I wanted to talk to some one, and I feel that you will take an interest in my case. I have been arrested for the murder of Mr. Richards, the President of the Farmers' Bank, of K——, and for the robbery of the bank. Will you not lend me your assistance?"

I assured him that I would do all in my power for him if he desired to retain me. He suddenly interrupted me by saying:

"Beg your pardon, sir, I do wish to retain you to defend me in my trial, and a trial must, of course, take place," saying which he handed me five solid double eagles.

"I have heard but few of the circumstances of the tragedy," he continued, "as it occurred this very evening, and I fear that there are some things that will appear to be against me, but I trust that you will bring me out all right. Do all you can, sir; employ more counsel, if necessary, but clear me, for I am innocent."

I assured him that I had no doubt but we would clear him, and added:

"Tell me what you know of the case, and the circumstances that you think appear against you."

"Well, I had a quarrel with Mr. Richards last evening, but it did not last long. I will tell you the whole story, sir. I am a clerk in the Farmers' Bank of K——, of which Mr. Richards was President. I have been employed there nearly five years, and I think I have attended to my duties to the entire satisfaction of all the officers of the bank, and have been liked very much by them all, particularly by the President, who has invited me to his house many times. Now, Mr. Richards, you must understand, has a daughter, several years younger than I am, a lady with whom I have not only become intimately acquainted, but for whom I have conceived a strong attachment. Her father discovered that I was deeply in love with Clara Richards, and saw, I presume, that she was not wholly indifferent to me. Last summer I dined at their house, by invitation of Mr. Richards, and during the evening I told Clara the state of my feelings, and was overjoyed to learn that she reciprocated my love. We agreed that I should ask her father's consent to our marriage as soon as I should be able to support a wife. You see I am telling you all," said the prisoner.

"That is right," I said; "in fact it is all-important that you should tell me all."

"Last evening I called on Mr. Richards, and boldly asked him to consent to our engagement. He was very angry, said I was an impudent fellow, declared I should never again speak to Clara, and in short he insulted me, accusing me of taking advantage of his kindness to ingratiate myself into the heart of his only child. Finally, I, too, got angry, and can hardly remember now what I said—only I remember I did not threaten him. At the close of our conversation he left the room, and I went directly to my room and to bed. This morning I went as usual to the bank, and as soon as Mr. Richards came down he took me into his private office and said to me that most men would discharge a clerk from their employ under similar circumstances, but as I was honest, capable, and faithful he would keep me, on condition that I would forget my presumptuous fancy.

"'Why,' said he, 'Clara has more for pin-money than your salary.' And then, after informing me that I would no longer be received at his house, he told me to return to my desk. Nothing unusual occurred during the day until just before we closed, when we received an unusually large cash deposit. As I was on the point of leaving the bank Mr. Richards called me and said:

"'Here is a package containing $9,000, I wish you to take to Mr. Martin, cashier of the City Bank of C——. You can explain about our vaults not being any too secure, and apologize for coming at such an unreasonable hour, and ask him as a personal favor to me to receive the funds on deposit. Take a receipt and return in the morning; you can take the 6 o'clock train this evening.'

"I had a little money on deposit at our bank, and, having a payment due on my life insurance in C——, I drew $160 and thought I would pay that before I returned. I took the package containing the $9,000, and, after receiving some money for my expenses, I started. I arrived at my destination about half-past 6 o'clock, and went directly to Mr. Martin's house, but found that he had gone up town, and later was going to the theater. Whereupon I sought the principal hotel, thinking I might see him there, but was disappointed here and there. I walked around where I thought I would be most likely to meet him, until about half-past 8, and then returned to the hotel, took supper, and engaged a room, to which I went. I sat down and read the evening paper until half-past 10, when I started for Mr. Martin's house. As I came down stairs and opened the door, a burly fellow touched me on the shoulder, and whispered:

"'I arrest you for the robbery of the Farmers' Bank of K——, and the murder of Mr. Richards.'

"He then placed the handcuffs on me and escorted me here. And now I have told you all I know about my case, and so help me God it is the truth. My name is Howard Burton; I have no parents."

This is the substance of what Howard Burton related to me, on that Christmas eve, in his cell in the jail at C——. I had not interrupted him during his recital, but had listened attentively to every word. I was much interested in the young man, who was about my own age, and who I felt was innocent of the horrible crime with which he was charged. I remained with him until long after midnight, and then, charging him to converse with no one on the subject of the murder, I left him. I knew nothing of the circumstances of the murder as yet, but the next day, being Christmas, I thought I would go to K—— and learn what I could, as I knew my client would not be examined that day, but was sure he would next. Justice was then much swifter than now. On my arrival at K—— I went directly to the bank, and found two or three detectives there, and some of the officers of the bank. Nothing had been moved except the body of the murdered man. He was found lying on the floor with his skull crushed and his throat cut from ear to ear. Some of the drawers had been rifled, but aside from this there was nothing to indicate robbery. There was missing from the safe nine thousand dollars, but the locks afforded no evidence of having been tampered with. I found that belief in Burton's guilt was quite general. I proceeded to look around to see some indication of violence being used, but the locks of the safes and vaults were in perfect order. There was a window in the President's office that looked out into a narrow passage that divided the bank building from a lawyer's office. It was securely guarded by an iron grating, and I felt that the assassin entered the bank in the usual manner, namely, through the door. There was no trace of the assassin and robber, as I said, but I felt that the accused man, my client, was innocent of the terrible crime of which he was accused. The cashier had gone to C——, and lodged a formal complaint against Howard Burton, and the examination would be held the following day.

I stood at the window in the President's office, staring vacantly out, hard at work thinking; when my eye noticed on the sash of the window of the lawyer's office just across the passage way a little scrap of paper with the word "Paint" written on it. A suggestive thought flashed through my mind as I walked out of the bank and stepped into the law office next door. I was slightly acquainted with its occupant, who welcomed me and invited me to a seat. We talked of the frightful occurrence of the previous night for some time, and at length I said, rising to go:

"So you have been painting a little, Mr. Harris?"

"Yes, sir; did you observe my new sign? Kelley, the painter, has a young German working for him who is really an artist. He did all the work here, and it is worth almost what he charges to have Fritz Vogel's presence in the office. He is a witty, original Dutchman."

"When was the painting done?" I asked.

"All done yesterday—be careful of your coat."

I bade Mr. Harris good day and left his office.

I had learned who painted that window, which was just what I most wanted to learn, without asking a leading question, or letting Mr. Harris know I was interested in Mr. Richards' murder any more than he. I made up my mind to see the German, Vogel, without loss of time, and find out if he saw Mr. Richards after young Burton left the bank. I went to the paint-shop, but found no one at work, all hands keeping Christmas. I learned where Vogel lived, and was soon in conversation with him.

"You painted Mr. Harris' sign and office, did you not?" I asked.

"Yes, sir."

"Well, what time did you finish up there last night?"

"At 6 o'clock, sir."

"Did you paint after dark?"

"Yes, sir; after dark I painted the outside of the window, about half-past 5; the man in the bank lighted the gas, and it shone so brightly that I finished the window last evening."

"Did you see this man in the bank handle any money?"

The German looked quite puzzled at this question, but answered.

"Yes, sir; I noticed him counting a large pile."

"What kind of a looking man was he?"

"Well, a good-looking man; it was Mr. Richards. If you don't know him I will describe him to you."

I answered that I had seen him, and then inquired what he did with the money.

"He made a bundle of it and handed it to a young man, telling him to take it somewhere. I could not hear all he said. In addition to the bundle, he gave him what I judge to be a few dollars in change, and told him to come back in the morning. Then the young man went away. By and by Mr. Richards put out the gas, and then I suspended work and went home."

"Did you see Mr. Richards again?"

"Yes, I saw him in the cigar store as I passed."

I concluded my examination of Vogel with the question,

"Did you know Mr. Richards was murdered last night, and the money in the bank stolen?"

The German turned pale, and exclaimed with much excitement.

"Murdered! no; is it so? You don't think it was me? My wife Kathrina knows I came straight home."

"Oh, no," I said, "I don't think it was you. You must not, however, tell anyone you have talked to me, or it may result in your being taken to court." He promised not to speak of it, and I left him.

I was now certain of my ability to clear my client, as I could prove he was sent on the mission to C——. I next wanted to find some one who had seen him on the train, but knew not where to obtain the information. Every one was talking of this murder, and public feeling was indeed bitter against Howard Burton. Stories of his quarrel with Mr. Richards were circulated with the usual exaggerations, and it seemed to be the unanimous opinion that he was the cold-blooded murderer. Still I was hopeful, and returned to C—— feeling confident of my ultimate success. On my arrival I held an interview with young Burton, and told him the result of my visit to K——. He was overjoyed, and expressed himself confident of being acquitted. Returning to my office, I looked up all the reported cases that bore any resemblance to the one in hand. The examination of my client was set down for the next morning, at which time I went to the jail and accompanied him to the court-room, accompanied by an under-sheriff. We found quite a formidable array of lawyers of note representing the prosecution. In addition to the learned District Attorney, there were two astute criminal lawyers who had been retained by the bank officers to assist him. The examination was very brief, and after calling Mr. Richards' servant, and receiving the testimony of the hotel clerk, Howard Burton was fully committed to answer the charges of murder and robbery at the January term of court.

"Can you not think of some one you know who saw you on the train from K—— to C—— on the night of the murder?" said I.

"No, sir; not one that I knew; but perhaps the conductor will remember me. He had to change a $5 bill for my fare, and grumbled a little about that."

"I will see him at once," said I, starting to go.

"Do so, do so," said my client, excitedly. "Call to his mind the young man who had a pen over his ear. I remember that on leaving the bank hurriedly I neglected to remove the pen which I frequently carry over my ear after the manner of clerks."

I went directly to the depot, and learned that the conductor I was in search of would arrive in about an hour. I waited, all impatience, and upon his arrival asked him if he would do me the kindness to walk up to the jail and see if he could identify Mr. Burton. He willingly consented, and, upon arriving at the prisoner's cell, I introduced him to my client. The conductor gazed steadily at young Burton for about a moment, and then said:

"Mr. Burton, be kind enough to put on your hat."

Burton did so, and again he looked at him very sharply without a change of countenance.

"Now, sir, please put your hand in your waistcoat pocket."

I was afraid the conductor was not going to identify him, but as young Burton put his hand in his waistcoat pocket the lappel of his coat was drawn back, revealing upon his breast a Masonic pin, the badge of a Knight Templar.

"I fully identify him as the man for whom I changed a five-dollar bill on my train, which left K—— at 6 o'clock on the evening of Dec. 24, and am ready to swear it in any court of justice. You see, sir," continued the conductor, "we learn in our business to remember, and noticing a pen over this young man's ear, I laughingly advised him to take it down. But what called my attention principally to him was the fact that he wore a Knight Templar's badge. I stooped to examine it. You see it is a very curiously made pin, and he remarked that he was not strictly entitled to wear it; it had formerly belonged to his father, who was dead. I shall be most happy to give my testimony in your behalf, Mr. Burton. And now, if I can get out, I will bid you good evening, gentlemen." So saying, the gentleman withdrew.

I saw that I could prove an alibi, and thus undoubtedly clear my client; but was ambitious to do more. I wanted to arrest and convict the guilty party. The next thing for me to do was to see the keeper of the cigar store, at which my Dutch painter on his way home had seen Mr. Richards after 6 p. m. on the night of the murder. On the following morning I took the train for K——, and on my arrival went directly to the cigar store, and then spoke to the man behind the counter of the murder.

"Oh!" said he, "poor man, poor man, he was in my store about an hour before they found him dead."

"Indeed," said I, "did he trade with you?"

"Oh, yes, sir; why he came in here, as I tell you, and bought some cigars that very night on which he was killed, and stopped a moment to chat with me. Then he looked at his watch, and said: 'It is a quarter past 6. I must go in and lock up the bank and go home.' Just then his man-servant came in and said:

"'Mr. Richards, I have a note from Miss Clara for you, sir.'

"'Well, Thomas,' said he, 'suppose it is for money; that usually is the subject of her perfumed notes to me; come into the bank a moment.'

"In a little while I saw the servant going in the direction of Mr. Richards' house, and in about an hour afterward his master was discovered in the bank dead."

This from the cigar-store keeper. I did not let him know I was attorney for the accused, and was soon turning my steps toward the late residence of the deceased. I was admitted by his late servant Thomas, and was soon conversing with Miss Clara, to whom I confided my relations with Burton. I asked her what time she sent Thomas to the bank the night her father was murdered.

"I did not send him at all," she replied, evidently surprised at the question.

"Well," said I, "we are going to acquit Howard Burton, and to take his place we want to find out who did commit the crime. Now, Miss Clara, are you sure you did not send Thomas to the bank the night of the murder?"

"I know very well I did not," was her answer.

"Then," I replied, "either the keeper of the cigar store is mistaken, or your servant Thomas is the murderer of your father."

She did not look as much surprised as I expected at this assertion.

"Mr. G——," said she, "the night poor papa was murdered, Thomas came through the hall and started to go up stairs. I wanted him to mend the fire and called him into the sitting-room. As he entered I noticed a large dark spot on his cheek, and one on his collar. I half suspected him when I heard how anxious he was to tell the court about that unfortunate little difficulty between papa and Howard Burton, but I did not say anything about it to any one, they were all so sure Howard was guilty."

I told her to treat Thomas as usual, and not to speak of our conversation to any one. After receiving a letter she wished to send to Burton, I took my departure for C——. Immediately on my arrival there I went to my client and communicated to him all I had learned, and delivered the letter. The poor fellow was supremely happy, and invited me to tea with him in his cell. He ate heartily, and smoked a cigar with evident enjoyment. I took the first real night's rest that night I had since the death of Mr. Richards. I had previously sworn out a warrant for the arrest of Thomas, to be served as soon as the jury should pronounce my client not guilty. The District Attorney opened for the people in an elaborate and very able speech, giving the details of the case, and then proceeded to examine the witnesses.

Thomas, the servant, was first called. He swore to the quarrel between Mr. Richards and Burton, and that he heard Burton threaten Mr. Richards' life. Notwithstanding I closely cross-examined him, I failed to make him contradict himself, and when he retired nearly every one in the court-room was doubtless certain that Howard Burton was guilty. The next witness was the hotel clerk, who testified that Burton came into the hotel while he was attending the guests from the train that arrived in C—— at half-past 6 o'clock. Then followed the examination of the bank cashier, who swore that the package of $9,000 found on Burton at the time of his arrest was deposited in his bank on the afternoon of the murder. After calling several other witnesses, whose testimony was of minor import, the prosecution rested. I then followed, and, after a brief opening address, called the German painter, who swore to seeing Mr. Richards send Burton on the errand; also to seeing Mr. Richards in the cigar store after 6 o'clock on the evening of the murder. When I had finished with him he was submitted to a severe cross-examination, in which he acquitted himself very creditably. Then I called the conductor, who swore to seeing Burton on the train on the night of the murder; he also swore that the train left on time—6 o'clock. The cigar-store man was next examined, who swore to talking with Mr. Richards at a quarter past 6, also to seeing him leave for the bank with Thomas. My witnesses were all cross-examined thoroughly, but did not contradict themselves in any particular. I then closed my case, and, after a few remarks from the prosecution, the Judge charged the jury, who retired, and in fifteen minutes returned with a verdict of not guilty. My client and I were overpowered with congratulations, and never since in my professional life have I felt as proud and triumphant as I did then.

As soon as quiet was restored, the Sheriff approached Thomas, the servant, and said in a loud voice, "Thomas Healey, I arrest you for the murder of Mr. Richards." The excitement in the court caused by this unlooked-for and sudden proceeding was most intense. The prisoner was immediately taken to jail, followed by a crowd that were loud in their expressions of denunciation—the same crowd that a little before had marked Burton as the murderer.

Well, to finish the story, I have little to add. I was retained by the bank officers to prosecute Thomas Healey, and he was convicted of the crime. He protested his innocence almost to the last, but the night before he was executed he made a full confession, stating that he had determined to rob the bank some evening when Mr. Richards was there alone. It was Mr. Richards' custom, he explained, to go to the bank in the evening, and when he and young Burton quarreled, he, Thomas, saw his opportunity. His determination was strengthened by hearing Mr. Richards remark on the day of the murder, as he sat at dinner, that there was an unusually large amount of cash on hand. The note in the case was one that Miss Clara had given him to take to her father some days before, but, Mr. Richards coming home before Thomas found him, it had not been delivered as intended. By the aid of this note he had got Mr. Richards in the bank, and while he was reading it he struck him with a large poker, and then cut his throat. He got no money as the reward of his crime, as the vaults had been locked.

The night Thomas made his confession he committed suicide, thus cheating the gallows-tree of its just due.

Howard Burton was made cashier of the bank, and married Clara Richards within a year, and they are both still living.

A SWEET CONSIGNMENT.

Two Hundred Thousand Pounds of California Honey in One Lot Received at New York—A Good Use for a Barren Country—Difficulties of Bee-Culture.

[From the New York Sun.]

Mr. J. S. Harbison, of San Diego county, California, arrived in this city yesterday with ten car-loads of honey, each car-load containing 20,000 pounds. This vast aggregation of bee labor was taken from Mr. Harbison's six apiaries on the sides of the coast range of mountains, as near to the Mexican line as they well can be and yet claim the protection of the stars and stripes. Twenty-five years ago Mr. Harbison made a stir in the world by selling at one time 2,000 pounds of honey, the product of his apiary, near New Castle, Pa. So much honey had never before been raised by a single producer, and the sale led hundreds of staid farmers to embark in what looked like a most profitable field of industry. The result was not flattering. Short seasons and limited bee pasturage forbade profitable bee-culture. Old-fashioned hives were then the only kind known. The modern means of robbing bees without killing them had not then been thought of.

Having invented a hive that enabled the culturist to obtain successive crops of honey from the same colony of bees, Mr. Harbison began to look for a region that would supply food for the bees. He searched for this in the equable climate of the Pacific coast, and found it in a strip of country in the extreme southwestern corner of the United States, now known as the bee-belt of California. Sheep-raising was the only industry of the natives found by Mr. Harbison when he first visited the country. The country, inland, was thought good enough for sheep pasturing, but no one dreamed that the soil could be made to produce grain in paying quantities. Timber was confined to bottoms of running streams and to the canons, the valleys and hillsides being covered with a growth of stunted brushwood, from which sprang a luxuriant growth of white sage, sumac, and other flowering shrubs, which bloom there nine months of the year.

Mr. Harbison's first apiary was started on a mountain side, twenty miles east of San Diego. He embarked for the West with seventy hives of bees, but these were reduced to sixty-two by casualties. From them he now has six apiaries, and a total of 3,009 hives. He employs fifteen men constantly, and is reaping rich profits from many thousands of acres that must otherwise have been a barren waste. He soon had many imitators, and now not less than three hundred persons are taking honey along the "bee-belt."

The California bee season, Mr. Harbison says, begins by Feb. 1. In March or April the bees swarm, and the bee culturist has lively times in saving the swarms. The science has become so systematized now that the apiculturist knows within a day or two when a given hive may be expected to swarm, and as the young bees always settle somewhere near the parent hive at least once before selecting their new quarters, a swarm is seldom lost. The flowers are at the height of their luxuriance in May and June, and taking of honey is begun usually about May 20, and the bees are kept at work as long as the flowers last. They cease to bloom in sufficient quantity to more than subsist the bees in the early part of August; but the little workers are able to find enough to live on without consuming their stores as late as October. It will thus be seen that the harvest time is never longer than three months, and is often much less. After October begins, although the air is still mild and spring-like, the bees cease to work, and retire into a semi-dormant condition. Once every eight or ten days a colony will turn out at midday and fly around for an hour or two in the sunshine, but they never fly far from the hive, and are never seen at work.

The food of the bees in the bee-belt is generally the flower of the white sage, a plant that closely resembles the garden sage.

Savings Banks.

The savings bank system of the world is the subject of an interesting report by the Italian Bureau of Statistics to the Statistical Congress at Buda-Pesth. The savings bank is modern. The first institution of the kind was opened at Berne, in Switzerland, in 1787. The first in the United States was founded in Philadelphia in 1818. In 1872 there were in Europe 9,000 savings banks, more than half of them in Great Britain, and holding a quarter of the total deposits of $1,100,000,000. Three years later, in the United States, there were less than 700 savings banks, with $850,000,000 of deposits. The United States has the heaviest amount of savings deposits; England follows, and Austria with Hungary comes next. Denmark has the largest per capita average of savings—about $28 for each inhabitant. The United States and Switzerland have $22 each; England, Germany and Austria have $10 for every inhabitant; and Italy $6. Holland puts little faith in savings banks, and in Russia proper there were in 1872 less than $4,000,000 of savings deposits. The only European institution that is as large as the largest American banks is the Vienna Bank, which has $40,000,000 of deposits. The deposits of the Caisse d'Epargne at Paris declined from $14,000,000 in 1840 to $8,000,000 in 1875. The Berlin Bank—a monopoly—had at the close of 1874 only $4,000,000 of deposits. In England and in France the deposits are invested in Government securities; in other countries bonds and mortgages are favorite investments; but in Norway three-quarters of the savings deposits are in commercial paper.

Grass Widows.

The term "grass widow," says the Kinderhook Rough Notes, is said to be a corruption of "grace widow," the former expression being merely a barbarism. "Grace widow" is the term applied to one who becomes a widow by grace or favor, not of necessity, as by death, and originated in the early ages of European civilization, when divorces were granted, but seldom and wholly by the Catholic Church. When such a decree was granted to a woman, the Papal receipt stated "Viduca de gratia," which interpreted is "widow of grace." In the law of the French it would read, "Veuve de grace," or "grace widow," "veuve" being translated as "widow."

IN A SWING.

[HE.]

Each daisy underneath your feet
Should count itself thrice happy, sweet;
Each purple trodden clover-head
Should thank you even when 'tis dead.
How blest is every twisted strand
Of rope, encircled by your hand!
Now up a little; faster! so!
While through the soft June air you go,
I wish that I might always stay
Below you, as I am to-day,
Keeping you far above all care
That other women have to bear;
And high in air though you might be,
You always must come back to me.

[SHE.]

Dear heart, if June staid all year long,
If twisted ropes were always strong,
If daisy-bloom and clover-head
Were never brown and withered;
If every robin on the tree
Did not look down and wink at me,
And say: "That creature tries to fly,
But knows not how to soar on high;
If I could bring these things to pass,
Then you should stand upon the grass,
And I above your head would swing.
But life is quite another thing;
Since one of us on earth must bide,
The other should not leave his side.

THE MOUND-BUILDERS.

The Original Native Americans—Interesting Relics at the Centennial.

[From the Philadelphia Press.]

In addition to the many interesting relics of the American stone age, already described, the Smithsonian Institute's collection in the Government building continues on into the age of copper, many rare and valuable specimens of this class of products of aboriginal skill being shown. The implements include celts or chisels, axes, hatchets, and other cutting tools, all hammered out of cold metal instead of being cast. The Indians never shaped copper by any other process than the tedious one of slowly hammering it into the form required, and yet it is strange that, although in placing it upon their funeral piles they must have seen the copper melt and assume the shape of surrounding obstacles, the idea of casting it never occurred to them. There are also displayed a large quantity of large beads, bracelets, tubes probably used for pipe-stems, and other articles of utility and ornament, all roughly shaped, but some of them finely polished. Passing on, the visitor finds a large number of implements and ornaments made of bone and shells. In this collection are included smoothing tools, wedges, finely-polished perforators, harpoon-heads, fish-hooks, knive—or rather, instruments sharpened like knives, but without an edge—and a great variety of whistles. The whistles are made in all sorts of forms, from many kinds of shells and several parts of the skeletons of animals. What their use was can only be conjectured, as some of them give forth a mere squeak, while others sound loud and shrill. Several are made of birds' bills. Near this collection is a number of shells used as cups for holding asphaltum, a substance largely employed by the Indians as a kind of glue, and some of the cups still have the asphaltum in them. The beads are globular only in exceptional cases, generally they are large, flat discs, coarsely made, and as inartistic as they must have been useless. The next row of cases contains many valuable relics left by the mysterious mound-builders of centuries or ages ago. These mounds have been found in many different portions of the country, but all are made on the same general principle, and all contain remains of the dead, curious old pottery, strange weapons, etc. The mound-builders were evidently a totally different people from the Indians of the North and West, and some enthusiasts have endeavored to identify them with the Toltecs, who were afterward conquered by the Aztecs, the theory being that as they journeyed south they erected these mounds on the way. But one of the first lessons deducible from history teaches that mental advancement or culture always begins in warm countries, where food and clothing may be obtained without labor, and the mind is therefore left free for reflection. Then as the seeds of advancement are carried North they are more and more developed by people who seize upon every improvement which can minister to their necessities. Again, Indians and the mound-builders ornamented their pottery with figures impressed with basket-work or cut with a curiously-carved stone called the "cartaugh," a stamp which, being cylindrical in shape, was rolled around the vase so that the raised surfaces could follow in any direction in regular lines. One remarkable specimen of a funeral urn exhibited was found in Georgia in a low mound always (so far as the record extends) covered with impenetrable cane-brake lying beneath a vast swamp forest, which is subject to the yearly overflow of the Oconee river. The urn is only two feet in height by a foot in diameter, and is ornamented with basket-work figures. When found it had an arched lid and was hermetically sealed; on opening the strange relic, remains of teeth, fingers, toes, etc., were found, but they soon crumbled to dust when exposed to the air. There is no way to estimate with any degree of certainty the age of this funeral urn, but very fortunately a discovery has been made which shows conclusively that all the mound-builders did not die so many ages ago as some theorists would have us believe. Dr. Swift found in mounds in both Maryland and Louisiana the same typical vessels, and with them the remains of the sus scrofus, or common hog. As the hog was not known in this country until introduced by the Spaniards in the middle of the seventeenth century, it is very evident that the mounds in question must have been of still more recent date. In exploring another mound Dr. Swift came upon the remains of a horse connected with several vases and two chipped and polished jasper celts. As the horse was introduced by the Spaniards at about the same time, and as the relics found in it correspond closely to those discovered in places where it is impossible to fix a date, it is presumable that the other mounds are not of much more ancient origin. Only about fifty years ago the Sioux chief Blackbird was buried in the presence of several whites after a fashion not greatly differing from that of the mound-builders. The dead chief was mounted on his favorite pony, spear in hand, and with all the weapons or implements which could be of any possible use in this or the next world, and over him was piled a mound eighteen feet high. Among the Southern Indians the same kind of mounds are found, and all contain pottery cells, perforators, stone hammers, etc., while some of them hold the remains of Jesuit fathers, who came over in the seventeenth century. Between 150 and 175 years ago Del Pratz saw the Southern Indians manufacturing the long-necked pottery and ornamenting it with basket-work. Taking all the evidence afforded by both theorists, it seems more than probable that the strange specimens of mound pottery in the Government building must have been the work of Southern Indians more advanced than the tribes left behind by the northward movement. Many interesting carvings in stone and ornaments of earthenware are also exhibited, some of them showing marked artistic genius combined with considerable skill, and others having but faint resemblance to the objects intended to be represented. Many of them, though rudely designed, are evidently of a nature which proves most conclusively that the moral standard of the aborigines must have been of the lowest possible grade, and it is not matter of regret that the artists were not always able to clearly express their ideas. A collection of pottery ornaments and carvings by the Mexican Indians bears a close resemblance, in general design, to antique Japanese ware, and, in fact, this Mongolian influence can be traced all the way from the Northwest Indians to the aborigines on the gulf coast. There is the same evidence of patient, imitative labor, the love of ornament, the same incongruous idea of beauty, and, in some cases, almost identical designs.

MAP-DRAWING BY LIGHTNING.

How a Man's Signature Might be Sent One Thousand Miles.

There is now in operation between the Signal Service section of the Centennial Exhibition and the Chief Signal Office at Washington, on a circuit about 150 miles long, an instrument which transmits by telegraph the weather maps of the Signal Service, heretofore produced only in Washington. This invention reproduces the map entire, with its lines and figures. The map or message to be sent is first written upon ordinary paper with ink in which a little glycerine has been mixed; then before the ink is dry it is sprinkled with some powdered shellac, which adheres to the ink. The manuscript is then passed between rollers, with the face against a piece of hot zinc; the latter takes up the shellac, and a negative is produced in shellac, the best non-conductor of electricity, upon zinc, a good conductor. This plate is then bent around a cylinder, which is rapidly revolved, while a metallic point connected with the conducting wire is held to its surface by a spring and makes a spiral line over the face of the cylinder. At the receiving instrument a similar point traverses the surface of a similar cylinder upon which is placed a piece of chemically-prepared paper.

As the transmitting point comes to the line of writing, the receiving point makes a dot on the paper by decomposing the chemically-prepared paper; and as every portion of the writing is touched by the transmitting point, the result will be a fac simile of the original writing or device. To produce this result, it is necessary, of course, that the two cylinders should revolve exactly together, as, if one should go faster than the other, the discolored paper would be a confused mass of dots. In this consists the great novelty of the invention. Isochronous motion of the cylinders is secured by a magnet at the receiving station, which at each revolution of the transmitting cylinder accelerates the motion of the receiving cylinder if too slow, or retards it if too fast.—Philadelphia Ledger.

A Pint Wasn't Enough.

John Jarvis was a native of Dublin, where he practiced the art of painting on glass for some time, and then removed to London, where he soon gained for himself a high reputation. When the bacchanalian propensities of Jarvis had rendered him rather an unequal, if not an unsafe, artist, he was employed by a gentleman to paint his wife's portrait—a miracle of plainness—under the stipulation that a pint of wine at a single sitting must be the extent of his potations. Jarvis assented, and in a short time produced a perfect fac-simile of the lady. On exhibiting it to the husband, he seemed disappointed. "Couldn't you have done it," said he to the painter, "a little less—that is, couldn't you give it a little more——" "If you expect me," responded Jarvis, seeing the husband's drift at once, "to make a handsome portrait of your wife, I must have more than a pint of wine at a sitting. I couldn't get up imagination enough to make her good-looking under a quart at the very least."

The Oil Territory.

The Titusville (Pa.) Herald records a rapid and marked appreciation in the value of oil during the third quarter of the present year, and adds: "We are shipping 40,000 barrels of crude per day, and have only a production of 20,000 barrels per day. Our stock on hand in iron tanks is estimated to be a little over 3,000,000 barrels. In order to supply the home and export demand for the next three months it will require this 40,000 barrels per day of shipments to be kept up, or a draft upon the stocks of over 1,250,000 barrels before Jan. 1, provided our production does not materially increase during the interim. By the close of this month the number of drilling wells on new and old territory will have reached some 800 to 1,000, which, from the steady decline in existing wells, is inadequate to keep up the production, unless, perchance, some new and prolific territory in the meanwhile is discovered. For the first time in the history of the region, therefore, we are compelled to fall back upon old territory to keep up the supply.

An Honorable Nation.

The prospect of war between England and Russia brings to mind a peculiar fact in their last contest in the Crimea, which shows the honorable character of the Russian Government, and which, moreover, is said to be unprecedented in history. Previous to the outbreak of the war, Russia had made several heavy loans in England, the interest upon which was payable in London every six months. Although the war continued over two years, yet Russia regularly sent the money to meet her obligations, due to her open foe. She declined to act the part that is usually played in war, that is to injure the enemy as much as possible. As a consequence her credit has ever since been exceedingly high on the English market. The old money-lenders of London remember the act as a rare one, and have been very ready to let go of their cash when asked for it by that "most honorable country, Russia."

Matias Romero, when he was in Washington as the Mexican Minister, married an American woman. Lately she eloped from their home, in Mexico, with Olestino Negrete, a journalist, who left a wife behind and took a fortune with him. Romero is a member of the Mexican Congress, and he was informed of his wife's flight just as he was about to deliver an address. He went on with the speech without embarrassment or confusion.

A Compliment to American Industry.

The Grand Niebelungen Orchestra at Bayreuth, under the leadership of Hans Richter and August Wilhelmy, have presented to Richard Wagner a beautiful Concert Grand of Messrs. George Steck & Co.'s make, New York, which is not only a high compliment to the well-known firm, but also to American industry. This is the same firm that was the recipient of the only Gold Medal for best pianos at the World's Fair in Vienna, 1873, and which was also just now awarded the first prize at the Centennial Exhibition, George Steck & Co.'s name being placed at the head of the list of awards for pianos, theirs having again proved to be the finest in tone and of greater durability than all other instruments on exhibition. The Steck pianos stand thus acknowledged before the world as being above all competition, and are therefore preferable to purchasers who wish to secure a strictly first-class and reliable instrument.

Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organ Declared Best at the Centennial.

Medals and diplomas have been so numerously awarded at the Centennial in Philadelphia that they indicate nothing as to the comparative merits of exhibits. The Judges' Reports alone determine rank in excellence. These unequivocally assign to the Mason & Hamlin Organs "the first rank in the several requisites of such instruments," which "is as much," says the New York Tribune, "as to say they are the best reed organs exhibited, in all important qualities."

Steinway's Victory and Laurels.

The following official report of the Judges of Awards, accompanying the Medal, shows conclusively that the highest honors in the gift of the Centennial authorities were unanimously awarded to Steinway & Sons, viz.: "For greatest concert capacity in Grand pianos, as also highest degree of excellence in all their styles of pianos, viz.: largest volume, purity and duration of tone, and extraordinary carrying capacity with precision and durability of mechanism; also, novel disposition of the strings, and construction and bracing of the metal frame."

The report then minutely describes and emphatically indorses the six principal patented improvements which have made the Steinway

THE STANDARD PIANOS OF THE WORLD.

Referring to Steinway's exhibits in Machinery Hall of samples of hardware, metal frames and patent tubular actions, the report further states: "These articles of composite metal show the highest perfection of finish and workmanship and the greatest firmness and uniformity of metal structure, a steel-like and sounding quality with a tensile strength exceeding 5,000 pounds per square centimetre, as demonstrated by actual tests. The full metal frames of cupola shape possess an unequaled degree of resistance, permitting a vastly increased tension of strings without the slightest danger of break or crack in said metal frames, thereby considerably increasing the vibratory power, and augmenting the lasting qualities of their instruments."

Pimples on the face, rough skin, chapped hands, saltrheum and all cutaneous affections cured, the skin made soft and smooth, by the use of Juniper Tar Soap. That made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, is the only kind that can be relied on, as there are many imitations, made from common tar, which are worthless.

A missionary, just returned, says he regards Johnson's Anodyne Liniment as beyond all price, and efficacious beyond any other medicine. It is adapted to a great variety of special cases, and is the best pain curer in the world.

Fevers seldom make an attack without warning, and may often be thrown off by soaking the feet in warm water, wrapping up warm in bed, and taking two or three of Parsons' Purgative Pills.

The Ohio State Fair awarded the first premium for pianos to the Ohio Valley Piano Company, of Ripley. They are manufacturers of the celebrated Valley Gem, the most popular instrument now sold in the West.

Highest Honors
AT THE CENTENNIAL!
MASON & HAMLIN
Cabinet Organs
Unanimously Assigned the
"FIRST RANK
IN THE
SEVERAL REQUISITES"
Of Such Instruments!

MEDALS OF EQUAL MERIT have been awarded all articles deemed worthy of recognition, so that it will be easy for many makers to advertise that they have received "highest medals." It is by the JUDGES' REPORTS ONLY, that competing articles are assigned their comparative rank in excellence. From these reports the following is an extract:

"THE MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN CO.'S exhibit of Reed Organs and Harmoniums shows instruments of the FIRST RANK IN THE SEVERAL REQUISITES OF INSTRUMENTS OF THE CLASS, viz.: Smoothness and equal distribution of tone, scope of expression, resonance and singing quality, freedom and quickness in action of keys and bellows, with thoroughness of workmanship, combined with simplicity of action." (Signed by all the Judges.)

The MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS are thus declared to RANK FIRST, not in one or two respects only, but in ALL the IMPORTANT QUALITIES of such instruments; and they are the ONLY organs assigned this rank.

This triumph was not unexpected, for the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs have uniformly been awarded the highest honors in competitions in America, there having been scarcely six exceptions in hundreds of competitions. They were awarded HIGHEST HONORS and first medals—PARIS, 1867; VIENNA, 1873; SANTIAGO, 1875; PHILADELPHIA, 1876; and have thus been awarded highest honors at every World's Exposition at which they have been exhibited; being the only American Organs which have ever obtained any award at any competition with best European makers, or in any European World's Exposition!

Insist on having a Mason & Hamlin Organ; do not take any other. Dealers often recommend inferior organs because they are paid larger commissions for selling them.

NEW STYLES, with EXTENDED TOPS, very elegant, and other improvements, exhibited at the CENTENNIAL; elegant new cases in great variety. Prices lowest consistent with best material and workmanship. Organs sold for cash or installments, or rented until rent pays. Every Organ warranted to give satisfaction to every reasonable purchaser or THE MONEY RETURNED. ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUES sent free. MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN CO.—154 Tremont Street, Boston; 25 Union Square, New York; 80 and 84 Adams Street, Chicago.

REMARKABLE LETTER
From a Gentleman Known and Honored from the Atlantic to the Pacific Coast.

Messrs. WEEKS & POTTER, Wholesale Druggists, Boston, Mass.: Gentlemen,—I have for some months felt it a duty that I owed to suffering humanity to write you, stating the great benefit that I have derived from the use of SANFORD'S RADICAL CURE FOR CATARRH. For more than 20 years I have been afflicted with this very troublesome complaint. I have tried all the remedies that I could find, but without material or permanent benefit. Last fall the disease had arrived at that state that I must have relief or die. The entire membranous system had become so inflamed, and the stomach so disordered, that it was a doubtful matter whether I could go to the Pacific coast, or if I did go whether I should live to come back or not. I saw an advertisement of this medicine, and although being very incredulous about specifics or nostrums of any kind, yet in sheer desperation I tried this, and was at once benefited by it. The changes of climate, a chronic disease of the liver, and my age—over 70—may prevent my entire restoration, but the benefit I derive from its daily use is to me incalculable, and I am hoping to be completely cured, and at last arrive at a respectable old age.

If this statement of my case can be of any service to those afflicted as I have been, and enable you to bring this remedy into more general use, especially on the Pacific coast (where it is much needed), my object in writing this note will be obtained.

Very truly yours, HENRY WELLS,
AURORA, N. Y., June, 1876. of Wells, Fargo & Co.

"BACKBONE."

Rev. W. L. Sanders, of the N. Y. Lyceum Bureau, lectures in Ensley's Hall, Tuesday evening, Nov. 9th, 1876. The subject "Backbone" which is one of Mr. Sanders' most brilliatn efforts will without doubt be a rare treat. The committee have decided to sell tickets at the low price of 25 cents, in order that all may be able to avail themselves of this literary treat. Tickets for sale at Houser's Book Store, F. E. Davenpatt's and John H. Ehlers'. Doors open at 7 o'clock, lecture to commence at 8 o'clock p. m. Reserved seats 35 cents.

H. C. SHULL.

If Indiana had elected the Republican ticket, as was confidently expected by the managers at Washington, and if Ohio had responded to the call for a large majority with a vote to inspire confidence, no troops would have been sent to South Carolina. The panic that followed these elections was the real cause of the outrage which is now witnessed, and for which some of the conspirators concerned in getting it up are likely to be called to account when Congress comes together.

The Presidential election takes place on Tuesday, November 7th. Don't forget to vote for TILDEN and HENDRICKS. The people demand a change.

Gen. Comeron, of Chicago, received a letter, the other day, from Gen Fritz Henry Warren, the old commander of the Fifth Army Corps, in which he pronounces for Tilden, and predicts an easy victory for him, not only in his State of New York, but in the Nation large. Gen. Corse received a letter of similar tone and import from Col. Geo. Ward Nichols, formerly of Sherman's staff, and author of the book, "Sherman's March to the Sea."

If one-fourth of the troops that have been sent to South Carolina, to keep thieves in office and to drive the colored voters into the support of Chamberlain and his crew, had been sent against the Sioux Indians, the country would not have to mourn the loss of Custer and his gallant soldiers, who were shamefully sacrificed by criminal neglect. The Administration is far more zealous and ready to make war on an outraged people, struggling for honest government than on the savages fighting against the advance of civilization.

Wade Hampton's Advice.

Gen Hampton, in a speech at Aiken, told the people to offer no resistance to arrest, but to submit quietly to every thing. If United States soldiers are ordered to fire upon the people the latter must not resist, but bear their breasts and be willing to die for the good of the country. The people are determined upon a peaceful victory, and must give no pretext to their enemies to find the slightest grounds for the charges made.

The Presidential Election takes place on Tuesday, November 7th. Don't forget to vote for Tilden and Hendricks. The people demand a change.

Let no Democrat who thinks "that reform is necessary," and who is in favor of "a change of measures and of men," fail to put forth every effort in his power from now until the polls are closed on the 7th of Nov. Do not imagine because victory perched npon our banner in October that the Republican party has been vanquished. They are on a "still hunt," and will use every means in their power to overcome the majority now against them. Let every man do his duty, and we shall carry Indiana for Tilden, Hendricks and reform, by at least 10,000 majority.

The Presidential Election takes place on Tuesday, November 7th. Don't forget to vote for Tilden and Hendricks. The people demand a change.

The Republican Pyramid.

The following pyramid embraces only a few of the many crimes perpetrated by the Republican party. We have purposely placed it on its apex, and the corrupt Blaine beneath the whole superstructure to indicate the rottenness of its foundation.

Frauds in the Navy Department.
Whiskey Revenue Frauds.
Credit Mobilier Swindles.
Indian Bureau Swindles
Currency Contraction.
Custom House Frauds
Pacific Mail Subsidy
Post Office Frauds
Specie Payments
Back Pay Steal.
Army Subsidies
Boss Shepherd
Belknap.
Nepotism.
Blaine.

The Presinential candidate of radical bloody-shirtism and the American alliance writes one day to old man LeRoy: "I never knew any such person as Nelson J. LeRoy." Ten days after he writes again: "I did know Nelson J. LeRoy, but never had any of his money." And a week or two thereafter he writes, substantially, this: "I did have some of Nelson J. LeRoy's money, but returned it to him before the battle in which he was killed." Here the poor fellow's friends stepped in and choked him off, or, the chances are, he would speedily have made a clean breast of it and confessed the whole thing.

The Presidential Election takes place on Tuesday, November 7th. Don't forget to vote for Tilden and Hendricks. The people demard a change.

Charles Francis Adams was right when he said that this was fast settling down into contest "between the people and the managers." In the October States, with all the power of the administration and all of its money, two of the three States went Democratic, and one was barely saved by a greatly reduced majority. On one side were the people: on the other side was the great Federal machine. This great conflict is now to be repeated on the soil of the great State of New York. On the one side will be the people, who insist upon reform and retrenchment; on the other will be Mr. Chandler and Mr. Hayes with their cohort of officeholders and their money bags, ready to do or dare anything than suffer defeat. The people have smashed the Federal machine in Indiana and West Virginia, and they have racked it badly in Ohio. We expect to see them grind it to powder in New York.

Chamberlain has issued an order disbanding the company known as the German Fusileers, in Charleston, which is among the oldest and most respected military organizations in the Union, dating back to 1775, and having served in the Revolution, the War of 1812, and and the war in Mexico. The Germans in Aiken recently published an address to their countrymen, exposing the outrages to which the people of that region have been subjected; and those in Charleston are united with them, in the effort to substitute an honest government for one of fraud, thievery and undistinguished rascality. Hence this war on citizens of German birth which is inspired from Washington, where the administration makes no secret of hostility to the Germans, and Grant is outspoken in his contempt for Carl Schurz and others like him, whom he brands as "Dutch mercenaries" that are doing Hayes and the Republican party far more harm than good.

The Presidential Election takes place on Tuesday, November 7th. Don't forget to vote for Tilden and Hendricks. The people demand a change.

The Radical Ticket.

The Democracy positively intend, should they gain power, to make the North pay the war losses of the south.—Gazette.

Intelligent voter, you are expected to read such bosh as the above, and go forthwith and—

Vote for Belknap's briberies,
Vote for Robeson's robberies,
Vote for Shepherd's stealings,
Vote for Blaine's railroad jobs,
Vote for Bancock's whisky steals,
Vote for Creswell's straw-bids,
Vote for Grant's bayonet rule,
Vote for Taft's tyrannies,
Vote for Camron's despotism,
Vote for radical corruption,
Vote to continue Grantism,
Vote for the whisky frauds,
Vote to increase the taxes,
Vote to prolong hard times,
Vote for bayonets instead of ballots,
Vote against reform,
Vote against economy,
Vote against honesty,
Vote away your own interests.
Will you do it?—Pittsburg Post.

Last night the Republicans perform at Ensley's Hall. The Glee Club will sag speeches were be made, etc. Now, gentlemen, we don't like to discourage, but that is all lost time. Tilden is bound to win.

A Poor Show for Hayes.

The St. Louis Times says: Hayes' Lieutenant-Governor, Thomas L. Young says that Tilden is as likely to carry Ohio as Hayes. The Cincinnati Gazette the leading Republican organ of that State, reinforces the opinion by saying: "That Ohio is decidedly Republican we have no doubt; but at the same time it is possibly Democratic." One would suppose that it can not be decidedly republican if it is possibly Democratic.—The Gazette further says; "We must not conclude that Ohio is safe for Hayes It is safe provided Republicans do their whole duty. * * But nothing short of hard, constant and determined work will give a victory." When Ohio weakens like this, and Republicans seriously doubt the ability of Grant's figure-head to cary his own State, what can be expected elsewhere?

The Presidential Election takes place on Tuesday, November 7th. Don't forget to vote for Tilden and Hendricks. The people demand a change.

A Good Reason.

Ex-Gov. Joel Parker, of New Jersey, in a speech a few years ago, at Newark, gives this as his reason why he cannot support Hayes for President. It is in reply to corruptionists. He says: "The other day," said he, "Blaine told us why he was opposed to the election of Mr. Tilden. Now I will tell you in brief why I oppose the election of Mr. Hayes. When he entered on his duties as Governor a bill was passed reducing fees in the state $300,000, but this bill was repealed. He certainly did not veto it, but he used his influence against the measure. He was in Congress for three years, and not one Republican in ten thousand remembered anything about him after he got there. The only speech he made was explaining his vote on a subsidy for a railroad corporation."

Mr. Parker added that hif chies objection to Mr. Hayes was because it would be a continuation of the present corrupt federal administration. Mr. Hayes must continue in office the men who are advancing his cause. [Cries of Blaine, Belknap, Morton, Shepherd and Chandler.) Who is it that congratulated Mr. Hayes when he received the nomination? Grant and Blaine. The ring at Washington must be the men who will surround him and give tone to his administration, and therefore the speaker thought Hayes should not be elected.

The present government has brought almost financial ruin on the country; in fact, it is going from bad to worse; we have labor without employment, men going from door to door begging their bread and our commerce driven from the seas. The administration is incapable of conducting a system of finance necessary for the country's prosperity.

No man should throw away his vote on the 7th of November. There's but two sides of the question. It is Grantism in, or Grantism out. Those who want Grantism out, will vote for Tilden Hendricks and Reform. Vote so as to hit the bull's eye. Throw no vote away on Cooper and Cary. They are good enough men, but there is no possible chance for their election, and it will influence, to some entent, the Radical party.

It May Save Your Life.

There is no person living but what suffers more or less with Lung Disease, Coughs, Colds or Consumption, yet some would die rather than to pay 75 cents for a bottle of medicine that would cure them. Dr. A. Boschee's German Syrup has lately been introduced in this country from Germany, and its wonderous cures astonishes every one that try it. If you doubt what we say in print, cut this out and take it to your Druggist, F. E. Davenport, and get a sample bottle for 10 cents and try it, or a regular size for 75 cents.

Liquor License.

Notice is hereby given to the citizens of Jackson township, in DeKalb County, Indiana, that the undersigned a male inhabitant of said township, that he will make application at the next session of the Board of Commissioners of said county, to be holden on the first monday of December 1876, for license to retail intoxicating liquors in a less quantity than a quart at a time with the privilege of having the same drank on the premises, to-wit: In the building now situated in Section six [6] in said township on land bounded on the North by the township line, on the West by the right of way of the Ft. Wayne, Jackson & Saginaw Railroad Company, on the South by the right of way of the Baltimore, Pittsburg & Chicago Railroad Company, and on the East by the right of way of the Detroit Eel River & Illinois Railroad Company, containing seven tenths of an acre of land.

CHRISTOPHER BAKER.

W. H. DILLS, Atty.

Gov. Tilden on the Rebel War Claims.

Let everybody read the convincing letter of Gov. Tilden concerning the bugbear of Southern war claims in today's paper. Calmly and with invincible logic he effectually disposed of this specture raised by the Republicans to frighten timid and thoughtless Northern voters.

He promises in clear and explicit language that if elected so far as depends on him, no rebel losses shall be recognized or paid, whether covered by the Fourteenth Amendment or not, that the cotton tax shall not be refunded, and that he will veto every bill providing for the assumption or payment of such debts, claims or losses. Gov. Tilden could not use stronger language than he does in this letter or more effectually sweep away the bugbear manufactured by demagogues.

His most interesting point is that the danger to the Treasury is not from rebel claims, but from those of real or pretended loyal men in the South during the war. These claims are great in number and enormous in their aggregate amount. They are also tainted with fraud, and a tireless lobby has long been using all its corrupt arts to get them paid. The Republican Rings are interested in them, and with a Republican President we might safely expect to see them draw many millions from the Treasury on fraudulent representations and against law and precedent. Mr. Tilden would defeat this conspiracy, and instead of the allowances of war claims increasing under his administration his jealous scrutiny of the claims would greatly decrease the inroads on the Treasury.

The letter of Gov. Tilden is sound and important.

We learn that Henry Funk purchased a shot gun and started for the Black Hills. He may have done all of this, but we learn he only got as far as Kendallville, and is now "slinging mud" in that city.

Mr. Tilden has declared his fixed and unalterable opposition to the claims of disloyal persons in the South who suffered damaged during the war. Not a word have we heard from Mr Hayes on the subject.

Hold on a little. We have now about as much wood as we can use for the next year. We would like to take wood from everybody, but our hands won't take it in exchange for their labor, nor will our paper dealers receive it in payment and we hope something else besides wood will be offered.

The editor of the Garrett News is reminded that any attempt to get up a split in the Democratic party in this county will not meet with as much success as his efforts in that direction in another county. The growling on his part after the election is only proof that he was defeated in his purposes.

The Kendallville Standard takes up the cry of illegal voting at Garrett. It says, "out of the 919 votes polled at Garrett, at least 300 were fraudulent. So we think. We believe there was only 619 legal votes polled, and all over that were bad. There were only 619 polled altogether.

John Roost, of Holland City, one of the most upright and intelligent public men of Western Michigan, and heretofore an active Republican, has come out for Tilden. He is posted for a Democratic speech at Grand Rapids this evening.

The Republican party, according to John Sherman, has paid over $100,000,000 of "Rebel Claims" since the close of the war. The Democrats have not paid one dollar. Remember this when you see a Republican demagogue frothing at the mouth.

The latest trick of the demoralized Hayes people is to send Hayes men about the country where they are not known, to represent themselves as owners of immense rebel claims, which they shall present if Tilden is elected. It is a characteristic dodge.

Parson Brownlow, good Republican authority, says that the carpet-baggers only stop stealing when they have taken everything that is portable. When the people desire to stop them by peaceable means Grant and Hayes come to the aid of the theives with bayonet.

Chandler took the opportunity between drinks last week to send out a feeble address to the spoilsmen, in imitation of the lucid document of the Democratic Committee. Zack no doubt grinned horribly a ghostly smile when he penned the concluding lines about reform within his own party.

The prospect of an honest election is very irritating to Democrats.—Grant-Hayes Paper.

Does history record an instance of men in power using the military to secure an "honest election." Patrick Henry said—"These are the instrument of war and subjugation—the last arguments to which kings resort." Tyrants are affraid of an "honest election"—afraid to trust the people.

Spurious Tickets.

We are informed that the Republicans are circulating all over the State fraudulent Democratic tickets, poll books and tally sheets. Read the ticket as printed in the COURIER and see that the ticket you vote is the same.

Rev. Mr Welsh joined in wedlock the following couples last week:

J. C. Frets and Miss Willmeattie Philips, of this county.

Mr. Smith, of Ohio, and Miss Emma Ford, of this city were married on Friday last.

Gen. Sigel.

The Republicans are so mad and desperate that they even make dirty flings against Gen. Sigel. The Indianian says the General did not amount to much in an advance on an enemy, and yet they cry about their love for the soldiers. Our German friends out to keep an eye on this when they come to vote.

Bodine and Siler have employed Eli. Kuhlman who will attend to filling all precriptions. Mr. Kuhlman has had years of experience and is perfectly reliable. He is a graduate of Ann Arbor Mich., College and has taken a thorough course in chemestry. He also speaks the German and English language.

Every time that Hayes was a candidate in Ohio he received a vote smaller than had been given his Republican predecessor. If he loses in Ohio the coming election in proportion to his former losses he will lose the State by about seven thousand.

The election of Hayes would mean the enforcement of the Resumption Act Business men who are not prepared for that sort of disaster should be careful about the kind of ballot they drop in the box on the 7th.

Every man who feels the pinching hard times ought to vote for a change in the administration. What the country wants is reform and better times, and Samuel J. Tilden will give both to the people

Auburn Hayesits offered a short time ago to bet $100 on the election of Hayes He has just returned from a trip to the Centennial and the East, and sadly and sorrowfully shakes his head, and says he don't care to bet now. They are a sad and disgusted lot.

The concert at Sedan last Friday evening, conducted by L. W. Treesh for the benefit of the Sabbath School was a success, especially the musically part of it. Miss Mary Lewis, of this city, presided at the organ in a way that did credit to herself and added cheer and enjoyment to the occasion.

Slander, lies and personal abuse are the chief staple of the Grant Hayes canvass. Tilden is lied about most maliciously, and so with all the other candidates. In this county the Belknappers are badly scared, and have gone to lying like Ananias or Jim Blaine. It won't win.

Keep the ball rolling until the 7th of November. We shall relax none of our efforts because of our late splendid victory. That was achieved as the result of hard and persistent work. The same effort will secure another in November, while inaction and listlessness might rob us of the palm now almost within our grasp. Be up and doing.

The long even's are coming on, and people should look out for their reading matter. As the campaign closes we propose to make the COURIER fully as attractive as ever as a local paper, and if possible will add new and attractive features. Our correspondents should commence to send brief paragraphs of the local news in their neighborhoods.

Enthusiasm among Hayes politicians is a scarce commodity. Their forlorn faces tell said tales of forebodings of coming defeat. Cheer up, boys; Uncle Sammy will give us a glorious administration, in which expenses will be reduced, taxes greatly lessened, prosperity will be revived, and Grantism will disappear forever.

Some boys have raised a pole on Cedar Street. After it was up all right they took a vote and it resulted:

Tilden & Hendricks........................25
Hayes & Wheeler...........................00

After one little fellow went home and ask his pa how he should vote, he returned and said: "I'll stand in for Tilden, too. The old man said, "boy stay by your old par-i-ents."

As the Republican, wistles to keep its courage up politically, so it argues gravely to convince people that we are not suffering from hard times. Perhaps the unemployed laborers of the city and the harrassed business men would forget their pinching necessities if they would read tne rose-colored report of the Republican papers, and listen to arguments of a few on the street corners.

Game Supper.

At a meeting of the members and friends of the M. E Church, held in the Lecture-room on Monday evening, it was decided to give another game supper similiar to the one which gave such unbounded satisfaction last season, on Friday evening, Nov. 17th. Dr. J. H. Ford, was chosen captain of the shooting club, to collect the necessary game and another meeting was call for next Monday evening to appoint the necessary committees

CHARLESTON, October 27.—Sixty Northern merchants, resident and doing business here, held a meeting to-night and adopted an address to the people of the United States declaring Gov. Chamberlain's proclamation unwarranted by the real condition of the State, and fully endorsing the recent statement issued by the clergy and bankers of Charleston.

Robt. McDougal got all the hollow-eve he wanted. When on his way home he met the party that was out for the purpose of throwing cabbage stocks, and when going throw the alley between Geo. Ralston's and Dry. Houghton's, some one began to send potates and sich in the crowd. The boys soon got away, but Rob received several belts about the scontz, and we learn was knocked down with a potato, striking him on the eye.

The October victories are having a most encouraging effect upon the supporters of Tilden throughout the country. We have heard of a number of new recruits since those elections, in this county. The Tilden column is constantly receiving recruits, and is moving grandly forward to assured victory. Every Democrat must be at his post on Tuesday next and labor for Tilden, Honesty, Reform and a change of government.

The old fashion parties where hugging and kissing constituted the chief part of enjoyment, are rapidly going out of date, and intellectual amusements are indulged in instead. That is what an Auburn lad told his girl the other night when she asked him why he was not at the party. He has not had an invitation to anything but a chopping bee for five years, to our certain knowledge, and then fool his girl like that.

The Garrett City News(ance) makes a terrible pow-wow over a word that happened to be wrong. It was marked in the proof, old sweetness, but it was not corrected. Before you correct for other people, Mr. News, do a little for yourself. We think the make up and general appearance of you payer shows plainly you don't understand your business. Again we'll remind you to do a little sewed work.

Our post office is pretty well plastered with that dirty Radical lie about the "Rebel claims." It shows the subservency that is demanded from all officials by the present administration. It looks as if everything connected with the government is to be used to elect Hayes so desperate is the game. Well, all right, with all their one-horse post offices, we'll elect Tilden in spite of all the unfair means they are employing for Hayes.

AUCTION.

The large and extensive stock of dry goods, boots and shoes, notions, &c., formerly owned by Richmond & Co., is now being offered for sale at auction in the building lately occupied by the bank, on Seventh street. The stock was one of the most extensive ever brought to Auburn, and great bargains will be realized. Sales made day and night. Now is your time to get cheap goods.

New Law Office.

Among the many improvements and individual enterprises which have attracted the favorable attention of our people, lately, none are more worthy of notice than the handsome law office of Messrs Rickel & Tefft. By dint of hard study and close application to business they have advanced to the front in their profession, and finding their office facilities were no more equal to the demand, they leased the unoccupied part of the bank building, being the entire second story, and have it fitted up, until it is, by far, the best law office in the county. It is divided into several compartments, each being furnished in a neat and tasty manner, and amply provided with all necessary conveniences. The front room contains their handsome and extensive law library, embracing many rare works on matters of law, together with a full and complete set of Ohio and Indiana reports. The rear room is elegantly fitted up as a consultation room, where parties desiring to privately advise with these attorneys, can retire and do so without interruption. We can add with pleasure that both of the gentlemen comprising this firm, are affable, courteous and prompt, and those having the law to deal with may be assured that their interests will be carefully and zealously watched, if placed in the hands of this firm.

The Presidential Election takes place on Tuesday, November 7th. Don't forget to vote for Tilden and Hendricks The people demand a change.

Notice to Tax Payers.

In our former notice to tax-payers we said that the time for paying the 2nd in stal'ment of 1875, expired Nov. 1st, '76. We have since noticed that our construction of that part of the law for '75 is wrong and our misconstruction of it arose from the fact that last year the 1st Monday came on the first day of Nov., therefore we will continue to receive tax, both second installment and delinquent, at the Treasurer's Office in Auburn, until next Monday, Nov 6th 1876.

NICHOLAS ENSLEY
Treasurer, DeKalb Co., Ind.

Bill Dills was mean enough to tell Bro. Weamer that the frogs down South rejoiced over the election in Indiana.— He said the big ones got on the banks of the ponds and in a loud, clear voice would say, "Blue Jeans, Blue Jeans," and once in a long while a little one would stick his head out of the water and faintly say, "Ben. Harrison," and then dive back as though it didn't care whether school kept or not. You can imagine them singing the same tune next Tuesday, only with a louder voice and new members added to the choir.

Hallow E'en came on Tuesday night The little kids were at their post. Early in the evening they tackeled a residence in the north end. The lady of the house dressed in disguise and caught one little fellow and made him turn states evidence. She took one of them to his Pa's store and explained matters generally but on learning it was the night to throw cabbage she "tumbled to the racket" and the boys went on their way rejoicing. The next house they came to they were also unlucky. A father had been looking for hours for his Wm. and found him in the crowd that was banging cabbage at this house. That boy raised the neighborhood for three squares crying and saying: "Oh, Pa, I'll never do it again. Please, don't, ouch, stop, Pa, I'll never never hallow one any more.

'Lasses Comin' Down.

Last Tuesday evening a fellow from tne "rural districts" came to town after two gallon of Golden Drips. He purchased it, and we guess paid for it. He led the old mare to the side walk and told her to "git 'round," but the horse anxious to get home would'nt git worth a cent. A little boy happened along and he ask him to hold the jug until he got on the nag. The boy done so, but just as he had it up arms length the horse started and the old man yelping out "Ho, Fan," frightened the boy and he dropped the jug on the crossing of Main and Seventh Streets breaking the jug in half. The fellow jumpped from the animal and started after the boy, but the little fellow was too much for him on foot, and after running and swearing for about five squares he returned puffing and blowing and looking around for Old Fan and finding her gone he put his hands in his pants pockets and said:

"Well, two gallon of molasses gone up Salt River with the Republican party, and I'm six miles from home."

"All on a High"

While Joe Beugnot was at Ft. Wayne last week the bar-tender got on a high When Joe returned and found it out he did'nt sing "Take me home to the place where the little ones lie" and act as joval as he generally does, but was right on his ear. He told the bar-tender to waltz, and waltz he did. And then the next fellow he talked to was one who was on a Bender with the boys. He done the square thing with this fellow, however. Now, most men would have started him up in the "boot and shoe business" but Joe did'nt do that. He started him in a business that will benefit him sometime if he follows it up. It was the umbrella business. He has a new way learning the boys this trade and its simple and easy so that anyone can take right hold of it. He breaks it over your head several times and after this process you ought to know your business. This fellow that was on a Bender with the boys is perfectly satisfied that he has learned the business to its full extent. Orders from a distant promptly attended to.

Cider Through a Straw

Old man Smithers, on Ensley Avenue, hurt his right toe so badly, the other day, that he has to use a crutch, and probably amputation will be neccessary.— It happened this way: He had made a barrel of cider and brought it home, all in one day, and getting the children together he forbade them to touch the bung and told them it would all waste and then his days labor would amount to nothing. The old man laid on the lounge and snoozed off. Malinda got six or eight of the smaller children to hunt for straw, while she bored a hole in the barrel. Malinda took the first chance and the little ones making such a noise trying to get their turn they woke the old man. Malinda was enjoying the cider hugely, with her back turned to the old man. He kept slipping up easily until he was right behind Malinda, then he raised his right foot and blazed away but instead of hitting her he struck the barrel. When they was carrying him in the house he said, "If I ever recover from this how I will tune up that girl.— The tanning I gave her last Sunday won't be know where."

Malinda don't care to hire out in some private family where they have a piano and not much work to do.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

THE wife of Ira Baker (colored), residing at Glen Lock, Pa., last week murdered her three little children, the eldest aged 6 years, by beating them over the head with a club, and attempted to kill her babe by smothering it under a feather-bed. The woman is insane.

A CHINAMAN named Quimbo Appo stabbed and instantly killed an Irishman named John Kelly, in the Home Lodging-House, in Chatham street, New York, a few nights ago. Kelly was the aggressor, and provoked the Chinaman to a fight, in which he was getting the worst of it, when he drew a knife and stabbed Kelly. Appo was arrested. He has recently been released after serving out a fifteen years' sentence for killing his wife and two men.... A schooner was boarded by nine ruffians in Long Island Sound, only a few miles from New York, on Friday night of last week, everything worth carrying away was appropriated, and the freebooters escaped unharmed.

A PHILADELPHIA dispatch states that "the Park Commissioners held a meeting held on Monday to decide as to whether the Main building should be permitted to remain permanently in its position. After discussion, a resolution was adopted authorizing associations of citizens to take possession of the Main building and employ it for the purpose of a permanent exhibition. Much satisfaction is felt at the final decision to retain the building on the grounds."

THROUGH some mistake in running a Centennial train, divided into sections, on the New York Midland railroad, last week, section three ran into No. 2, near Middletown, N. Y., and the result was one passenger killed, six seriously wounded, and a number slightly. The engine and one passenger car were wrecked, and two passenger cars were thrown down an embankment sixty feet high. Fifteen hundred passengers were on the train....Thomas Ellis, a paying-teller of the Park National Bank, of New York, has absconded, taking $66,000 of the bank's funds.

A serious disaster occurred on the New Jersey Central railroad, near Somerville, N. J., last week, by which three passengers were killed, five others seriously wounded, and nine slightly. The accident was caused by a misplaced switch, which had been turned to throw the train off the track, and plugged with a stick, and the switchboard was turned to show the green light, "all right," and chocked firmly in place....The Continental Life Insurance Company, of New York, has suspended, and its affairs have been placed in the hands of a receiver.

THE suspension of the Continental Life Insurance Company, of New York, involves the interests of about 70,000 policy-holders. The officers of the company attribute the suspension to the general shrinkage in real estate, and stocks and bonds. With judicious management and curtailed expenses the officers think the policy-holders will not lose anything eventually. The statement for 1875 showed liabilities, $5,587,827; assets, $6,294,371; leaving a surplus of $756,544. The income for 1875 was $2,594,530, and the number of policies issued for the year, 6,070, making the number of policies issued 74,170.

THE WEST.

THE State Auditor of Minnesota, who lately returned to St. Paul from a visit to Otter Tail, Pope, Douglas and Swift counties, reports the people of those counties generally in straitened circumstances from continual ravages of the grasshoppers. Only enough wheat is left for bread and seed, though many are obliged to sell to meet pressing necessities. But, after all, the settlers are not despairing. They are plowing and harrowing to turn up and break the eggs and cocoons, saving the grass to burn next spring after the hoppers have hatched and are making new breaking.... A Bismarck dispatch states that "Gen. Sturgis, with eight companies of cavalry, three of infantry, and a section of artillery, moved south, on the east side of the Missouri river, on the 20th of October. Gen. Terry, with four companies, on the same day, moved south on the west side. Nobody knows where they are going."

SITTING BULL, the hero of the Little Big Horn annihilation, has grown aweary, and wants to go home, as he still has the assurance to call the Fort Peck Agency. This noble savage has made known his desires to the Agent at Fort Peck, and the latter has hastened to carry the news to the Indian Bureau. This bureau, with all its faults, is not so neglectful of its functions as to forget the debt it owes to Sitting Bull. The Agent will, therefore, inform the applicant for winter quarters that he and his band can come in, but that, owing to the eccentricities of civilized usage, he will be required to surrender as a prisoner of war, to be dealt with as the Government shall think proper....The snow has fallen in the mountains in the neighborhood of Salt Lake, Utah, within the past few days to the depth of from one to three feet.

A SHOCKING accident, resulting in the drowning of five persons, occurred at East Saginaw, Mich., a few days ago. Charles Bluhm, Fred Smith, John Smith, Herman Knapp, John Cassow and a boy named Theodore Peters, mill laborers, were crossing the river to their work in the Litchfield mill. They were in a flat-bottomed, small boat, the cross-board framing being not quite as high as the tug-lining. A barge came along and raised some swell. The small boat was only about twenty or thirty feet from shore, but when the boat began shipping water the men became panic-stricken and all rushed toward the bow of the boat, immediately filling it. Instead of clinging to the boat, they clung to each other, except the boy Peters, who swam ashore. He seized a long board and shoved it out to the ferry boy, who was nearest shore. The latter was just sinking the third time, but Peters got the board under his arm and thus pulled him ashore. The other five men were drowned. All were Germans and men of families.

A CHEYENNE dispatch says that "Gen. Crook, being satisfied that Red Cloud's and Red Leaf's bands of Sioux were about to depart, with a view of joining the hostiles in the north, they having refused to comply with the orders to come into the agency to receive rations, determined on disarming them at daylight on the morning of the 23d instant. Gen. McKenzie, with eight companies of the Fourth Cavalry, successfully surrounded these two bands, consisting of 300 lodges, and captured the bucks, squaws and ponies without firing a shot, and they were marched into the agency, after having been disarmed and dismounted."....Chicago elevators, as per official figures, contain 2,345,470 bushels of wheat; 2,007,075 bushels of corn; 642,523 bushels of oats; 177,810 bushels of rye, and 930,480 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 6,103,358 bushels, against 3,195,183 bushels at this period last year.

A DISPATCH from Cheyenne says "the arrival of Gen. Merritt's command at Red Cloud yesterday signalized the closing up of the Big Horn and Yellowstone campaign, which will be succeeded by the Powder river expedition, consisting of fifteen companies of infantry and eleven companies of cavalry, the latter principally of the Fourth Regiment, with a few companies of the Second and Third which have not been in the summer campaign. All are fresh troops and will be commanded by Gen. Crook in person. The Fifth Cavalry will have its winter headquarters at Fort Russell, Gen. Merritt in command. The Third goes to Fort Laramie. Ten companies will remain at Red Cloud."....A Salt Lake dispatch of Oct. 25 says: "This morning, the ten days having expired which had been allowed Brigham Young in which to pay alimony to Ann Eliza, his nineteenth wife, and it not having been paid, Brigham appeared in court before Judge Shaeffer, who ordered that A. K. Smith be appointed a special Commissioner without bonds, and ordered to seize property, sell the same, and pay the sum required, with costs."....A horrible tragedy was enacted last week near Rushville, Ind. Chadwick B. Britain, a young man from Paris, Ky., had married the only daughter of John E. Rhodes, a farmer, and, after living peaceably with the old people nearly a year, finally demanded possession of the farm, and upon their refusal, he became abusive and intemperate, and was ordered to leave. After an altercation with the old lady he shot her dead. Mr. Rhodes, hearing the shot, hastened to the house, and was fired at, but the pistol missed fire.

GOVS. PILLSBURY of Minnesota, Kirkwood of Iowa, Hardin of Missouri, Osborn of Kansas, Pennington of Dakota, Garber of Nebraska, and several eminent professors and gentlemen met at Omaha, Neb., last week, for the purpose of discussing the modes and means of ridding the country of grasshoppers. A committee of three was appointed to collect and issue a pamphlet discussing all the more practical means based on experience in the destruction of grasshoppers. The following resolutions were passed:

1. That it will be wise and politic for the Legislatures of the States and Territories most deeply interested to enact a law offering a bounty per bushel for the collection and destruction of eggs and unfledged insects.

2. That the several Legislatures authorize local taxation for the purpose of systematized efforts in the way of ditching, burning, etc.; we also suggest the repeal of the game laws, or a modification of them to prevent the destruction of birds which feed on insects; the prevention of prairie-fires until a suitable time for the destruction of young grasshoppers by firing the grass, and the encouragement of tree-culture for promoting moisture and harboring birds.

3. We recommend that, as far as possible, a survey be made of each State during the coming winter to ascertain those portions of each county in which eggs are most thickly laid; further, that we deem it the duty of the National Government to make some effort to destroy or counteract the great pest, and thus prevent its injuries. We recommend the attachment of a special Commissioner to one of the Government surveys sent annually to the West, and that $25,000 be appropriated for the purpose of paying the expenses of the Commission.

The President of the convention was requested to draw up and present to the President of the United States a letter setting forth the urgent necessity of action by the General Government in behalf of the sections ravaged. ....The trial in Chicago of Alexander Sullivan for the murder of Francis Hanford has resulted in a disagreement of the jury.... A shocking calamity occurred last week in Iowa county, Iowa. Sylvester Starkweather was at work in his field a mile and a half distant from his house, and Mrs. Starkweather was at work in a yard near by, and had left her children, two little girls aged 8 and 5 years, up stairs. She had not been out in the yard long when she noticed smoke issuing from the windows, and the upper part of the house in flames. She frantically rushed to the house and up the stairs through stifling smoke, but when she reached the upper floor the heat and flames were so intense that she was overcome and forced back from her children, who were then in the agonies of their horrible death. The mother's escape was attended by fatal injuries, the fire burning her clothes from off her body, and even the leather shoes upon her feet to a crumbling crisp. Her two children were so nearly consumed in the flames that only charred fragments were found.

POLITICAL.

FULL official returns of the late elections in Ohio have been published, and foot up as follows: On Secretary of State—Barnes, Republican, 318,176; Bell, Democratic, 311,220; Chapman, Prohibition, 1,863. Barnes' majority, 6,956. On Supreme Judge—Boynton, Republican, 318,750; Finck, Democratic, 309,133; Gage, Prohibition, 2,065. Boynton's majority, 9,617. On member of the Board of Public Works—Evans, Republican, 318,241; Clough, Democratic, 310,348; Schumaker, Prohibition, 2,104. Evans' majority, 7,893. THE official table of the October State election in Indiana has been published. It shows that the vote for Governor was 484,457, a gain of about 50,000 over the vote of 1872. The following are the Democratic majorities over Republican opponents: Williams, Governor, 5,084; Gray, Lieutenant Governor, 5,335; Judges of the Supreme Court, First District, Niblack, 5,458; Second, Hawk, 5,289; Third, Perkins, 4,211; Fourth, Warden, 5,424; Neff, Secretary of State, 5,978; Henderson, Auditor, 5,017; Shaw, Treasurer, 5,667; Buskirk, Attorney General, 4,819; Smart, Superintendent of Public Instruction, 7,113; Marden, Reporter of the Supreme Court, 4,647; Schmuck, Clerk, 4,511.

WASHINGTON.

THE presentation of the magnificent address from Ireland to President Grant, through Messrs. O'Connor Power and Parnell, members of Parliament, has been deferred. It seems that, according to etiquette, the resolutions will have to come through the British Minister at Washington, to the President. An obstacle has been found to the success of the first step in the wording of certain parts of the resolutions. One part cites that, "having suffered through seven centuries of tyranny, the Irish people make their greetings to the United States and its President, etc." This cannot, it is contended, be passed by without an act of disrespect on the part of President Grant to Her Majesty's representative. The resolutions are magnificent evidences of art and taste, appearing like a plate of the purest alabaster, inlaid with mosaic. They are at present in one of the rooms at the White House.

MR. O'CONNER POWER and Mr. Parnell, who were entrusted with the Irish Centennial address, have resolved not to present it formally to President Grant, inasmuch as the State Department insisted upon its being presented through the British Minister....Elmer Washburn, Chief of the Treasury Secret Service, has been requested to resign.

GENERAL.

WE learn from the New York papers that the steamer Colon, of the Pacific Mail Steamship line, on her last trip took out nearly a full cargo of Remington fire-arms, destined for various points in Central and South America. Included was a large consignment for Mexico, all the combatants there appearing to be desirous of supplying themselves. The number of weapons of all sorts sent in that direction within the last few months only excites wonder as to what can be done with so many.

THE whaling bark Florence has arrived at San Francisco from the Arctic ocean, with 190 men on board, being a part of the crews of the Arctic whaling fleet, twelve of which she reports lost in the ice, with a portion of the crews. The remaining survivors have gone to Honolulu on the bark Three Brothers. The following is a list of the abandoned vessels: Barks Onward and Clara Bell, of San Francisco; ships St. George and Marengo, and barks Cornelius Howard, James Allen and Java, of New Bedford; ship Camilla and barkentine Josephine, of Boston; bark Acorn Barnes, of New London, and Hawaiian barks Desmond and Arctic. The vessels had on board altogether about 1,000 barrels of oil, besides a large amount of whalebone and ivory. It is the undivided opinion of every master that no hope can be obtained of a rescue of the ships. Of those who remained on board, then, numbering between fifty and sixty, all are undoubtedly lost, and carried away to the northeast in the immense ice-pack which closed them in for miles around.

IN the trial of Cotte, ex-cashier of the Jacques Cartier Bank, at Montreal, the evidence has developed an astonishing condition of things. It is shown that the accounts of the bank have been falsified and the returns to the Government misrepresented to the amount of $2,731,392. This enormous fraud was rendered easy of perpetration by the peculiar circumstances of the case. Romuald Trudeau, President of the bank, is a man 70 years old and so blind that he could just manage to sign his name, but could not see to read a line or a figure in the statements and accounts rendered to him by the cashier. The latter enjoyed the entire confidence of the sightless old President, who signed whatever was brought to him. It is no wonder that there was a "discrepancy" of nearly $3,000,000.

THE breach of fraternal relations which has existed between the Northern and Southern branches of the Methodist Church in the United States has so far been healed that a large number of representatives of the denomination North and South met the other day in Louisville to ratify the action of the Northern Conference at Baltimore, last summer, looking to reunion. The separation occurred at the National Conference at Louisville in 1844, and the thirty-two years of estrangement is now happily ended and all differences reconciled on the very spot where, through the baleful influences of the slave institution, the seeds of distrust and discord were sown. ....The Ninth Annual Convention of the Railroad Conductors' Life Association of the United States and Canada was held at Detroit last week. The present number of members is 1,470; amount of benefits paid during the year ending Aug. 31 was $22,500. During the year ten passenger conductors and one freight died, and three freight conductors were killed.

FOREIGN.

A BELGRADE dispatch of Oct. 21 says: "Serious fighting took place near Saitschar on Tuesday and Wednesday. The Turks are trying to force their way to Paratchin, whence their march to Belgrade would only be interrupted by weak fortifications at Chupria."....A London telegram states that the British Cabinet, at its meeting on Oct. 20, "decided upon the policy of abstention, for the present at least, and in this policy they have the support of the press and the people. This removes from the consideration of the chances of the peace of Europe one of the elements which in Wednesday's panic was certainly reckoned upon to disturb it, in case Russia crossed the Danube."

MANY officers of the English army have applied for permission to enter the Turkish service....If the worst comes to the worst, and Russia obtains no co-operation in her movements for the settlement of the Eastern question, she will be prepared to play a pretty strong "lone hand." The concentration of ten army corps near the frontier has been ordered.

A CALCUTTA dispatch to the London Times states that prospects for the crops in Bombay become daily more gloomy. The districts of Khandaisk, Nassick, Ahmednuggur, Poonah, Sholapore, Kaladgi, and Dharmal, containing a population of nearly 6,000,000, are threatened with severe distress. The local Government estimates that over 200,000 persons must be relieved in three districts alone....A conspiracy has been discovered in Constantinople to assassinate the Grand Vizier and Midhat Pasha. Several high officers connected with the Government have been implicated in the affair and sent out of the country.

A DISPATCH from Therapia announces that Baring, the Secretary of the British Legation is about to return from Phillippolis, convinced that the commission for the punishment of the perpetrators of the Bulgarian atrocities is a delusion and a mockery. The worst criminals are regarded humanely, and moderate men are in disgrace. The old panic is renewed, and a most trustworthy gentleman has traveled with the utmost haste to Constantinople, to inform the British Ambassador that the Turks threaten new massacres, and have even appointed a day for beginning the slaughter.

A TELEGRAM from the Hague states that the Dutch Government has modified its project of coinage reform. It now proposes, pending an international settlement of the monetary system, the maintenance of a gold and silver standard for Holland, and the suspension of the coinage of silver.

PRESIDENT GRANT has set apart Thursday, Nov. 30, as a day of thanksgiving and prayer, as will be seen by the following proclamation:

By the President of the United States of America a proclamation:

From year to year we have been accustomed to pause in our daily pursuits and set apart a time to offer our thanks to Almighty God for special blessings He has vouchsafed to us, with our prayers for a continuance thereof. We have at this time equal reason to be thankful for His continued protection and for the many material blessings which His bounty has bestowed. In addition to these favors accorded to us as individuals, we have especial occasion to express our hearty thanks to Almighty God that by His providence and guidance our Government, established a century ago, has been enabled to fulfill the purpose of its founders, in offering an asylum to the people of every race, securing civil and religious liberty to all within its borders, and meting out to every individual alike justice and equality before the law. It is, moreover, especially our duty to offer our humble prayers to the Father of all mercies for a continuance of His divine favor to us as a nation and as individuals. By reason of all these considerations, I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States, do recommend to the people of the United States to devote the 30th day of November next to the expression of their thanks and prayers to Almighty God, and, laying aside their daily avocations and all secular occupations, to assemble in their respective places of worship and observe such day as a day of thanksgiving and rest.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, this 26th day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-six, and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and first.

[L. S.] U. S. GRANT.

By the President: HAMILTON FISH,
Secretary of State.

According to a report just made by the Post-office Department, the number of letters delivered during the past year is 289,418,765; number collected, 234,230,582. About 109,000,000 newspapers were also collected and delivered in the same time. The cost per piece for this work is given at 8 18-100 mills. There are at the present time eighty-seven letter-carrier offices, with 2,269 carriers. The service is now declared to be more than self-sustaining.

GREAT distress prevails in Montenegro, notwithstanding the military successes, because of the necessity of maintaining a large number of refugees. It is reported there are 10,000 houseless refugees dying of starvation in the mountains around Deligrad.

A CURIOUS registration difficulty has occurred at Carrickfergus, Ireland, where there were forty-four McAlisters and thirty-seven McAuleys on the lists, many being of the same Christian name. On arriving at the first of these names, during the revision of the register, the town clerk said that no mortal man could understand the McAlisters and the McAuleys. These name were allowed to remain undisturbed.

CANADA has a women who is a "swindle." She took $150 worth of prizes at the Ontario exhibition, her name appearing in nearly every class of the Art Department. This provoked investigation, which resulted in the discovery that she had been exhibiting purchased wares.

TWEED.

How He Was Taken In and Cared For.

A letter from an officer of the United States steamer Franklin, dated off the coast of Portugal, gives the details of the order received by the commander of that vessel from the Navy Department relative to Tweed. The letter says that the telegram requested the Consul to detain any United States Government vessel passing out of the straits until orders could come from Washington. A few hours later a dispatch from the Secretary of the Navy ordered us to remain at Gibraltar for further orders. The next day came telegraphic orders from Washington to proceed to Vigo, communicate with the United States Minister, and receive Tweed on board, place him under strict guard, allow him no communication with the crew, and upon arrival at New York to allow no communication with the shore until instructions shall be received from the Navy Department as to his final disposal.

A postscript to the letter, dated "Vigo, Spain," has the following additional: "We climbed the hill to the castle, but admittance was denied us, because the Government had given orders to allow no communication with the prisoner. The people generally are opposed to giving the old sinner up, but the Government had no hesitation in taking him, upon the arrival of the bark from Cuba with the fugitives on board. The Governor of the province went on board and found the Boss in his shirt-sleeves, barefooted, in the midst of scrubbing deck. The old Boss looks quite jolly, and has brass enough to last him 100 years. He will be confined to the cabin during the whole passage, and while in port an officer is always present with him."

The Jews.

It is curious, not to say amusing, to see how people resent the introduction of the Jewish element into George Eliot's last great story. That the Jews killed Christ is the principal thing that many excellent Christians remember about that extraordinary race. They forget that the race also gave birth to Christ. That Christ should be killed by any people among whom he might appear was inevitable, and had to do with human nature at large. The exceptional and marvelous thing, speaking secularly, was his production. There can be no reply to the tremendous retort of the Israelite upon whom the Christian had spat—that half Christendom worship a Jew, and the other half a Jewess. Says Matthew Arnold: "As well imagine a man with a sense for sculpture not cultivating it by the help of the remains of Greek art, or a man with a sense for poetry not cultivating it by the help of Homer and Shakspeare, as a man with a sense for conduct not cultivating it by the help of the Bible!" "Greece was the lifter-up to the nations of the banner of art and science, as Israel was the lifter-up of the banner of righteousness."—Scribner for November.

SACRAMENTO Record-Union: The proprietor of one of the hotels of the city found it necessary, yesterday, to hire another dish-washer, there being more work than the Celestial employed could accomplish. One Chinaman who applied for the job was refused. He took it into his head that the dish-washer had been giving him a bad character to the hotel proprietor, and expressed himself to the latter as follows: "To-mollow you no catchee dish-washee. To-mollow morning he come down I-atleet, I catch him an' lick him like you bet!"

HORRIBLE TORTURE.

How the Turks Punish Christian Rebels in Bosnia.

The Rev. Malcolm Maccoll, who accompanied Canon Liddon on his visit to Servia, in a letter to the London Times, dated Bulgaria, Sept. 21, relates the mode in which the Turks torture Christian subjects in Bosnia. He says:

On my way to this place I traversed a considerable part of the frontier line which divides Bosnia from Austria. Along the route were several Turkish encampments. I was accompanied by Dr. Liddon, who would corroborate what I am now going to relate. At the first of the military stations we observed some sharply-pointed stakes, about twenty feet high. On inquiring what they were intended for, we were told that they were used for impaling the Christian insurgents of Bosnia. In fact, any Bosnian Christian found with arms in his hands was, and is now, exposed to this treatment. Do your readers understand what impaling means? The victim's hands and feet being fastened, he is raised aloft and dropped in a sitting posture upon the pointed stake, which is thus driven through his body. There he is left to writhe in agony till death puts an end to his anguish, at the end of about two days. If his powers of endurance are good, he may linger for three days.

But what evidence had Dr. Liddon and myself that those stakes were used for so fiendish a purpose? That is a question which may be asked by those who began by denouncing the stories of the Bulgarian atrocities as "coffee-house babble" retailed "artistically" by newspaper correspondents, and then, when the truth could no longer be concealed, protested that their fine sensibilities were hurt by the recital of such "disgusting" horrors. I confess that I feel more sympathy for the impaled Christians of Bosnia than I do for the insufferable prigs who have been exhorting us with "damnable iteration" to keep our minds in a state of philosophical repose at the sight of human misery; and, therefore, I do not scruple to give what your readers will, I think, accept as sufficient proof that the Turks, Lord Beaconsfield notwithstanding, are in the habit of "terminating their connection" not merely "with culprits," but with those whose only crime is that they are Christians, by a mode of torture which is anything but "expeditious." The officers of an Austrian steamer which passes up and down the Save twice a week assured Dr. Liddon and myself that they often saw human beings writhing on these cruel stakes. And we saw with our own eyes the ghastly confirmation of their story in the shape of a body thus impaled.

This has been done, and is being done still, remember, not by wild Bashi-Bazouks, but by regular troops under command of well-educated Turkish officers—pleasant, smooth-tongued men with whom we came in contact, and whom I have heard belauded by delicate ladies in London drawing-rooms. These cruelties are perpetrated as part of a regular system, and it is only when an outbreak occurs and some courageous newspaper correspondents ferret out a few of the works of darkness that we hear of them. The route by which Dr. Liddon and myself came hither is out of the beaten path, and has remained for the most part unvisited by tourists and correspondents.

Horrible Atrocities in China.

The North China Daily News says: "We have news of further persecutions of the most savage character in Szechuen. On the 18th of July, in the town of Yuen-hin-chang, in the district of Louikiang, placards hostile to Christians and Europeans were posted in various places in the market. About 9 o'clock on the morning of the 20th a line of four or five thousand armed men drew round the market to prevent Christians from escaping. They manufactured a large wooden cross, and tied on it successively all the Christians they could catch, and then cut them to pieces. Among the victims were two heathen, of whom one was the father of a convert, and the other a young girl of 15, whose brother was a Christian. Like the others, she was stripped of her clothes and cut to pieces. The number of persons killed was eight. The wounded are very numerous. It is unnecessary to add that the houses of the Christians were pillaged and destroyed. About thirty other persons are missing. On the 22d the brutes went to the market of Pelmow-chen, where they murdered four more Christians, but of this butchery we have no details. It is said that the principal chiefs of this band of assassins are emissaries from Kiang-peh, where the persecution first broke out, who are traversing the province in full sight and knowledge of the Mandarins, to excite troubles against the Christians and drive out Europeans, and thus check any inclination on the part of foreigners to extend their trade with the interior of China."

An Unlucky Experiment.

The experiment of direct trade between the lake ports of the far West and European countries this season, we see, has been productive of but sorry results so far as the vessels themselves are concerned. Such of them as got safely over are now offered for sale, and several have already passed into foreign ownership at Bristol, Belfast, and other ports. These light-built lake crafts could scarcely expect to obtain return cargoes in view of the risks of an Atlantic voyage and the extra marine premiums, and, in placing them on the market for sale, the owners probably did the best thing that could be done under the circumstances.—New York Bulletin.

MERCHANT'S Gargling Oil has become one of the most popular liniments that is now prepared. It is, beyond a doubt, the best liniment in the world for the diseases advertised. Its use has not only become general in every State of the Union, but large quantities of this valuable preparation are annually sent to foreign countries.—The Revolution (N. Y.)

RIVAL CITIES.

The Latest Chicago Story About St. Louis.

A few days ago, about dusk, a stranger called at the residence of a bank cashier in St. Louis, and, introducing himself, said he desired some private conversation on business of importance. The cashier thereupon led him to a private room, gave orders that they were not to be disturbed, seated himself, folded his ears, and desired his mysterious acquaintance to communicate the object of his visit. The man coughed once or twice, then said:

"Being the cashier of this financial institution, of course you keep the key of the safe?"

The cashier said he did.

"And you know about the bank robbers that go around and tie and gag cashiers and their families, and with pistols at their heads compel them to give up the keys?"

The cashier said he did.

"And you've heard about the Davenport brothers, and the Spiritualists and things?"

The cashier said he had.

"Now," said the stranger, "I've been studying up the whole business, and I have found out how to overcome them."

"You don't say so."

"Yes, sir. For $5 I will impart to you a secret which may at some future time save your life and the funds entrusted to your care. I will show you how to untie any series of knots, however complicated; to remove a gag from your mouth; and, in fact, to set yourself free. I can release myself in 2:41½, and, with a week's practice, I'll bet that you can show better than three minutes. You see the advantage of my system? There is no need to resist and get shot. All you have to do is to let them tie you up, and, as soon as they have taken the key and gone, why, you just let yourself loose and give the alarm."

The cashier said it was a remarkable invention.

"You bet it is," said the inventor, "and, as I never take any money for it till my customers are satisfied of my honesty in dealing with them, I'll tell you what I'll do. Just let me gag and bind you, and then I'll give you the simple directions what to do, and if you don't unloose yourself in five minutes and express your entire satisfaction with the process, I'll give you $10. If you find that I'm a man of my word, you'll pay me $5."

The cashier said that nothing could be fairer.

"Another thing," continued the visitor; "I'm a poor man, and this secret is my only stock in trade, so I'll ask you not to teach any one else how to do it, for that would spoil my business."

The cashier consented to the arrangement.

"Take this $10 bill," said the other. "If I fail, you keep it; if you are satisfied you will return it to me with another $5. And now this is how we do it." So saying he took a roll of cord and a gag from his pockets, and with great dexterity tied that cashier hand and foot, and gagged him so that he could not wink.

"Now you are tied pretty firmly, ain't you? You wouldn't think you could ever get loose, would you?"

The cashier looked the replies he could not speak.

"I don't think you could myself," said the inventor; "and now let me tell you my name is Jesse H. James, the notorious train robber, and if you don't fork over that key in three seconds I'll cut your throat from ear to ear. I beg your pardon; you can't, but I'll take it myself. It's no trouble," and turning that cashier over on his back like a turtle he took the key. "I won't take your pocket-book," he said, "for the $10 is yours, as I don't think you will be able to get loose in five minutes, or five hours either. So long, sonny," and with a courteous bow he quitted the apartment and proceeded to the bank, which he rifled as completely and leisurely as if he had been one of the directors. The sad event has cast a gloom over the community.

TILDEN AND REFORM.

Great Speech of Abram S. Hewitt, in New York.

A Powerful Presentation of the Issues of the Day.

The Republican Party Sharply Arraigned.

FELLOW-CITIZENS: I am quite sure when I look into the faces of this audience, so different from ordinary political gatherings, that there are here to-night a large number of those persons who class themselves as independent voters. In what I shall say, therefore, I shall address myself not so much to Democrats, who do not need arguments to confirm their convictions, as to that large and increasing body of citizens who intend to vote without regard to previous party affiliations. [Applause.] During the past four weeks speeches have been made in the State of New York rather remarkable in their character, upon the Republican side of the question. The first was delivered by Senator Conkling at Utica on Tuesday night, the second by Gen. Dix—[hisses]—in this hall last Tuesday night, the third, by Mr. Cowdin, an eminent merchant of this city, last night, and the fourth has come in the form of a communication, lately published, from a well-known lawyer of this city, Mr. Stoughton. Now, these four productions may be divided into two classes—one the argumentative, addressed rather to the reason than to the prejudices of the people. I am glad to say that in his speech the Senator from this great State did not dishonor himself or the State which he represents, by any appeal to passion. [Applause.] I am glad to say that that merchant, who is typical of the merchants of New York, Mr. Cowdin, delivered a calm and temperate address. I am sorry to say that I cannot make the same commendation, either of the letter of Mr. Stoughton or of the speech of Gen. Dix. [Hisses.] I know that when they appeal to those dead issues that it is all trash and rubbish, which the people of this country, and especially the independent voters, are heartily sick and tired of; but Gen. Dix is the last man in the State of New York, or, indeed, in the United States, to seek to revive these dead issues

MR. TILDEN AND GEN. DIX IN 1860.

In this hall, on the 8th of October, 1860, was held a meeting, over which Gen. Dix presided, and at which he made a speech. On the 17th of December following, in Pine street, was held another meeting at which Gen. Dix was the Chairman of the Committee on Resolutions, and he brought in and read these resolutions to the people there assembled. I was one of that audience, and remember as if it was yesterday that the speech and resolutions by Gen. Dix, and the address prepared to be sent to the Southern people, were so ultra in their utterance that I, even though an old Democrat, openly dissented, saying I would never subscribe to such destructive doctrines. [Applause.] Now, since they have revived this issue, let me read to you the resolution which was offered in this hall by Samuel J. Tilden—[cheers]—on the 8th of October, 1860, when these venomous adversaries charge him with having been a secessionist. Here is his language. I take it from the Tribune of Oct. 9, 1860:

"The Hon. Sam J. Tilden then read the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That we regard the attempt of a sectional party in the Northern States to take possession of the federative agency of all the States, adversely to the whole people of the fifteen Southern States, as contrary to the fundamental idea of the constitution; that the attempt to inaugurate by such means a sectional policy upon a subject vitally affecting the rights, the interests and the feelings of those fifteen States creates a great danger to our confederate Union and to the peace and safety of the whole country; that we deem it to be an imperative duty to waive personal preferences as to the candidates and differences upon abstract questions in favor of a union of patriotic citizens for the sake of a union of the States." [Cheers.]

That was Samuel J. Tilden's utterance. [Cheers.] Now, I hold in my hand the resolutions and speech which Gen. Dix uttered at the meeting of the 17th of December, in Pine street. I will only read a portion of the resolutions and of the address:

"Resolved, That the delivery of fugitive slaves to their masters is an obligation enjoined by the constitution, in which all good citizens are bound to acquiesce, and that all laws passed by the States with a view to embarrass and obstruct the execution of the act of Congress making provision therefor are an infraction of that instrument, and should be promptly repealed.

"Resolved, That the Territories of the United States are the common property of the people thereof; that they are of right and ought to be open to the free immigration of citizens of all States with their families, and with whatever is the subject of personal ownership under the laws of the States from which they emigrated; that the relation of master and slave cannot, during the Territorial condition, be rightfully disturbed by Federal or local legislation, and that the people of any such Territory can only dispose of the question of slavery in connection with their own political organization when they form a constitution with a view to their admission into the Union as a State.

"Resolved, That we pledge ourselves to uphold these principles by all the means in our power; to see by all practical efforts a redress of the wrongs of which the Southern States justly complain, and to maintain their equality under the constitution in the full enjoyment of the rights and privileges it confers.

"Resolved, That while we deplore the existing excitement in the Southern States, we do not hesitate to say that there is just grounds for it."

From the address of Gen Dix on that occasion, which is of the same general character, I make the following extracts:

The object of this meeting is to see whether some measures may not be devised to arrest hasty and inconsiderate action in the South, until we can consult together for a redress of our grievances. * * * *

We do not despair of securing from those to whose hands the reins of government are about to be intrusted a recognition of your rights in regard to the surrender of fugitive slaves and equality in the Territories. * *

We stand on the grounds of an address published in May last in this city, viz.:

1. A citizen of any State in the Union may emigrate to the Territories with his property, whether it consists of slaves or any other subject of personal ownership.

2. So long as Territorial condition exists the relation of master and slave is not to be disturbed by Federal or local legislation.

Whenever a Territory shall be entitled to admission into the Union as a State, the inhabitants may, in framing their constitution, decide for themselves whether it shall authorize or exclude slavery.

The Republican party cannot possibly remain unbroken during the term of the incoming administration. * * * *

Wrong as the action of eight or nine States in passing laws calculated to embarrass surrender of fugitive slaves was, it has been practically nugatory; their enactments have wrought in practice the injury of furnishing an example of infidelity to constitutional obligation.

Any violation of your constitutional rights by the incoming administration, if it were attempted, would meet with as prompt and determined a resistance here as it would from yourselves. We desire it to be distinctly understood that we speak with full knowledge.

If the events shall prove that we have overstated our own ability to procure a redress of existing wrongs, or the disposition of others to concede what is due to you, as members of a confederacy, who can only be preserved by equal justice to all; let us, when all the efforts of patriotism shall have proved unavailing, when the painful truth shall have forced itself on the conviction that our common brotherhood can be no longer maintained in the mutual confidence in which its whole value consists—in a word, when reconciliation shall have become hopeless, and it shall be manifest (which may God forbid!) that our future paths must lie wide apart, let us do all that becomes reasonable men, to break the force of so great a calamity by parting in peace. * * *

Now Gen. Dix calls Samuel J. Tilden to judgment. I call Gen. Dix to judgment, I call the whole of that crew of partisan, bitter Republicans, unconverted into true Union men, to judgment with him. (Cheering.) They were Union savers then; what are they now? ("Coffee coolers"—Laughter and applause.)

THE REPUBLICAN CONFIDENCE GAME.

It does seem to me that the confidence game now being played by the Republican managers and leaders before the American people must be an amazing spectacle. Here is an administration which has had full possession of the Government for over fifteen years (without so much as a check until the recent session of Congress), an administration which has so conducted the public business that by the testimony of its own supporters it has become a byword and a reproach at home and abroad, and ruin has overtaken the business of the country and reduced to bankruptcy a large number of its most enterprising and deserving citizens. Judge Hoar, the Republican member of Congress from the Worcester (Mass.) district, in the remarkable peroration to his argument on the Belknap trial, speaking of what had happened within the eight years of his Congressional service, says, "I have seen five Judges of a high court of the United States driven from office by threats of impeachment for corruption or maladministration. I have heard the taunts from friendliest lips, that when the United States presented herself in the East to take part with the civilized world in generous competition in the arts of life, the only product of her institutions in which she surpassed all others was her corruption."

Says his still more eminent brother, Judge Rockwood Hoar, in a letter published on Wednesday last: "What influence has stopped the triumphal march in which the Republican party has been accustomed to go to easy and assured victory, and has substituted a struggle for existence? * * * * What but the deep-seated and wide-spread dissatisfaction excited at the North at the Sanborn moieties, salary grabs, the bargains, contracts, office-jobbing and caucus-packing which occur to every man's mind when Gen. Butler's name is mentioned in connection with politics."

Senator Conkling, in his speech at Utica on Tuesday last, after opening with a description of the deplorable condition of the business of the country, to which no words of mine can add force, asks for the continued support of the people, although, as he says, "Extenuating no case of fraud or crime, and knowing with shame and sorrow that individuals holding official trusts have been guilty of detestable jobbery."

Says Mr. Cowdin, an eminent Republican merchant of this city, "Of course there has been inexcusable looseness and corruption under the rule of the Republican party which we all lament and condemn."

"TILDEN AND REFORM."

But it is useless to multiply these confessions, which are made with "shame and sorrow" by every fair-minded Republican who still adheres to his party. I have made them only because it is the best kind of evidence to be addressed to the independent voters; it is evidence derived, not from partisan Democrats, but from loyal Republicans, who expect to effect reform within the Republican party. I know that the Republican journals object to this method of argument. They do not like Republican extracts. They do not like Tilden extracts. They even denounce Tilden's extract of coffee as poison. But nearly all powerful remedies are poisonous when administered in large doses. We shall, however, administer to the country in the coming election such a judicious dose of the Tilden extract of reform as will, I am sure, purge this Government of all the diseases which have been engrafted upon it by the corrupt and vicious rule of the last eight years. (Cheers.)

But the indictment against the administration has been framed and formulated in the address of the able and patriotic men who attended the Fifth avenue conference in terms which admit of no reinforcement from any source. The names of two men only were there invoked as able to redeem the country from its peril. The one was Bristow and the other was Tilden. The Republican Convention rejected Bristow, the Democratic Convention, with a unanimity as unexpected as it was gratifying to the patriot, adopted that of Tilden with overwhelming enthusiasm. The Republican Convention, on the other hand, took the very man outlined in the following passage of the Fifth avenue address, when it called upon the people to reject "men who, however favorably judged by their nearest friends, are not publicly known to possess those qualities of mind and character which the stern task of genuine reform require; for the American people cannot now afford to risk the future of the republic in experiments on merely supposed virtues or rumored ability, to be trusted on the strength of private recommendations." Whom does this portrait fit, I ask you, independent voters, Hayes or Tilden?

The honest Republicans are fully conscious of great difficulties which lie in the path of the advocacy of the Republican candidate, and a warning to him, in case of his election, of the consequence which will follow any attempt on his part to assert his personal or official independence by the spirit of his party! [Cheers.] Now, if the spirit of the party is represented by the leaders, who have they been, and who are they now? "By their fruits ye shall know them."

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

It is not Bristow, who represents its reform element, but it is Chandler who has all his life avowed his contempt for civil-service reform, and who, though a Cabinet officer, uses his official position contrary to the spirit and intent of the law to levy assessments on feeble women, and underpaid clerks, powerless to resist his exactions.

Who are the striking figures in the campaign and upon the stump? First and foremost comes James G. Blaine, who has no record for reform, and has shown himself to be a partisan, reckless in his assertions, the evidence of which is found in the excoriating letter of our fellow-citizen Bradish Johnson, in reference to the false imputations of Blaine on Johnson's loyalty, and on Judge Clifford's official integrity.

It is John A. Kasson, whose constituents in Iowa have at length placed the seal of their condemnation upon his disreputable public and private career.

It is the coterie of bad men who have formed a ring around the President, and by their evil acts and worse advice have utterly ruined one of the grandest reputations of modern times, and defaced one of the proudest pages of American history.

It is Boutwell and Richardson, who mismanaged our finances, so that they should be everywhere denounced as the immediate authors of the ruin and distress which pervade the country; it is Robeson who has created a navy at a cost of over $200,000,000 which Admiral Porter declares to be worthless, and who has made his department a very beehive of scandal; it is the bad men who have brought disgrace upon the honored head of the State Department; it is Williams, first, with his illegal expenditures; Pierrepont, with his disgraceful circular in regard to informers; and now Taft with his military instructions to Marshals, in violation of the laws of the land; it is Cameron, father and son, of whom their best friends will only claim that they are politicians, and not statesmen; these are the men who are the leaders, and represent the spirit of the Republican party. Will Senator Conkling deny it? Will any fair-minded Republican deny it?

How then will Gov. Hayes be able to introduce the reforms which are essential to the salvation of the country? How can Senator Conkling, who is a statesman and a man of honor, and who was overthrown by these very men, and he always will be, within the party, support their candidate in the face of his own philosophic and truthful deduction, that when elected he must do their bidding? "Shall the vase say to the potter, wherefore hast thou made me so?"

Independent voters can you, with such a demonstration before you, cast your vote to retain in power the very men who have been the authors of so much ruin and such national disgrace?

What answer is made to this indictment? Defense of themselves being impossible, they turn to abusing the opposite party, and throwing mud upon its candidates. One who reads the Republican speeches, and newspapers, as I am forced to do, might well exclaim, with Fernando in the Tempest:

"Hell is empty, and all the devils are here."

They remind me of the boy who lived in the mountains of New Jersey, away from all traces of civilization. Coming for the first time to a store in the valley, he gazed with wonder at all he saw, until he came in front of a looking-glass. Taking one startled look, he ran home as fast as his legs could carry him, and on arrival exclaimed breathless with terror: "Mother, mother, I have seen the devil."

The Republicans have at length caught a glimpse of themselves, and proceed at once to describe the hideous features as the attributes of the other party, who have not had the opportunity of getting near a looking-glass for sixteen years.

They cry out "Solid South."

They cry out "Rebel claims."

They cry out "Dishonest Democrats."

They cry out "The war will be renewed."

They address themselves to the fears and prejudices, and not to the reason and convictions of men. They seek to transfer to their opponents the very vices of which they are conscious in themselves.

For example, the cry of solid South, when analyzed, is that the Democratic party is a sectional party. Now, it is notorious that the Democratic party never was, and is not now, a sectional party. This great meeting here in the city of New York, in the very heart of the North, is the best answer to that calumny. But it is equally notorious that the Republican party was, in its origin and during its entire history, even until now, a sectional party, for the very allegation that the Democratic party is sectional involves the admission that the Republican party is sectional. They have had every opportunity to be otherwise. But they have deliberately rejected their opportunity to conciliate the South by politic and wise policy and constitutional government, and have preferred to rule by force, and by antagonizing the races against each other, until they have arrayed against them almost every enlightened man, white and black, in the South; and yet they complain of a solid South! If it exists, it is the work of the Republican party alone. But, in truth, it does not exist. These ruined people seek, with a yearning unutterable, the companionship and fellowship of their brethren in the North. They seek to share in our prosperity, and to bear with us our burdens. They appeal to us for sympathy and for justice alone; and if the leaders of the Republican party had been statesmen and patriots they might long since have united these people to their ranks by indissoluble ties of love and gratitude. In despair, and despair alone, they have appealed to the intelligence and fair play of their Northern brethren; and I, for one, do not believe they will appeal in vain.

The Republican orators next seek to terrify you with the cry of rebel claims, the payment of the Confederate debt, and the consequent bankruptcy of the treasury, and in this cry some of their most respectable speakers have joined. When these gentlemen take the trouble, as I have done, to get at the facts, they will be ashamed of the statements into which they have been betrayed by the misrepresentations of men who, like Blaine and Sherman, knew better.

By my request, the present Journal Clerk of the House of Representatives, Mr. H. H. Smith, a most careful and conscientious officer, who was Clerk of the Committee on Claims in the Forty-second and Forty-third Congresses, has made an exhaustive examination of all the claims pending in the Forty fourth Congress, and has prepared a complete statement of all the facts, a brief summary of which I have already communicated to the press, and the whole statement is now printed in full detail for the use of the public.

Independent voters, to whom alone I address these remarks, will be surprised to learn that:

Of the 140 bills which have been paraded as having been introduced by Democratic representatives in the present Congress, it appears that 119 are old claims which were pending before the Forty-second or Forty-third Congresses and that the greater part of these claims are exactly similar to those claims which have already been paid by the Republican Congress and by the Treasury and War Departments during the past ten years. It also appears that a large number of these claims were introduced by Republican members as well from the South as the North. Petitions were presented by Mr. Blaine and other members from Maine covering exactly the same cases.

In regard to the amount involved in these claims it appears that of 9,237 cases reported to Congress by the Commissioners of Claims 4,426 were allowed to the extent of $3,172,606.42, and 4,811 were disallowed to the extent of $16,919,936.06. If the same percentage should be continued to all the claims now pending the amount allowed would be about $6,000,000. In fact they are driven to proceed by the method which I believe the lawyers call "confession and avoidance." They confess the charges, but they plead the baby act as to the past and promise to do better for the future, by what they call "reform within the party." But here let us take another dose of extracts, this time the extracts of Conkling, who is always philosophic in his ideas if he is not always correct in his facts. He says in his Utica speech: "Few men are base and presumptuous enough to accept party or public trusts in a representative system, and then on pretext of independence or superiority to defeat the purpose and conviction of the constituency which delegates power to them. There have been such men, and party treason has been applauded for a moment, but contempt and disgrace for all time waits on the betrayer of every trust which rests in honor, and the plain understanding of men. That each of the candidates for the Presidency will maintain and illustrate the policy and spirit of his party, is as certain as good faith in man, and this fact presents in the clearest light the difference between them." Exactly so. And is this not at the same time a judgment by cognovit against the Republican party with such a record and such a candidate.

The docket of the House Committee on War Claims of the present Congress shows that there were 1,287 cases referred to it. Of this number 1,031 were old claims, which were pending in the Forty-third Congress, and 169 were for a rehearing. In regard to the Hoard case, a claim for damages for the use of the battlefield of Stone river, it appears that the claim was reported favorably and passed by the Republican House of the Forty-third Congress.

Of the one hundred and nine cases reported favorably by the committee of the Forty-third Congress (Republican), the amount recommended to be paid is $5,981,000; while the forty-two cases which were reported favorably by the committee of the Forty-fourth Congress (Democratic), amount to $215,361, of which only $74,453 was actually passed by the House.'

But it is asserted that as soon as we get power, the Democratic party will refund the direct tax, and the cotton tax, and will allow claims to an unlimited sum for damages to the property of rebels. To such vague assertions there is but one answer. These claims cannot be allowed except by the votes of Northern and Western members. I do not know a member, and do not believe that there is or ever will be one in either House from the North or West, who would be such a fool as to vote for measures which would be his political death. So far as I know, these measures have but few advocates among the intelligent men in the South; but whether they would like to be indemnified or not, they recognize the utter absurdity and absolute impossibility of any attempt to procure payment for disloyal claims. Another extract from a Republican source will, however, furnish conclusive evidence of the spirit in which these claims have been met by the Democratic majority in the present House. Mr. Conger of Michigan, well known as one of the ablest as well as one of the bitterest Republicans in the House, when this charge was made on the floor, rose, and, to his infinite credit, disposed of it as follows. I quote from the Record of Aug. 23, page 23:

Mr. Conger—I have but one or two words to say upon this subject. * * I am pleased to bear testimony before this House to the strictness, accuracy and care with which every claim is examined by the Committee on War Claims, so as to bring it within the rules which I and every other gentleman on that committee require, those which should apply to the whole class of war claims, either in the loyal States, or the Southern States.

Mr. Milliken—And the rules prescribed by law.

Mr. Conger—And the rules prescribed by law. I take pleasure in saying here for the committee with which I have the honor to act, that so far as I have seen, there has been on the part of every member of that committee unusual care and strictness in the examination of every one of these claims. Not only have members insisted on the observance of those rules of law, which I, claiming to be an extreme man in reference to the allowance of Southern claims, would regard as proper. I think it is due to myself as a member of this side of the House to say, in answer to my friend from Ohio, that I am satisfied the Committee on War Claims do not intend to permit any of the thousands—I do not know but what I might almost say millions—of claims which have been and will be presented in this and succeeding Congresses to be reported to this House, until they are brought strictly within the requirements of law. I feel satisfied that the most rigid rule must be complied with before they can be reported here.

It seems to me that this bugaboo of Southern war claims is thus absolutely brushed away. But some stress seems to be placed upon bills introduced by Mr. Wilshire and Mr. Riddle for the payment of rebel claims which it is estimated, would absorb $2,400,000,000. Of course, the bigger the sum the less danger in the bills. Those who have just claims, even for such sums, know that it is better, practically, to abandon them than to try to get them allowed, the difficulties in the way of private bills being insuperable. But the whole outcry proceeds upon the assumption that the introduction of a bill means serious legislation. It in reality means but little more than the introduction of a petition, which is a matter of right. A member, as a rule, introduces any bill sent to him by a constituent, sometimes stating that he does it by request, but more generally saying nothing about it. These bills are introduced by thousands, have no significance whatever, and go to the "tomb of the Capulets."

I do not deem it worth while to waste time on the absurd charge that the Democratic party desires to get up another war. We have had enough of war. The country needs peace and good government, and the Democratic party have no interests apart from the general welfare. But if we were to judge by the utterances of the Republican orators, and especially by a recent cartoon, entitled "Hold the Fort," in Harper's Weekly, where the soldiers are represented as guarding the Capitol and the various departments at Washington from the incoming Democratic administration, I should infer that the leaders of the Republican party would prefer a resort to arms to a surrender of the offices which they now disgrace.

For this I can easily imagine a good reason. They fear the exposures which will result from the examination of the books. The corruption of the last eight years will be laid bare. The reason why balances were forced to the extent of over $200,000,000 will be disclosed. The day of judgment is at hand, and they fear the righteous indignation of an outraged people. To them war would be a relief, and they would gladly try to throw the odium on the Democratic party in advance. But the American people cannot be deceived by the cry of "stop thief," raised by the absconding criminal. Neither can they be deceived by such delusive statements is those made by Senators Boutwell, Conkling, and others in regard to the current expenses of the Government, and which is part of the confidence game to which I referred at the outset of my remarks. These are all based upon some tables prepared expressly by the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Conant, under order from Boutwell, for the express purpose of deceiving the public. Senator Conkling states them thus: "Compare expenses of the Government in 1875, with those in 1860. In 1860 they were $1.90 for each person in the United States. In 1875, estimating only 40,000,000 of people, they were $1.70 for each person, estimating 43,000,000, $1.60 each."

Now I have examined these tables, and I confess my astonishment and my regret that a Senator of the United States, who I know intends to be honest, should allow himself to be thus misled by the devices of men whom he should watch and detect in their misrepresentations.

The statement in regard to the expenses of 1860 is substantially correct. They were $1.90 per head of population. But in 1875, as will appear by the official return, the expenditures were as follows (see Secretary's report, page 16):

War Department	$41,120,615.99
Navy Department	21,997,626.37
Indian	8,384,656.52
Miscellaneous	71,070,702.98
	$142,073,632.65

No interest or pensions are included in these items. Taking the population at 40,000,000, the expenditure is $3.55 per head, or at 43,000,000 it is $3.07 per head, against $1.70 or $1.60, as stated by Senator Conkling.

Now, how does this independent voter think that this discrepancy has been produced? Why, Mr. Conant proceeds arbitrarily to deduct from the expenditures in the several departments in 1875 the greater part of the increased expenditures over 1860. Listen to his table of deduction, independent voter, and imagine, if you can, that Senator Conkling ever read it.

Congress	$ 891,536.38
Executive	2,869,065.07
Judiciary	1,395,876.09
Foreign Intercourse	2,016,1[illegible]
Miscellaneous	28 016,828.53
Army	16,709,169.63
Navy	4,991,406.84
	$57,299,869.56

Now this money was all spent in 1875, and it was all spent for the ordinary current expenses of the Government, exclusive of interest and pensions. Why in the world, Mr. Conant, who is certainly a model table-maker, limited himself to the modest deduction of $57,000,000, when with the same propriety he might have relieved the country from taxation entirely, is more than even the ingenuity of Secretary Boutwell and Conkling can explain. All that I know is that you pay the taxes, and they amount to over $3.00 per head, instead of $1.60 as stated by Conant, and the deluded Senator who followed in his wake.

But surely, my independent friends, it is unnecessary to pursue this tissue of misrepresentations and misconceptions any further. They underlie all the speeches and all the arguments of the Republican speakers, however well-intentioned they may be. Some of them are deceived and some of them deceive. But the result is the same so far as you are concerned. You pay the piper, while the men in power dance. They may try till the crack of doom to persuade you that you are well and happy and prosperous and untaxed; but you know better, and you know who has brought all this disgrace and ruin on the country. If, then, you are independent and sensible, you will apply the remedy. It is in your power, and yours alone, and I am very much mistaken if it be not applied with a vigor which will astonish those men who, bad themselves, have no faith in the virtue and patriotism of the people.

Eighty Thousand Dollars Stuffed in Bedding and Furniture.

A spinster named Emma Cornwall died recently at Towner's Station. Upon examination it was found that the deceased had $80,000 in bank stocks and United States bonds, and the farm, valued at $20,000, made up her wealth. The bonds and stocks were found hid in old trunks, in dress pockets, stuffed in rolls of carpeting, in bedding, and in fact the search for her possessions was one continued surprise. Thousands of dollars would be found in the most inconceivable places, and it is not positively known but that a snug little fortune is now somewhere concealed in the house. Whether this theory be correct or not, it is safe to conclude that the heirs feel well satisfied with the search.—Hudson (N. Y.) Republican.

HIS FIRST VETO!

Letter from Our Coming President in Regard to Confederate Claims.

In Which He Announces His Intention to Veto Any [illegible] for Their Payment.

To Hon. Abram S. Hewitt:

SIR—I have received your letter informing me that Republicans high in authority are publicly representing that the South desires, not without hope, to obtain payment for losses by the late war, and to have provision made for the rebel debt and for losses of slaves. The payment of such losses and claims was not deemed important enough to deserve the notice of either convention at the time it was held. You also ask me to state my views in regard to their recognition by the Government. Though disposed myself to abide by the issues as made up already, I have no hesitation to comply with your request. The Fourteenth amendment of the constitution expressly provides as follows:

The validity of the public debt of the United States authorized by law, including debts incurred for the payment of pensions and bounties for services in suppressing insurrection or rebellion, shall not be questioned; but neither the United States nor any State shall assume or pay any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or any claim for loss or emancipation of any slave; but all such debts, obligations and claims shall be held illegal and void.

This amendment has been repeatedly approved and agreed to by the Democratic State conventions of the South. It was unanimously adopted as part of the platform of the Democratic National Convention at St. Louis on the 28th of June, and was declared by that platform to be universally accepted as a final settlement of the controversies that engendered the civil war. My own position on this subject had been previously declared on many occasions, and particularly in my first annual message of Jan. 5, 1875. In that document I stated that the Southern people were bound by the Thirteenth, Fourteenth, and Fifteenth constitutional amendments; that they had joined at national conventions in the nomination of candidates and in the declaration of principles and purposes which form an authentic acceptance of the results of the war embodied in the last three amendments to the organic law of the Federal Union, and that they had, by suffrages of all their voters, at the last national election, completed proof that now they only seek to share with us and to maintain the common rights of American local self-government in fraternal union, under the old flag, with one constitution and one destiny. I declared at the same time the questions settled by the war are never to be reopened. The adoption of the Thirteenth, Fourteenth, and Fifteenth amendments to the Federal constitution closed one great era in our politics. It marked the end forever of the system of human slavery, and of the struggles that grow out of that system. These amendments have been conclusively adopted, and they have been accepted in good faith by all political organizations and people of all sections. They close the chapter. They are and must be final. All parties hereafter must accept and stand upon them, and henceforth our politics are to turn upon questions of the present and future, and not upon those of the settled and final past. Should I be elected President, the provisions of the Fourteenth amendment will, so far as depends on me, be maintained, executed, and enforced in perfect and absolute good faith. No rebel debt will be assumed or paid. No claim for loss or emancipation of any slave will be allowed. No claim for any loss or damage incurred by disloyal persons arising from the late war, whether covered by the Fourteenth amendment or not, will be recognized or paid. The cotton tax will not be refunded. I shall deem it my duty to veto every bill providing for the assumption or payment of any debts, losses, damages, claims, or for the refunding of any such tax. The danger to the United States treasury is not from claims of persons who aided the rebellion, but from claims of persons residing in the Southern States or having property in those States, who were, or pretended to be, or who, for the sake of aiding claims, now pretend to have been loyal to the Government of the Union. Such claims, even of loyal persons, where they are from acts caused by operations of war, have been disowned by the public law of civilized nations, condemned by adjudications of the Supreme Court of the United States, and only find any status by force of specific legislation of Congress. These claims have become stale, and are often tainted with fraud. They are nearly always owned, in whole or in part, by claim agents, by speculators, or lobbyists, who have no equity against tax-payers or the public. They should in all cases be scrutinized with zealous care. Calamities to individuals which were inflicted by the war are, for the most part, irreparable. The Government cannot recall to life a million of our youth who went to untimely graves, nor compensate sufferings or sorrow of their relatives or friends. It cannot readjust between individuals burdens of taxation hitherto borne, or of debt incurred to sustain the Government, which are yet to be paid. It cannot apportion anew among our citizens damages or losses incident to military operations, or resulting in every variety of form from its measures for maintaining its own existence. It has no safe general rule but to let bygones be bygones, to turn from the dead past to the new and better future, and on that basis to assure peace, reconciliation, and fraternity between all sections, classes, and races of our people; to the end that all springs of our productive industries may be quickened and new prosperity created, in which the evils of the past shall be forgotten. Very respectfully yours,

SAMUEL J. TILDEN.

Paralyzed on the Stage.

There was a startling scene at the Holliday Street Theater, the other night. John Ferris was playing the part of George Talboys in "Lady Audley's Secret." At the close of the first act he said to Mr. Collins, the stage manager, as he went off the stage: "I am feeling very badly. Just feel my arm; I fear it is paralyzed." Mr. Collins thought he was low-spirited, and made a pleasant reply. When the time arrived for him to reappear on the stage he went on in the second scene and began to stagger around the stage so that the audience, thinking he was intoxicated, laughed and shouted. Lady Audley rushed toward him to push him into the well, as required by the play, when he said, "Leave me alone." She then observed that he was in a semi-conscious state, and that he was frothing at the mouth. He was carried off the stage and conveyed to his residence, where a physician discovered that there had been a stroke of paralysis. When the announcement was made from the stage a man in the gallery manifested some skepticism. The upper gallery of a theater is a safe refuge for brutality.

A Miser Starves Himself to Death.

Dr. Thomas J. Manahan died in Brown's Hotel on Wednesday evening, of general debility, superinduced by starvation. About one year ago Manahan was admitted to the Church Home as a pauper, his clothing being torn and so filthy that it had to be taken from him. The dirty clothing was precious to Manahan. In the lining of the vest were packages of money, which were handed to the supposed pauper, who, instead of a grateful acknowledgment, charged the employe of the institution who delivered him the money with having robbed him of a sum which he said was missing from one of the packages. [illegible] It was afterward discovered that Manahan owed large sums of money to boarding-house keepers, it being his custom to remain at one a short time, and leave without paying his bills. Recently Manahan made Brown's Hotel, in North High street, his home, but had denied himself nourishment. Dr. Honck, who was called [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible]hed his [illegible] as [illegible] Manahan [illegible] general debility. The sum of [illegible],000.25 was found among the miser's effects.—Baltimore American.

THE receipts at the gates of the Centennial grounds during September were $948,081. The Yankees understand this exhibition business.

A LOWER Canadian court has decided that reporters are not bound to give the names of informants on whose statements they base their articles.

A WATERTOWN (Conn.) merchant has received twenty-five cents that have been due him for twenty-five years, from a conscience-stricken debtor.

A SAN [illegible] committed suicide because he lost his place as barkeeper, and had to go to work in a tea store. Barkeepers must keep up the pride of the profession.

A MAMMOTH set of scales, said to be the largest in the world, has been erected at Ashley, Luzerne county, Pa. It is 150 feet long, with the ordinary railroad width, and can weigh 1,000 tons of coal. It cost $5,000.

THE New York Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children is doing a good work. During the last three months it has investigated nearly 300 cases and sent over 100 children to institutions or homes.

ROBBINS' island, in Peconic bay, Long Island, was recently sold for $8,000 at Sheriff's sale to Mr. Ira B. Tuthill, who has for some years carried on a brick yard upon it. There are still $6,000 in claims against the island.

SOME ingenious advertisers have adopted the practice of stamping firm names and addresses on the new silver coin. An easy way to break up this business is by a general refusal to accept the disfigured coin.

"WELL, my dear," said our good pastor at Sunday-school to a tow-headed urchin, "I am glad to hear you are getting to be a better boy." "Why, sir," said little Joe, looking up with grave earnestness, "gosh, I ain't been sick."

A SKULL was needed in a performance of "Hamlet," in Virginia City. It was reported that Jim Orndorf had one, and it was sent for, but it proved to be the skull of a dog, and the joke was not discovered [illegible] any other.

A MAN in Paris, wishing lately to pass a joke upon his wife, hired a coffin and placed himself in it at the moment of her return after a few days' absence. On seeing the supposed corpse, she fell senseless to the ground, and has since been a lunatic.

CLAPHAM, near Bedford, England, has been greatly excited by the exhumation of the body of an aged clergyman who was buried there in 1870, and who was supposed to have an important will within his coffin. When the corpse was raised a package was found under it, but it was a bundle of old love letters.

THE Czar Alexander receives, in round numbers, $25,000 a day income; the Turkish Sultan, $18,000; the Emperor of Austria, $10,000; the Emperor of Germany, $8,200; the King of Italy, $6,440; the Queen of England, $6,270; the King of [illegible]43; and the President of the French Republic, $500.

IT is said that when the locusts swarmed in Central China, last summer, the Mandarins offered prayers in the temples; and the peasants, in their ignorance, thought them a blessing in disguise, and, gathering them a la manna, fried and ate them, no doubt thinking them an improvement on their old diet of rats and mice.

CHICAGO is the second telegraphic city in the country, having as much lightning correspondence as Boston and Philadelphia combined, which is simply another way of saying that our Eastern men are so long-headed that they can use the mail, while these flustered Westerners have to do a sort of hand-to-mouth business.—Boston Advertiser.

THE fresh-water "sea-serpent" has met his end in Mendomack lake, near Rockland, Me. A sailing party met him near the shore just as they were landing, and all but one of them ran away. Wm. Grinnell, of Washington, however, killed him with an oar. The snake is ten feet long, is of a dull brown color, and has a fin running the whole length of his back. The head is very long, and the teeth would make a nervous man shudder.

THE Danbury News man has made, in Boston, his first appearance as a lecturer. The reporters say that his description of travel in England was humorous, but did not cause uproarious laughter. A point was made by asking who "ever thought of a one-legged Duke or a cross-eyed Duchess, or a Baron with a wen on the top of his head? No one; yet he had actually found them to be just as other people were, and fully as mean."

THERE is a colored man in Hartford, who will drive a good-sized nail into a plank with one thump of his forehead, and with several blows can send the nail "clean home" into the mortar between two bricks. A day or two ago he was requested to send a nail "right in" with one blow. He did the task, but has now a bad-looking bruise on his forehead—the first bruise, he says, he has had in all his years of practice.

A TRUE STORY OF PERIL.

When I was bowman of the larboard or chief mate's boat, in the Druid, we lowered one afternoon in chase of "sixty-barrel bulls," on what was known to the initiated as the "Middle Ground," between Australia and New Zealand. We made fast to one of the whales, a lively fellow, who ran us something of a dance before we succeeded in giving him his death wound.

But all this time our steed had been running us to leeward, and meanwhile the Captain had struck another, and the ship kept her luff, so as to support the windward boats. The second mate also kept near the Captin, and when our whale went into his "flurry," which was not until nearly sundown, we could make out from the maneuvers of the ship that the boats were windward of her.

The sun was just dipping when we got a hole cut in our whale's nib-end, and a strap rove for towing. A dard cloud-bank was setting down in the weather horizon, out of which a strong wind might be expected at short notice. An attempt with a single boat, to tow the whale to windward, would be sheer folly; there was nothing for us to do but to either give up our prize, or to wait the movements of the ship.

The mate looked anxiously at the ship, and at the threatening aspect of the weather; then at the sixty-barrel bull, the prize we had fought so hard to win, and seemed unable, for a time, to make up his mind what course to pursue.

"What do you think of it, Beers?" said he, at last, to his boatsteerer, with the manner of one who wishes to divide his responsibilities with counsellors.

"Well, I d'no, sir; it looks kind o' jubrious to hang on her. The ship won't run off the wind till she gets that whale fluked; and I don't know as she will then. And there'll be a chance of weather within an hour."

"And it'll be dark in less than an hour," added the mate. "If there was a prospect for fair weather, I wouldn't care for the darkness, because we could keep the run of each other's lights; but as it is—I think we'd better waif the whale, and get to the ship while we have daylight,"

A hole was cut in the body of the whale, and the "waif—a flag—attached to a slender spruce staff from the towing strap, and the order given to pull ahead the boat's head being laid to windward, on a bee-line for the ship, then some four miles off.

We were all glad enough it must be confessed, to abandon the whale and consult our own safety. It was very earily in the voyage, and no simillar emergency had before occurred. We had seen just enough of the Captain to feel that he was a driver, where the interest of the voyage was concerned. Consequently the mate, a very young officer, felt a keen responsibility, and as equally keen anxiety to learn how his course would be judged

It was quite dark when we pulled up under lee of the Druid within hail; but the black squall still hung threatening in the sky, and there had been as yet no actual chance in the weather. The ship had her helm up, and was just in the act of paying off, while the signal lantern way swinging and flickering at the mizzen peak.

"Boat ahoy!" roared the Captain, sharply, as soon as he preceived our approach. "Who is there—Mr. Andrews?"

"Ay, ay, sir!"

"Where's your whale?"

"Two points forward of your lee-beam—four miles off."

The mate made no reply to the question until the boat was secured alongside by her warp, and he had jumped in on the quarter deck. The ship continued swinging off until her head was pointed in the right direction, but, with her topsails on the cap, and one whale fluked towing alongside, her progress was not very rapid.

"We didn't think it prudent to lie by," said Mr. Andrews, in an apologetic tone, "as the ship was so far from us and every appearance of stormy weather—"

"We didn't think, sir!" retorted Capt Gibbs. "Who's we? I want you to do the thinking, Mr. Andrews, in charge of your boat. The rest didn't ship to think."

"I know it, sir, but in case of emergency it may be well enough to consult those who are sharing the risks with you."

"Consult be——! Of course Jack will always say, 'Save my precious life—cut away the whale, and we'll pay for it!' And there's sixty barrels of spirm oil gone to the d—l. You might as well look for a needle in a haystack now. It won't do for us, at the outset of the voyage, to throw away a chance like that. We must run a little risk sometimes—that's what we all shipped for."

This taunting language had the effect which might have been expected upon the young mate.

"Well, I'll bet I can run as much risk as any live man of my inches, if you think it prudent to do so. But I had charge of other men's lives, as well as my own, and I should feel just as responsible to you and them if I had erred the other way by venturing too much, and any accident had happened." "Haul up the boat here, my crew, and jump in."

"Hold on, Mr. Andrews," said the Captain. "We can run down the best part of the distance with the ship."

When we juged ourselves within a mile or less of where the whale had been left, the ship was then brought to the wind again. There had as yet been no increase of wind, and, though the night was very dark, the bank or squall appeared to have lifted a little, and to have a less heavy appearance than at sundown.

"I don't believe but what it'll all pass over in a fizzle," said Capt. Gibbs. "I don't see any change in the barometer. Now, Mr. Andrews, I believe you can find that whale again; I think I could, at any rate."

"All right," was the reply, with a nervous twitching that showed how the young man was stung by the words. "If you can do it, I can."

"He ought to bear now three points off the lee bow," were the last words thrown at us, as we cast off from the ship, and prepared to "out ours." "Pull right off hereaway, and you must fall into his slick, and then you can fellow down."

Setting our light as soon as we were well clear, we passed away into the darkness, leaving our floating home behind, until the dim signal at her gaff faded to a mere speck in the distance. It was evident from the air of quiet determination about Mr. Andrews that he would cruise all night rather than return to the ship without his whale. We at the oars had nothing to say about the matter; it was ours simply to obey.

It was long before we found any trace of the "Slick," but after pulling back and forth over the ground, fearful of passing on one side of it, and getting too far leeward, we at last had the satisfaction to preceive that we were in it; a positive assurance that we still had the weather-gauge of the object of our search. At the same time a bright light flamed up from the ship, made by burning old scraps on the back-arches of the try works, and we made out that she was again keeping off to be nearer to us.

We pulled lustily now, feeling encouraged by the signs, and, still keeping in the slick, followed it as our guide; for so dark was the night we could not possibly see the whale until we should be very close upon it. Old Beers stood up in the head of the boat, looking with all the eyes in his head, to catch a glimpse, either of the waif, or of the wash or "white water" which would indicate the whale's position.

But now there was suddenly a change in the air, which I can only describe as a scene of dilution or rarefaction, with a singing sound that was ominous of approaching evil. The weather quarter of the heavens, instead of darkening more, appeared to light a little, as the black ball split in two and parted right and left. Out of it came a few struggling drops of rain, and then the wind followed with a vengeance.

The first blast struck us with a fury that the mate had enough to do to keep the boat broaching to, and taking the whole force of it boatside on. We shipped in all the oars as fast as possible, and let her drive to leeward, crouching down in our places, unable to see anything, or to change the course of our light craft, and running blindly off into the darkness. Our little taper in the boat lantern was exhausted at once, and could be of no further service. We felt, instinctively, that the ship would luff to again, as the Captain would not run the risk of passing us; and here we were, rushing away before the gale, and every moment lessening our chances of safty. There was a very sudden flashing up of her light, just as the squall struck, and then we lost sight of it entirely. The faint report of a musket followed, a signal of recall, of course, but we could neither answer nor could we obey it.

Onward we rushed before the wind, shrinking down into the boat, and clinging to the gunwales and thwarts, all of us but the officer, who held fast to his steering oar to keep her head in the only safe direction. No word was spoken among us, but each fully realized the peril we were in, and each asked himself the question of life or death, how long is this going to last?

It was answered by a shock so sudden as to throw us all together in a confused heap. In a crash of everything movable, and a cracking of the boat's fabric itself, we rolled into the sea and were overwhelmed. I can hardly tell in words what followed. As soon as I regained breath a little, I struck out and grasped, nothing but a smooth, slipery surface, on which I could get no hold, and the next instant was rooled off again and plunged under the sea. I understood the truth now. In the darkness we had run upon the whale without having seen it.

At my next attempt I clutched a rope which I felt to be the bight of a whale-line, and underrunning this, I soon came to the pole of an iron or harpoon. By this I was unable to hang on; and, after being half drowned in my struggles I succeeded in drawing a bight of the line under the whale's fin, until it brought up firmly at the "knuckle;" I could then secure myself upon the whale to avoid sliding off at every roll. The situation was by no means a pleasant one, as I had all I could do to keep my mouth above water.

While I had been thus absorbed in the one object of securing my own temporary safety, the rest of my shipmates had all disappeared, nor was anything to be seen or heard, either of them or the boat. A light spruce pole and a paddle were dashed in my way, and I secured them by cutting holes with my sheath-knife and planting them like masts, in the blubber of the whale, but these were all I could find. The weif set in the whale by Mr. Andrews still stood in its place, and this was important, as it might be the means of the ship finding me, could I keep alive where I was till daylight. Within half an hour after I secured a landing upon the floating island the squall was all over, and the wind again settled down to a steady moderate breeze. The heavens were clear overhead, and it was as light as it could well be on a moonless night. But where were my comrads? And, of more vital imporance yet to poor me, where was the Druid?

"Light ho!" I actually sang out the words, as I had just spit half a pint or less of brine from my mouth [illegible] ing my eyes clear, they rested upon a bright light directly in the wind's eye from me. Then there was a blinding flash, and the report of the Druid's old carriage gun thundered forth, so near as to be startling, and I roared with all the voice at my command, which was not much, hopping to make myself heard. More light! a fierce flame, now evidently nearing me. Soon I could make out the ship's sails in the immediate glare of the light, and then the whole outline of the stout old craft.

My lungs were strained to their utmost power, for my only chance of safety depended upon attracting their attention before they should sweep on beyond me. If left astern unknown to them, there was little or no hope of salvation.

But sharp eyes were on the alert, below and aloft, for they had found the whale's "slick," and were following it down. My outcry was heard, and the ship brought rapidly up in the wind, while two boats were dropped into the watter and manned as quickly as eager men could accomplish it. I never relaxed my cries until one of the boats was near enough for the crew to see the waif and set up their answering shout. I was pulled by strong arms from my cramped position into the boat of Capt. Gibbs, who, seemingly excited almost to insanity, had come himself on this errand of rescue.

My story, which I told in as few words as possible, excited them still more. We shot alongside, and I was helped up to the deck, while he was issuing all sorts of urgent orders.

All three boats were soon down, with directions to "spread their chances," and to search thoroughly every foot of "ground" or sea as they went. A set of signals were rapidly agreed on, and the ship-keepers had their orders issued faster than they could take in their meaning. As the Captain sprang down the side again into his boat, I overheard him cry in a low, bitter tone:

"God bless me! Why did I do it?"

And God did help him. Within an hour, the reports of three muskets from the boats told us that the lost ones were found; and stranger to say all were alive thought well nigh exhausted. The boat had filled and rolled bottom up, but all had succeeded in climbing upon her bottom, through the superhuman efforts of Mr. Andrews, who, all said, appeared to take little care of his own life, so that he could save the others. The stronger supported the weaker ones and kept them upon the boat's bottom; but the preservation of the whole crew seemed to me miraculous, when I think of it at the present writing.

The old collored boat-steerer, Beers, was almost gone, being, in fact, quite insensible when help arrived.

When the first excitement was over, I saw the Captian take Mr. Andrews aside and heard words which I could not make out, but his voice seemed choked with emotion, and the two stood gasping each other's hands for some time, as if their whole souls were in the act. A bond of brotherhood was established between them from that hour which was broken only with the close of their lives.

We were so fortunate as to find and secure the whale the next day, and, in the happy state of feeling consequent upon our good luck, the perals of our adventure were soon lost sight of; but upon Capt. Gibbs, at last, the lesson of that careful night was not lost.

What He Desired.

During a case which was tried before the late Julee Maule, of England, a witness, in the course of both examination and cross examination, declared there were only two things in the world which he admired—women and horses. At the conclusion of the trial, the judge asked that the witness who had made this statement should be brought before him.

"I think, sir, that I understood you to say that in your opinion there are only two things in this world worthy of admiration—women and horses; is that so?"

"Yes, my lord, I said that, and I'm not ashamed to stick to it."

"Very well, I will give you a piece of advice. When you go home, get an honest solicitor, if you can find one—I never could—to make your will for you and have a clause inserted instructing your executor to have your skin tanned after your death, and have a lady's saddle made out of the leather."

"But my lord," exclaimed the amazed witness, "what can—"

"Don't you see why, then you will have the satisfaction of knowing that after you are dead you will instantly be between the objects of admiration."

A TRAMP.

Danbury News.

A tramp depressed by hunger but bristling with ambition to work, came into the office this morning and wanted a "sit." There was nothing for him to do, the foreman told him. But he begged all the harder. He was penniless hungering, but he would not take charity. He wanted work. His importunities grew so strong that a compositor was induced to vacate his case for the accommodation of the wretched stranger, and the stick and rule was given him It seemed as if he could not be thankful enough for the favor. He looked at the copy, at the case, and then around the room with an expression like unto that of a pleased child. Then he mentioned that he could not go to work until he had breakfast. It lacked but an hour of noon, so the foreman said that as the type was needed he had better wait until that time. But he was so faint that he could not possibly lift a type. So a man was dispatched with him to a restaurant and he breakfasted. He came back with a face radiant with gratitude He took up the stick again, smiled agreeable at the copy, and said to the foreman—

"I guess I'd better look up a boarding house, eh?"

The foreman kindly volunteered to perform that office for him. Again he toyed with the stick, and again he smiled at the copy. Then he said—

"As this is Saturday and too late in the week to do much, I guess I'll wait till Monday to go to work, so to commence fresh and square."

There was a sudden commotion, a hasty movement of legs, shooting-stick, planer, and a few other articles of less importance, but the stranger reached the door first.

The office is waiting for Monday with considerable anxiety.

It May Save Your Life.

There is no person living but what suffers more or less with Lung Disease, Coughs, Colds or Consumption, yet some would die rather than to pay 75 cents for a bottle of medicine that would cure them. Dr. A. Boschee's German Syrup has lately been introduced in this country from Germany, and its wonderous cures astonishes every one that try it. If you doubt what we say in print, cut this out and take it to your Druggist, F. E. Davenport, and get a sample bottle for 10 cents and try it, or a regular size for 75 cents.

THE PALACE GARDEN.

Near Eman's hall, beyond the outward fosse,
There was a slope all day with golden moss,
Where grass and lady-ferns and daisies white,
And fairy-rose, the wandering bee's delight,
And the wild thyme that scents the upland breeze,
And clumps of hawthorn and fair ashen trees.
And further on there spread a little plain
That never seemed to thirst for dew or rain;
For round about it waved a perfumed wood,
And through its midst there ran a crystal flood
With many a murmuring song and elfin shout,
In whose clear pools the crimson-spotted trout
Would turn his tawny side to sun and sky,
Or sparkling upward catch the summer fly;
On whose green banks the iris in its pride,
Flaunting in blue and gold, grew side by side
With meadow sweet and snow-white ladies' gowns,
And daffodils that shook their yellow crowns
In wanton dalliance with each breeze that blew;
And there the birds sang songs forever new
To those that loved them as friend loveth friend;
And there the cuckoo first his way would wend
From far-off climes and kingdoms year by year,
And vent himself and shout his message clear
Round the glad woods that winter was no more,
And summer's reign begun from shore to shore.

Beside that merry streamlet all day long,
From month to month, was heard the craftsmen's song;
For they were gathered there from many lands,
And fast the palace grew beneath their hands,
Until each fretted roof and cornice fold
Shone through the woodland sprays like fiery gold.
Then round the flowery slope and level space
They built a giant wall, from cope to base
Unbroken, save by one small massive door
With the King's shield in porphyry fashioned o'er;
And guarded by a triple gate of brass
Through which, unbid, no living wight could pass.
And never upon mortal's proudest dream
Did such a fairy sight of splendor gleam
As that gay palace glowing in the light,
With door-ways carven of the silver white,
And doors of burnished gold and ivory,
And halls roofed o'er with the pink cedar tree;
And garden glorious with all flowers that grew,
And lawns in whose green midst a jet upflew
Of water from a well of carmogal,
Backward again all diamonded to fall
In breeze-blown mists and showers of glittering spray
Upon the goldfish at their happy play.

And there they nursed the babe on beast and knee
Within these palace halls full tenderly;
And there she grew and blossomed year by year
In light and loveliness without a peer,
Like a fair fragrant flower that time by time
Gains some new beauty in its summer prime;
And oft about the garden she would run
And like a fairy dance in shade and sun,
And make companionship with everything
That through the garden moved on foot or wing.
And scarce seven years had passed till with her tongue,
Nimble with elfish questions, she had wrung
The very heart from out her nurse's breast;
And all this time did no eye living rest
Upon her, save the King's own royal eye
And Caffa's, and the lady's proud and high
Who nursed her, and old Lavarcam's, the dame
Who oft in fear and wonder, thither came
To talk with her beneath the garden bowers;
And there amid the brightest of the flowers,
Laughing the child would say— "Oh, Lavarcam!
Come tell me!—Oh, come, tell me what I am!
Did I come here just like the summer fly
To sparkle in the sun and then to die?
I've asked the flies full oft, but murmuringly
They said they were too filled with present glee
To give me answer, and they passed away;
And once unto the streamlet did I say,
'What am I?'—for in grove or garden-walk
I oft feel lonely and perforce must talk
To all things round that creep or walk or fly,
And well I know their speech. And 'What am I?'
I asked the stream; and it was churlish, too,
And would not speak, but from its weeds upthrew
A great brown frog, puffed up with too much pride,
And 'Ugly! Ugly! Ugly!' hoarse he cried;
And then from off the streamlet's grassy brim
He made great mouths at me, and I at him,
Until I grew afeared of him and me,
And ran and ran by bank and rustling tree
Up to the fount to see my goldfish glance,
And with them in the sun like this to dance!"
Then as a swallow that from o'er the foam
Returns at last to her dear native home,
And filled with joy beneath the branches cool
In airy circles skims her favorite pool,
So round the fountain with light foot and free
The little elfish maid danced gleefully,
Now here, now there, in her wild gambolings
O'er the smooth grass, as if she, too, had wings!

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

Two men met in New York. They were merchants.

"What do you think of Carlton's affairs, Mr. Elder?" asked one of them.

"I think we shall have a pretty fair percentage. Don't you?"

"Yes, if we wind him up."

"That we shall do, of course. Why let him go on? It will take him two or three years to get through, if at all."

"If he can get through in two or three years, I shall certainly be in favor of letting him go on. Times have been rather hard and business dull. But everything looks encouraging now."

"I don't believe in extensions, Mr. Highland. The surest way, when a man gets into difficulties, is to wind him up, and secure what you can. Ten chances to one, if you let him go, you lose every cent."

"I have granted extensions in several instances, Mr. Elder," replied his companion, "and obtained, eventually, my whole claim, except in a single case."

"It's always a risk. I go by the motto, 'A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush,'" returned Elder. "I am always ready to take what I can get to-day, and never trust to the morrow. That is my way of doing business."

"But do you not think the debtor entitled to some consideration?"

"How?" with a look of surprise.

"He is a man of like passions with ourselves."

"I don't know that I understand you exactly, Mr. Highland."

"Mr. Carlton has domestic relations, as well as you and I."

"I never doubted it. But what of that?"

"If we break him up in business, the evil will not visit him alone. Think of the effect upon his family."

"In trade we never consider a man's family relations."

"But should we not, Mr. Elder? Should we not regard the debtor as a man?"

"As a man who owes us, and is unable to pay us what is due; but in no other light," returned Mr. Elder with a slight curl of the lip.

"There we differ widely."

"And will continue to differ, I imagine. Good morning, Mr. Highland."

The two men parted.

An hour previous, Mr. Carlton, about whom they had been conversing, sat with his family, a wife and three daughters, at the breakfast table. He tried to converse in his usual cheerful manner, but too heavy a weight was upon his heart. There had come a crisis in his affairs, which he feared would not be passed without ruin to himself. If the effects of his misfortune would not reach beyond his store and counting-room; if upon his head alone would fall the fragments of a broken fortune, he would not have murmured. But the disaster could not stop there. It would extend even to the sanctuary of home.

On the day previous, he had called on a few of his creditors, and asked of them an extension. If this were not given, it would be impossible for him to keep on longer than a few weeks. The spirit in which most of the creditors had received the unexpected announcement that he was in difficulties gave him little to hope. He was to have another interview with them during the day. From that, as it would exhibit the result of a night's reflection upon the minds of his creditors, he would be able to see clearly his chance of being sustained in business. He awaited the hour with nervous anxiety. When it arrived, and the few creditors called in had assembled, he saw little in their faces to give him hope. The first who spoke out plainly was Elder.

"I, gentlemen," he said, firmly, "am opposed to all extensions. If a man cannot pay as he goes, I think he had better wind up."

"If all do not agree in this matter, it will be no use to attempt extending Mr. Carlton's time," remarked one of the creditors, who thought and felt as did Elder, but was not willing to come out so plainly.

"That is very true," said a third. "A partial extension will be of no use."

The heart of poor Carlton almost ceased to beat.

"Have you any objection to retiring for a few minutes?" said Mr. Highland to the debtor.

"I will withdraw, certainly," returned Mr. Carlton, and left the room.

"My own view, gentlemen," said Mr. Highland, "is, that we ought to grant all that is asked. Mr. Carlton's business is good, and he will get over his present difficulties easily, if we only assist him a little. We should be just, as man toward man; and this I do not think we should be in this case unless we consider Carlton as well as ourselves. He is an honest man, and an honest man in difficulties is always entitled to consideration."

"That is all very well. But when a man gives his note payable at a certain day, he ought to be very sure that he will be able to take it up. Creditors are entitled to some consideration, as well as debtors. The cry of 'poor debtor' is soon raised, but who, I wonder, thinks of the poor creditor? I, for one, am not prepared to extend."

This was said by Elder.

"As for me," spoke up another, "I take but one view of matters like this. If I think I will do better by renewing, I am ready to do so; if, by winding up the party now, I can do better, I go for winding up. I have confidence in Carlton's integrity. I believe he means well. But can he get through? that is the question."

"I believe he can," said Mr. Highland.

"And I doubt it," returned Elder.

The efforts of Elder to efface the impression the words of Mr. Highland had made proved in vain. It was agreed that the debtor should receive the extension he asked. When informed of this decision, Carlton could not hide his emotions, though he strove hard to do so. His grateful acknowledgments for the favor granted touched more than one heart that had been cold as ice toward him a short time before. How different were his feelings when he met his family that evening, and silently thanked Heaven that the cloud which had hovered over, and threatened to break in desolating tempest, had passed from the sky.

Long before the arrival of the time for which an extension had been granted, Mr. Carlton was able to pay off everything, and to look in the face, without unpleasant emotions, every man he met.

Strange things happen in real life. Mr. Elder was a shipper, and extensively engaged in trade. For a series of years everything went on prosperously with him. His ventures always found a good market, and his consignments safe and energetic factors. All this he attributed to his own business acumen.

"I never make bad shipments," he would sometimes say. "I never consign to doubtful agents."

A man like Mr. Elder is rarely permitted to go through life without a practical conviction that he is in the hand of One who governs all events. It is rarely that such a one does not become painfully conscious, in the end, that human prudence is as nothing.

The first thing that occurred to check the confident spirit of Mr. Elder was the loss of a ship and cargo, under circumstances that gave the underwriters a fair plea for not paying the risk. He sued and was cast. The loss was $25,000.

A few weeks after, news came that a shipment to the South American coast had resulted in a loss. From that time everything seemed to go wrong. His adventures found a glutted market, and his return cargoes a depression of prices. If he held on to a thing in the hopes of better rates, prices would go down, until, in a desperate mood, he would sell; then they would go up steadily. The time was when he could confine himself strictly to legitimate trade, but a mania for speculation now took hold of him and urged him on to ruin. He even ventured into the bewildering precincts of the stock market, lured by the hope of splendid results. Here he stood upon ground that soon crumbled beneath his feet. A loss of $20,000 or $30,000 cured him of this folly, and he turned with a sigh to his counting-room, to digest, with care and prudent forethought, some safe operation in his regular business.

But the true balance of his mind was lost. He could not consider with calmness the business in hand. A false move was the consequence. Loss instead of profit was the unfortunate result.

Seven years from the day Mr. Elder opposed an arrangement with Mr. Carlton, which should regard the debtor as well as the creditor, he himself found it impossible to provide for all his heavy payments. For some time he had kept his head above water by making sacrifices, but the end of this came.

After a sleepless night the merchant started one morning for his store, oppressed with the sad conviction that before the day closed his fair fame would be tarnished. As he walked along, Mr. Carlton came to his side, with a cheerful salutation. Mr. C. was now a large creditor, instead of a debtor. On that very day, bills in his favor had matured to the amount of $5,000, and these Elder could not pay. The recollection of this made it almost impossible for him to reply to the pleasant observations of his companion. Vividly, as if it had occurred yesterday, came up before his mind the circumstances that had transpired a few years previously. He remembered how eagerly he had sought, from the merest selfish motives, to break down Mr. Carlton and throw him helpless upon the world, and how near he was to accomplishing the merchant's total overthrow. Such recollections drove from his mind the hope that for a moment had presented itself of enlisting Mr. Carlton's good feelings, and securing him as a friend in the trial through which he was about to pass.

Several times during the walk he was on the point of breaking the matter to Mr. C., but either his heart failed him, or his companion made some remark to which he was compelled to reply. At length they separated, without any allusion by Mr. Elder to the subject on which he was so desirous of speaking. He had not the courage to utter the first word.

But this was only postponing for a very brief period the evil day. Several remittances were anxiously looked for that morning. He broke the sealing, letter after letter, with trembling anxiety. Alas! the mail brought him no aid. His last hope was gone. Nothing now remained for him but to turn his face bravely to the threatening storm, and bear up against its fury.

For a while he debated the question as to what course was best for him to pursue. At one time he thought of giving no information of his condition, until the notary's protest should startle them from their ignorance. Then he thought it would be best to notify the holder of paper due on that day, that it would not be taken up. Then it seemed to him best to give notice of his condition. He prepared brief notes to all, but Mr. Carlton first. His heart failed him when he attempted to write his name. Vividly, as if it had occurred but the day previous, came up before his mind all the circumstances attendant upon that gentleman's appeal to his creditors. His cheek burned when he remembered the position he had assumed in that affair.

But, even though such were his feelings, when he came to dispatch the notes he had prepared he could only find courage to send the one written to Mr. Carlton. The other creditors, whose bills had matured that day, he thought he would go and see; but half an hour passed without his acting upon the resolution to do so. Most of the day was spent in walking uneasily the floor of his counting-room, or in examining certain accounts in his ledger, or entries in his bill-book. He was bending, all absorbed, over a page of calculations at his desk, when some one, who had entered unperceived, pronounced his name. He turned quickly, and looked Mr. Carlton in the face. The color mounted instantly to the temples of Mr. Elder. He tried to speak, but could not.

"Your note has taken me altogether by surprise," said Mr. Carlton; "but I hope things are not so bad as you suppose."

Mr. Elder shook his head. He tried to speak, but could not.

"How much have you to pay to-day?" asked Mr. Carlton.

"Ten thousand dollars," was the reply, in a husky voice.

"How much have you toward it?"

"Not two thousand."

"How much falls due to-morrow?"

"Four thousand."

"How much in a month?"

"Fifty thousand."

"What will be your available resources?"

"Not half the amount."

"Haven't you good bills?"

"Yes; but not negotiable."

Mr. Carlton mused for some time. At length he said:

"You must not lie over to-day."

"I cannot help it."

"If you will transfer to me, as security in case you have to stop payment, the bills of which you speak, I will lend you the amount you want to-day."

The color retired from the cheeks of Mr. Elder, and then came back with a quick flush. He made no answer, but looked steadily and doubtingly into Mr. Carlton's face.

"I have been in difficulties myself, and I know how to sympathize with others," said the latter. "We should aid if we can, not break down a fellow-merchant when in trouble. Indorse bills to my order for the sum you want, and I will fill up a check for the amount."

Elder turned slowly to his desk, and took therefrom sundry notes of hand in his favor, at various dates from six to twelve months, and indorsed them payable to Carlton, who immediately gave him a check for $8,000, and left the store.

A clerk was instantly dispatched to the bank, and then Mr. Elder sank into a chair, half stupefied. He could hardly believe his senses until the canceled notes were placed in his hands.

On the next morning, Mr. Elder went to his place of business with feelings but little less troubled than they had been on the day before. His payments were lighter, but his means were for the first time exhausted. The best he could do would be to borrow, but he already owed heavily for borrowed money, and was not certain that to go further was practicable. He thought of Mr. Carlton, but every feeling of his heart forbade him to seek further aid from him.

"I deserve no consideration there, and I cannot ask it," he murmured, as he pursued his way toward his store. The first thing that caught his eye on entering his counting-room was a pile of ship letters. There had been an arrival from Valparaiso. He broke the seal of the first one he took up, with eagerness. "Thank God!" was his almost immediate exclamation. It was from one of his Captains, and contained drafts for $15,000. It also informed him that the ship Sarah, commanded by said Captain, would sail for home in a week, with a return cargo of hides and specie amounting to $30,000. The voyage had been profitable beyond expectation.

Elder had just finished reading the letter, when Mr. Carlton came in. Seizing the kind-hearted merchant by the hand, and pressing it hard, he said, with emotion:

"Carlton, you have saved me! Ah! sir, this would be to me a far happier moment if, seven years ago, when you were in trouble, I had as generously aided you."

"Let the past sleep in peace," returned Mr. Carlton. "If fortune has smiled again, permit me to rejoice with you, as I do with all who are blessed with favoring gales. To meet with difficulties is of use to us. It gives us the power of sympathy with others, and that gift we should all desire, for it is a good thing to lift the burden from shoulders bent down with too heavy weight, and throw sunlight over a heart shaded by gloom."

Mr. Elder recovered from his crippled condition in the course of a few months. He was never again known to oppress a suffering debtor.

VENERABLE BONES.

Exhumation of Remains of the Mound Builders at Milton, Wis.—Interesting Archæological Discoveries.

[Milton (Wis.) Cor. Chicago Times.]

This week a party from this village, including President Whitford, of Milton College, Chas. E. Mann, of Milwaukee, W. P. Clarke, your correspondent, and seven others, visited the west bank of Lake Koshkonong for the purpose of opening an ancient mound. Work was begun on this mound, which is the largest in this section, last July, but little excavating had, however, been done previous to this visit. A trench thirty feet long and five feet wide was dug from the outer edge of the mound to the center, at which point the excavation reached a depth of ten feet. Upon going down, in the center of the mound and when about a foot from the bottom a layer of ashes and decayed wood was uncovered, and a few inches below that we came to a deposit having the appearance of mortar, being light colored and quite hard. Immediately below this compound were found the remains of the ancient people who were laid away there hundreds of years ago. The first skeleton uncovered lay with the head to the west in a reclining position. At his knees were found, near each hand, two handsome wrist ornaments, with holes drilled through them to attach them to the wrist. They were the jaw and teeth of some wild animal, about four inches in length. Carefully excavating the soil the skull was soon found, but so badly decayed as to make it impossible to remove it. At the south side of the skull were found four perfect arrow heads. They were all of different sizes, a pure white and as true in shape as if they had been manufactured by machinery. Lying at the shoulders were found twenty-nine beads, made from beautiful little shells, perforated, and evidently a necklace worn by the gentleman whose bones we were digging out, and who was, without doubt, a great chief of his tribe, for no other ornaments were found around the bones of the remaining skeletons. Five other skeletons were exhumed. They were lying about the chief to the west, northwest, and east. Three were evidently adults and two children, for in the jawbone of the smaller of the two was found a wisdom tooth which had not, at the time of the burial, forced its way above the level of the jaw. The relics exhumed will carefully preserved in the cabinet of Milton College. A bushel of bones were left on the banks of the mound, not being valuable on account of their decayed condition. Several jaw-bones, including the teeth, were found in a good state of preservation. On the top of this mound an Indian skeleton was dug out about eighteen inches below the surface, while the remaining skeletons were brought to light eight and one-half feet below that point, showing conclusively that the remains are those of a race who preceded the Indians. Arrangements will be perfected for making further developments in that region on a more extensive scale in the spring. The mound was sixty feet in diameter and ten feet above the natural surface at the center. On top was turf, to a depth of eighteen inches, and a black loam natural to that locality. The next five to six feet was gravel and soil of a different kind, evidently put there by artificial means, and immediately beneath that and above the bones, a black loam like that on top, the bones resting on clay like that found just below the black loam of the country thereabouts, which shows conclusively that the black loam on top was the natural deposit of soil since the mound was built.

Modern Synagogue Worship.

If any one were to enter a synagogue attended by the wealthier class of Jews he would find service announced to commence at half-past 8 o'clock on the Sabbath morning. It cannot be commenced before ten persons are present; and were it not for the fact that a few poor men are paid a small weekly sum to be early in synagogue the prayers might be begun at about 10 o'clock, when the congregation assumes some numerical strength. The synagogue is open every day of the week; but the week-day services are attended by the paid worshipers only, and occasionally by a few ultra-orthodox persons desirous of reciting the prayer for a deceased parent. The women who attend the services are hidden away in a gallery by themselves, and have no voice in the synagogue, either morally or physically; their presence in it is entirely ignored, and they do not even join in the chanting of the psalms. When a Jew enters the synagogue he proceeds to shake hands with the friends who have preceded him; queries as to "how is business" are propounded and answered, and he wends his way to his seat, nodding and smiling as he goes. He envelops himself in his silken talith, produces his gorgeously-bound prayer-book, and proceeds with his devotions. Should he desire to do so seriously, however, he finds himself frequently interrupted by fresh arrivals who wish to become acquainted with the state of his health, his business, and the latest news.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Utilizing a Husband.

"Your husband is sick a good sight of late, ben't he?" remarked a Southern Illinois woman to another, one day last week.

"Yes," answered the wife, "he's got tuk down mighty hard with them 'ere ague shakes agin."

"I shud think it 'ud be sorter distressin' like ter have him 'round the house," remarked the other, sympathizingly, "spec'ly when yer at house-cleanin'."

"Wal, so it wud be," replied the wife, in self-consoling tones, "but when he's got inter one of his chills, and I want the rag-carpet shuk, yer see he's a powerful smart hand ter hitch onto it."—Chicago Journal.

EUROPEAN ARMIES.

What the Great Powers Could Rely On in Case of War.

[From the New York World.]

Some notes upon the armaments of the several great European powers may not be without interest at this moment.

ENGLAND.

England has a regular army of 129,281 men, and a reserve of about 340,000 of all ranks, arms, and degrees of effectiveness. The militia numbers 139,018; the yeomanry cavalry, 15,378; the volunteer artillery, 29,768; and the volunteer riflemen, engineers, and light-horse, 123,498. There are also 10,000 pensioners and army-reserve men in the first line and 22,000 in the second.

The navy includes in commission 109 sea-going steamers and 133 reserve steamers and sailing vessels. The iron-clads are sixty-one in number, with 716 guns. Ship-building is at present being conducted with unusual activity; forty-two vessels, four of which, the Ajax, Agamemnon, Nelson, and Northampton, are armored, being on the stocks or in hand on the 1st inst.

TURKEY.

Turkey's army, under the scheme to be completely carried out in 1878, should consist of 150,000 regulars, 70,000 men of the first reserve, 120,000 first levy, 120,000 second levy, and 320,000 hijade, or landsturm, or 780,000 men in all. Capt. Vincent's estimate last June was that the Turks could place in the field 180,376 regulars, 148,680 reserves, and 75,000 auxiliaries, or say 350,000 infantry and 40,000 cavalry, with 648 guns. The infantry have 200,000 Sniders, as many Martini-Henry rifles and percussion muskets; the cavalry have Winchester rifles and revolvers, and the cannon are Krupp's breech-loaders, four and six pounders, with three-pounders for mountain use.

The fleet consists of twenty iron clads (seven frigates, eights corvettes, and five gun-boats) and seventy steamers, manned by 30,000 sailors and 4,000 marines. The iron clads are of a superior class, and mount 149 guns.

RUSSIA.

Russia's army is in process of reorganization, and looks larger on paper than it really is. The Sbornik, of St. Petersburg, claims a war strength of 1,463,000 men, including irregulars, or 730,000 regulars; reserves, 206,000; garrisons, 120,000; depots, 257,000; Cossacks, 70,000; local forces, mainly Asiatic, 80,000. Capt. Vincent's estimate is 752,000 combatant infantry, 172,000 cavalry, and 2,768 guns, including 400 mitrailleuses.

The navy in March, 1875, contained twenty-nine ironclads with 184 guns, and 108 men-of-war with 8,694 officers and men. The total number of vessels of all kinds is nearly 300, mounting 1,500 guns.

OTHER POWERS.

Austria (including Hungary) has a small ironclad fleet. Her effective force is 798,172 infantry, 62,746 cavalry, and 1,616 guns.

Italy has 447,264 infantry, armed mostly with the Remington rifle, 15,850 cavalry, and 1,240 guns. Her navy consists of ninety-five vessels, with 1,256 guns, nine being ironclads, with 346 guns. Its condition is doubtful.

Germany this year has in her standing army 418,741 men, including the train and 67,845 cavalry and 48,627 artillery, with 2,472 guns. On a war-footing she has 1,304,841 men; the first class of the landstrum contains 175,800, and the second class will bring the total strength up to 1,700,000 men. The fleet last November included eleven ironclads, with 105 guns; sixty-two steamers with 321 guns; and four sailing vessels, with fifty-two guns—in all seventy-seven ships, with 478 guns; and manned by something over 9,000 men.

France is also reorganizing her army. Its effective force at last reports was 277,000 infantry, 68,281 cavalry, 65,096 artillery, and about 20,000 engineers, etc.—in all, 430,702 men. The navy last December consisted of sixty-three iron clads, with 700 guns; 264 screw-steamers, sixty-two paddle-steamers, and 113 sailing vessels, carrying in all 3,073 guns.

Kayser's Dog.

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat tells this story of Kayser's expensive dog: "About two years ago John Plass took a fancy to a dog belonging to one Kayser. It was a good watch-dog, and dangerous to tramps and interlopers. Kayser made Plass a present of the dog, but the animal, after stopping a few days with his new owner, returned to his old master. Plass got him back, and again the dog returned to Kayser, and was again taken home by Plass. The dog shifted his kennel so often that it was a matter of doubt which of the two men was the owner of the beast. While the dog was in possession of Plass he inflicted a severe bite upon the leg of Elizabeth Lochlein, which gave her great pain, and necessitated the outlay of $50 for the services of a doctor. She sued Plass for $5,000 damages, and obtained a verdict for $1,500. A new trial was granted, which took place before Judge Jones, and the jury gave a verdict for the plaintiff for $1,000."

Five Generations.

The remains of Cook St. John, of Walton, N. Y., were followed to the grave last Friday by five generations of descendants. Although he was in his 104th year at the time of his death, his mind was remarkably clear. He recalled the events of a century with the same ease with which men of middle life review their younger days. In the last hours of his life he seemed to be dwelling on the scenes of his youth and manhood, and conversing with those who died sixty, seventy, eighty years ago. He had voted at every Presidential election since his majority.—New York Tribune.

The Christian Leader (N. Y.), in speaking of Merchant's Gargling Oil, says: "Mr. Hodge is a gentleman of liberal tastes and excellent judgment, and the Gargling Oil Company, under his thoroughly judicious direction, has become one of the strongest and soundest concerns that grace the commercial annals of our State. Other medicinal specialties, in addition to the Gargling Oil, are beginning to claim the Company's attention, and of their great success we have as little doubt as we have of their intrinsic merit."

KATY DIDN'T.

BY R. V. HALLETT.

Out on the crisp October air,
All up and down the glade,
Was heard the voice of Katie dear,
And what do you think she said?

She said she couldn't, she said she wouldn't,
She said she never did,
And from the curious gaze of all
Her pretty eyes she hid.

But what was this that "Katie didn't?"
Why should she so persist
In rasping thus that gentle voice
That no one could resist?

Why, all the birds, and bats, and bugs,
Just over by the wicket,
Declare that modest little Kate
Had flirted with a cricket.

And Katie's sisters say she did,
And all the crickets, too;
I think that Katie ought to know
Whether she did, [illegible]

And every night till latest fall,
Let it blow high or low,
This question comes before the house,
Did Katie flirt, [illegible]

Katie did. No, Katie didn't!
Continually they cry;
Katie did! No Katie didn't!
And so they will for aye.

THE time for husking-bees is at hand. The husking-bee is a delightful entertainment given by farmers, and is generally attended by eighteen young men, who kiss each of the girls in the house seven times, husk four ears of corn, and go home as soon as they have disposed of what cider they can find.

THEODORE HOOK once dined with Hatchett, at his delightful village of Belle Vue, famous for its culinary completeness. "Ah, my dear fellow," said his host, deprecatingly, "I am sorry to say that you'll not get to-day such a dinner as our friend Tom Moore gave us." "Certainly not," replied Hook; "from a Hatchett one can expect nothing but a chop."

Bless you—bless you—never saw you—didn't think of such a thing—take this and say nothing!" As he drove away the old man inspected the gift. It was a 10-cent shinplaster.—Detroit Free Press.

A Rogue who Would not Have his Picture Taken.

Some further reminiscences have come out of the eminent horse-thief, "Troy" Dennis, who lost his life at No. 66 West Fiftieth street, New York, Thursday night. Dennis would never when arrested permit the police photographer take his carte de visite for the rogues' album. Several attempts to this end were made, and Dennis always fought desperately. The police on one occasion claimed a victory, as, by dint of straps and cords, and three men holding him by the limbs, ears and hair, a very remarkable portrait of a man with his features drawn up and distorted, but bearing no resemblance, was obtained. Dennis frequently sat quite still until the photographer uncovered his lens, when he would contort his features in every possible way and distort the negative. He used to boast that no police force could obtain his portrait, and only a few months ago, when arrested on suspicion, bragged to Superintendent Walling that it was no use, they couldn't get his "mug."—*Troy (N. SONS OF RICH FATHERS.

The Spendthrifts of New York City—Where Gamblers Find a Harvest.

[From the Chicago Tribune, Oct. 13.]

How much misery there may be in the mansions of the rich is something that can never be known, but every now and then an item appears which reveals instances of depravity which defy belief. One of these is found in the experiences of a wealthy hotel proprietor, who has a son upon whom he has lavished money profusely for his education and culture. All efforts to start him in business enterprises have been failures. Thousands of dollars have been wasted thus, and the young man at 24 is a wreck and ruin. Although enjoying a steady income through his father's liberality, he has squandered his reputation by borrowing money from all his own acquaintances as well as his father's. The latter has been compelled to warn his friends not to loan any money to his son. At the end of a recent debauch this reckless spendthrift went to one of the proprietors of a prominent hotel, and obtained $85 upon a forged check drawn in his father's name. As soon as the forgery was discovered, the case was put in the hands of the police, and threatened serious consequences, whereupon the father came to the rescue and redeemed the forged check. An offer has been made the young man of a free cabin passage around the world in a California-bound clipper ship, but he declines to accept it.

It was George D. Prentice, I believe, who described one of Henry Clay's sons (for a political offense) as "the degenerate son of a noble sire." This city, and probably this country as well, is full of such instances, with the difference that the sins of the latter sons are gross and criminal. As a general rule these are the sons of the wealthy men, who are usually called self-made men because they have had very limited culture, and earned their own fortunes by their own indomitable energy, genius, and perseverance. The reason why these men rarely have sons worthy of being named as their successors is found in this, that the elements of self-reliance and independence, which made the fathers the men they are, are lacking in the sons. The parents naturally desire to give their boy the benefits of an education they failed to receive themselves, and thus, at the very outset of their careers, the foundation of self-dependence is lacking. Innumerable examples might be cited of this. There are a hundred young rascals in this city wasting their fathers' substance in riotous living whose lives are simply worthless. They are worse than drones—they are the embodiment of wickedness. One of the billiard sharps of this city is the son of wealthy parents. He is devoted to billiards and wine. The gamblers find a harvest among these fellows, and it is rare indeed that the young men of 21 to 30, whose fathers are wealthy, are worthy of their progenitors.

The English House of Lords.

The London Times says: "The recent elevations and new creations in the peerage have slightly affected the roll of the House of Lords, which now stands at a little over instead of a little under 500, as it did at this time last year. In January last the Earl of Erne was created a Baron of the United Kingdom, and Mr. J. R. Ormsby-Gore, Mr. Henry Gerard Sturt, Mr. John Tollemache, and Sir Robert Gerard were raised in a 'batch' to the upper house as Lords Harlech, Alington, Tollemache, and Gerard, while the Earl of Abergavenny was created a Marquis, and the Duke of Richmond had an additional Dukedom, that of Gordon, bestowed upon him. Since that time Lord Northbrook has been rewarded with an Earldom for his services in India, and the Earldom of Beaconsfield has also been bestowed upon Mr. Disraeli. The exact number of peerages, spiritual and temporal, including those enjoyed by members of the royal family, stands consequently at the present moment at 508, headed by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales as Duke of Cornwall, and ending with 'Mortimer, Lord Sackville,' the junior Baron. The Dukes number 21, the Marquises 22, the Earls 132, the Viscounts 31, the Archbishops 26, and the Barons 265. The rest of the roll is made up by the Royal Dukes. There are one or two things to be noted in the present roll. Firstly, that the number of peerages on it is slightly in excess of the actual total number of the Lords, spiritual and temporal; Lord Cairns being enumerated twice over, both as a Baron and as Lord Chancellor; the Duke of Richmond both as Duke and also as Lord President of the Council; the Marquis of Hertford both as a Marquis and also as Lord Chamberlain; Earl Beauchamp both as an Earl and also as Lord Steward of the Household; and, lastly, the Earl of Erne both as an Irish representative peer and also as Lord Fermanagh. Again, it may be observed that the Buckhurst title has disappeared since last year as a separate entry, being merged in the superior honor of the Earldom of De la Warr, and that blanks are put against the names of the Earldom of Berkeley and the Barony of De Freyne. The name of the Earl of Beaconsfield also figures twice in the roll, firstly in his own place at the end of the Earls, next after Lord Northbrook; and, again, as Lord Privy Seal, in which capacity His Lordship takes precedence above and before all Dukes, next after the members of the royal family, the two Archbishops, the Lord Chancellor, and the Lord President of the Council."

Smallness of Stature.

Not long before his death, Canon Kingsley drew attention to the surprising number of small young men to be seen in a London crowd. According to him, it was a sign of the deterioration of the race. But there are two ways of looking at everything, and, for the comfort and satisfaction of small people, we would point out that it might almost be taken as an indication of intellectual progress. Many—we might almost say most—of the great men of history have been of short stature, from the days of that ancient philosopher who, as the story goes, was so diminutive that he had to carry lead in his pockets to prevent his being blown away. Canute the Great, for example, was a singularly small man; Napoleon, too, was little; Nelson had no height to boast of; and the great Conde was short enough. Hildebrand—Gregory VII.—the mightiest of all the Popes, was also quite a diminutive person. Then, amongst men of letters, poets and philosophers, Montaigne, the essayist, was little; so was Pope—"a little crooked thing that asks questions; so was Dryden; so was Dr. Watts, who insisted, as we all know, on the mind being the stature of the man; and so was Scarron, who, alluding at once to his ill-health and his little size, called himself an "abridgment of human miseries." Will any one, after such names as these—and the list might be indefinitely extended—look down on little men with disdain?—Cassell's Family Magazine.

May We Live a Hundred Years?

Some curious facts have come out in the thirty-fifth annual report of the Registrar General of births, deaths and marriages of the British Islands. Dr. Farr, after an experience of ten years of registration, boldly announces the opinion that the natural life-time of men and women is a century, and not three-score-and-ten, as is generally believed. Of course, the Registrar makes it a condition precedent that if all children were born in perfect health, and were to live afterward under the most favorable sanitary conditions, 100 years would be the duration of human life. As it is, the average tenure of life in England is forty-one years, and, even in the most salubrious districts, scarcely fifty years. In London the death toll is on the decrease. Two hundred years since the mortality of London was not less than 8 per cent.; 100 years since it was reduced to 5 per cent.; and it is at this time about 2.4. It is hardly probable that the decrease will go on hereafter with the same rapidity, owing to the ever-increasing pauperism of so vast a city. Still, statistics show that the marvelous diminution of deaths in proportion to population is owing to superior sanitary improvements. It is in the country, however, that longevity will always prevail. Obviously, it is unnecessary to specify such causes as pure air, less adulteration of food and drink, and an absence of excitement and dissipation. A few examples will be interesting: Ephraim Pratt, of the village of Shutesbury, died at 116 years; Lawrence, a native of Shetland, died at 140; Catharine, Countess of Desmond, in Ireland, died at 140 years; Thomas Parr, of Shropshire, died at 152 years. And here may be mentioned a city set-off—Kentigern, or St. Mungo, Bishop of Glasgow, as is certified on his monument, died at 185 years! Added to these wonderful cases of longevity is a long list of persons who reached 110, 120 and 130. In our own country centenarians are by no means unusual. There are, too, some wonderful statistics of long-lived people, of which we have only room for a few. G. P. R. James, while British Consul at Richmond, said that the climate of Virginia closely resembled that of England. In this State are chronicled: William McKim, who died at 130 years; John de la Somet, who died at 130; Wonder Booker, a negro, who died at 126, and nineteen persons of both sexes who reached the ages of 110 and over. In fact, of the nineteen, 110 is the lowest, the rest ranging from 112 to 116, 120 and 126. These are wonderful figures, but it is safe to say that the centenarians, North and South, are far more common than is generally supposed, were accurate accounts kept by families of the exact year of birth and death. No register has been made of the birth and death of negroes, who are tenacious of life. There are in every Southern State numbers of old negro men and women who bear evidences of having reached a hundred years, but it is impossible to ascertain when they were ushered into existence. It is not because "life is sweet," as the voluptuary has it, but its preservation is important, for the higher and nobler reason that we are put upon the earth in the form of individual uses. It is, therefore, a duty to maintain as long as possible activity of brain and muscle. This can be done by attending to such points as pure air, pure water, good food—not taken to excess—regular exercise, freedom from dissipation, and the cultivation of cheerfulness. Men should leave this world easily and naturally, as foliage drops from trees in the full autumn. As it is, too many are wrenched from existence by storms of their own creation. They live fast and die fast—a miserable philosophy for beings who think and feel. The old adage, "Lay by something for a rainy day," has brought many a rainy day to a household sooner than it would have come. The human machine will not bear unnatural strains. Incessant friction brings its wheels to a sure and premature stop.

INTERESTING experiments are being made at the Central Telegraphic Bureau in Paris with a new apparatus for producing a fac-simile of the writing and signature of an individual sending a dispatch. The apparatus also produces, with great exactness, drawings of the most complicated description. The inventor is Mr. Lenoir. Some years ago similar trials were made with the invention of a Mr. Casselli, but the results were imperfect.

AT our request, Cragin & Co., Philadelphia, Pa., have promised to send any of our readers gratis (on receipt of 15 cents to pay postage) a sample of Dobbin's Electric soap. Try it. Send at once.

Consumption Cured.

An old Physician, retired from active practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India Missionary the formula of a simple Vegetable Remedy, for the speedy and permanent Cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a Positive and Radical Cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having thoroughly tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, feels it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive, and a conscientious desire to relieve human suffering, he will send (free of charge) to all who desire it, this recipe, with full directions for preparing and successfully using. Sent by return mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, Dr. W. C. Stevens, 126 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

MILLIONS of bottles of BURNETT'S COCOAINE have been sold during the last twenty years, and the public have rendered the verdict that it is the best hair dressing in the world.

THE fact that the proprietors of SANFORD'S RADICAL CURE FOR CATARRH are permitted to refer to so well known and respected a gentleman as HENRY WELLS, Esq., of Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Express, must weigh heavily in its favor.

CHAPPED hands, face, pimples, ringworm, salt rheum, and other cutaneous affections cured, and rough skin made soft and smooth, by using Juniper Tar Soap. Be careful to get only that made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, as there are many imitations made with common tar, all of which are worthless.

WITHOUT doubt hundreds of people who will read this item are suffering with Kidney Disease in some form, which might be cured with a bottle or two of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment, used internally. Why not try it?

PARSONS' Purgative Pills, which are now being extensively sold in this State, are purely vegetable, and are mild and gentle in their operation. One is a dose. Good qualities, certainly.

THE Ohio State Fair awarded the first premium for pianos to the Ohio Valley Piano Company, of Ripley. They are manufacturers of the celebrated Valley Gem, the most popular instrument now sold in the West.

Highest Honors
AT THE CENTENNIAL!
MASON & HAMLIN
Cabinet Organs
Unanimously Assigned the
"FIRST RANK
IN THE
SEVERAL REQUISITES"
Of Such Instruments!

MEDALS OF EQUAL MERIT have been awarded all articles deemed worthy of recognition, so that it will be easy for many makers to advertise that they have received "highest medals." It is by the JUDGES' REPORTS, ONLY, that competing articles are assigned their comparative rank in excellence. From these reports the following is an extract:

"THE MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN CO.'S exhibit of Reed Organs and Harmoniums shows instruments of the FIRST RANK IN THE SEVERAL REQUISITES OF INSTRUMENTS OF THE CLASS, viz.: Smoothness and equal distribution of tone, scope of expression, resonance and singing quality, freedom and quickness in action of keys and bellows, with thoroughness of workmanship, combined with simplicity of action." (Signed by all the Judges.)

The MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS are thus declared to RANK FIRST, not in one or two respects only, but in ALL the IMPORTANT QUALITIES of such instruments; and they are the ONLY organs assigned this rank.

This triumph was not unexpected, for the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs have uniformly been awarded the highest honors in competitions in America, there having been scarcely six exceptions in hundreds of competitions. They were awarded HIGHEST HONORS and first medals—PARIS, 1867; VIENNA, 1873; SANTIAGO, 1875; PHILADELPHIA, 1876; and have thus been awarded highest honors at every World's Exposition at which they have been exhibited; being the only American Organs which have ever obtained any award at any competition with best European makers, or in any European World's Exposition!

Insist on having a MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN; do not take any other. Dealers often recommend inferior organs because they are paid larger commissions for selling them.

NEW STYLES, with EXTENDED TOPS, very elegant, and other improvements, exhibited at the CENTENNIAL; elegant new cases in great variety. Prices very lowest consistent with best material and workmanship. Organs sold for cash or installments, or rented until rent pays. Every Organ warranted to give satisfaction to every reasonable purchaser or THE MONEY RETURNED. ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUES sent free. MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN CO.—154 Tremont Street, Boston; 25 Union Square, New York; 80 and 82 Adams Street, Chicago.

WOOD'S IMPROVED
HAIR RESTORATIVE
What It Does!

It restores, quickly, Gray Hair to its glossy Natural color. It has the effect of Restoring the Hair to prematurely Bald Heads. It Removes Dandruff, Humors and all Eruptions from the Scalp. It prevents Irritation, Itching and Scaly Dryness of the Skin. It Restores faded, dry, harsh and falling Hair. It renews, dresses, softens and gives vigor to the growth of the Hair. It accomplishes more desired effects in a short time than any Restorative ever made, always leaving the hair soft, lively and glossy, whether used as a Dressing upon the natural hair or upon the hair in an unhealthy condition; thus rendering it, for the Old and Young, an article of unequaled excellence. No preparation offered to the public produces such wonderful results. Try it! Try it!! Call for "Wood's Improved!" as it contains no injurious qualities.

HAIR

It was originally introduced 20 years ago by Prof. O. J. Wood, but the recent change of ingredients in this article is making a demand for it in all parts of the United States, Canadas and foreign countries.

ANNOUNCEMENT
—TO—
CONSUMERS!

The great radical improvement introduced in this article has induced us to take the agency and advertise its virtues to the world. Its effects as a Restorative are what has been long sought for and wanted for many years, being more decided and satisfactory than has ever before been attained. No Druggist in the world knows its composition, and cannot make it; therefore when you call for it, "Wood's Improved," do not let any unprincipled dealer convince you that he has a Restorative or Renewer as good, or something similar, as there is none like it! Insist upon having "Wood's Improved," and take no other, for your money! It will not be long before all dealers everywhere will have it. If you should fail to find it, you can send $1.00 to us by mail for a bottle, or $5.00 for six bottles, and we will send it to you, prepaid, to any Express Station desired.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT

"What will TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT cure?" asks the sufferer from a multitude of diseases. We answer: It will remove from the system the active cause of most of the diseases that flesh is heir to. It won't mend a broken limb, nor close a bullet hole; but it may be profitably used in stomachic diseases. It will do no one any harm and may do much good. Try it, and see if it won't suit your case.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, NOV. 9, 1876.

STILL IN DOUBT.

It is hard at this writing to tell who is elected. The latest dispatches claim Hayes elected by one majority. The majority will be very small whoever gets it. In any event the Democracy has made a gallent fight, gaining heavily over four years ago. We may not win this time, but we are stronger to-day, as a party, than we have been for years. We congratulate ourselves on the fine result attained in Indiana. It shows what a power the name of Hendricks has with our people. If there is a people in this broad land of ours who want a change, it is the people of the South.

We loose a few votes in this county when compared with the October election. "Our Garrett," did not respond so well this time, and the Republicans gained a few votes. The vote was only 20 short on the last election, and more than that number of voters have changed residences since, completely refuting the charge made by the Republicans last month, that there were a hundred illegal votes polled in the October election. We are eminently satisfied at the result. The people have asked for a change, and the Democracy are upon the record for that change. We must have an honest, economical administration, and now that the election is over we still demand a reform, that something be done for the poor man as well as the rice.

TEACHER'S INSTITUTE.

The DeKalb County Teacher's Institute of 1876 assembled at 2:30 o'clock p. m., on Monday, November 6th, in Ensley's Hall, and was called to order by the County Superintendent, Jas. A. Barns, who presided during the afternoon. It was opened by a song by the members and prayer by the Rev. W. L. Sanders, another song by the Institute The Superintendent then made some remarks. Wm. H. Hoffman and Frankie Ford were chosen secretaries. The names of the members were then enrolled, after which the Superintendent conducted an exercise in Elocution. An exercise in history was then assigned, the subject "The Constitution of the United States." It was decided not to have an evening session. The Institute adjourned till Tuesday morning. There were 67 members present.

TUESDAY MORNING.

The Institute assembled in the Hall and was called to order by the Superintendent. After the roll was called, the Superintendent conducted an exercise in Elocution. There was then a recess of five minutes. After recess the Superintendent gave an explanation of the manner of electing the President and Vice President of the United States. He then assigned an exercise in History the subject, "Events of 1876," also the subject of Phylosophy, to H. A. Huffman of Arithmetic to Mrs. Thomas, and of Geography to Mrs. Zeigler. The Institute adjourned till 1:30 o'clock p. m.

AFTERNOON.

The Institute met at 1:30 o'clock p. m and was called to order by Mr. D. M. Allen, who presided. It was opened by a song. H. A. Hoffman conducted a recitation in Physiology, after which Mrs. A. E. Thomas conducted one in Arithmetic, which was followed by a recess of ten minutes. Mrs. Zeigler then conducted a recitation in Geography, after which there were some remarks as to which is the proper method of bounding states when a river flows between them. The subject Relative Pronouns, was then treated by the President, D. M. Allen, which was followed with a song by the Institute. Adjourned till 7 o'clock p. m. There were 97 members enrolled at the close of the session.

There was a social reunion of the teachers at the Hall in the evening.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

The Institute was called to order by the Superintendent, and was opened by singing, and prayer by Rev. S. B. Ward D. M. Allen then conducted a recitation in Grammer, which was followed by a recess of 10 minutes. Mr. Fertich delivered a lecture on elocution. Adjourned for noon.

AFTEROON.

The Institute convened at 1:30 and was opened with a song. B. F. Fretz delivered a lecture on penmanship, after which there was recess. Mr. Long lead the Institute in a song, after which Mr. Seiler made some very interesting remarks on teaching Geography. Recess for five minutes, followed by a discussion on the best method of teaching children to read and spell. The Institute adjourned till 7:15 o'clock p. m.— The enrollment of members was 175.

EVENING SESSION.

The Institute met and was called to order by the Superintendent. It was opened by singing. Mr. Seiler then read a very instructive paper entitled "Conflict Between Science and Religon" It was followed by a song by Mr. Peterson. Mr. Fertich then delivered a splendid lecture the subject being 'Manhood' in which he manifested all the essential qualifications of an orator of the first rank. It was followed by a song, after which Mr. Fertich explained his matrimonial "status" very wittily. Adjourned till Thursday morning.

It May Save Your Life.

There is no person living but what suffers more or less with Lung Disease, Coughs, Colds or Consumption, yet some would die rather than to pay 75 cents for a bottle of medicine that would cure them. Dr. A. Boschee's German Syrup has lately been introduced in this country from Germany, and its wonderous cures astonishes every one that try it. If you doubt what we say in print, cut this out and take it to your Druggist, F. E. Davenport, and get a sample bottle for 10 cents and try it, or a regular size for 75 cents.

Liquor License.

Notice is hereby given to the citizens of Jackson township, in DeKalb County, Indiana, that the undersigned a male inhabitant of said township, that he will make application at the next session of the Board of Commissioners of said county, to be holden on the first monday of December 1876, for license to retail intoxicating liquors in a less quantity than a quart at a time with the privilege of having the same drank on his premises, to-wit: In the building now situated in Section six [6] in said township on land bounded on the North by the township line, on the West by the right of way of the Ft. Wayne, Jackson & Saginaw Railroad Company, on the South by the right of way of the Baltimore, Pittsburg & Chicago Railroad Company, and on the East by the right of way of the Detroit Eel River & Illinois Railroad Company containing seven tenths of an acre of land.

Mrs. Rainier has been sick for several weeks.

Hurah for Tilden, hurah for Hayes, was the cry yesterday.

Repair is very much needed on some of our sidewalks.

Houser has received a new sign "Books" in front of his store.

Mr. C. C. Shaffer has been "under the weather" for a few weeks past.

There was just rain enough Tuesday "to wash away their sins."

The brick work on the new Presbyterian church is completed.

Go and hear Prof. Fertich to-morrow night, in his thriling recitations.

A new barn has been erected on the Raut property, on Cedar street.

Ain't it about time for a donation party. Somebody make the motion.

Lafe Miller and J. Brumback, of Corunna, were in town on Monday.

Lyman Jackman has a clerkship in the dry goods store of S. W. Ralston.

Tom. Scott is now clerking for Chas. Klotz in the place of E. Kuhlman.

Things were quiet on election day, and a good vote was reported polled.

Did you pay your last installment of taxes Monday. That was the last day of grace.

Next week, if it keeps on getting colder, the boys can run off from school and go skating.

Brother Weamer has a new job press. We are glad of it as he was in great need of one.

Our schools have had vacation and our sidewalks are crowded with the noisy juvenile.

The weather turned cold on Monday night and Tuesday was a "shivering time" at the poles.

Take down them "rebel claims" that hang on the walls of our postoffice, and "get behind us satan."

Billy Edgington is making the barber business "git lively." He is said to be the champion hair-cutter.

Alph Carter did'nt vote on Tuesday. He said he was going to vote the People's ticket the next day.

The firm of Casebeer & Co., have changed, somewhat. Other parties buying the Casebeer interest.

We learn that Miss Nettie Shaw will leave to-day for her home in Bucyrus; Ohio. Tommy, don't go.

HURRAH! FOR Hayes.

That's what you hear some of the boys get off when they are dreaming.

Lew. Stevens, brother of Tom. of this city, will locate among us in a short time. The more the merrier.

L. Roth has sold his stock of clothing to Kahn & Co., and it is all in the one store, next to Lordier's shoe store.

The Institute was largely attended even the first day, Monday. It is a very pleasant gathering for the teachers.

Jos. Beugnot has abandoned the lunch table, which he had in connection with his saloon.

"I've drank my last glass, boys," a splendid recitation by Prof. Fertich, at Ensley Hall to-morrow night.

"Nothing to wear," a tale of the times, will be rendered by Prof. Fertich, at Ensley Hall to-morrow night.

M. Bowland, the new Recorder, took his "posish" last Monday. Mr. Hoffman will remain in the office for a while.

We never saw a more quiet election than that of last Tuesday. There was a cordial good feeling between both parties.

Mike Long has just returned from Steuben and Noble counties, where he has been displaying some of his celebrated organs.

Our German friend, Mr. Reesh, had the bad luck to have his team ran-a-way on Tuesday. He received several painful bruises.

Our saloon men are applying for new license. This is the last week for applications. The Commissioners meet in three weeks.

The Constable knocked off a fine span of horses, wagon and harness to L. Bowers, last Saturday for $165. It was a cheap rig.

Robt Zacher, the champion grocer, will appear next week in a new advertisement. Keep your eye peeled and read his prices.

There was a mistake in one name on the Republican ticket, and it made 'em scamper around pretty lively to get them out "kirect."

Balmoral Stockings are in fashion again, so the boys say. Your wife will be asking for a pair for a christmas gift if that's the case.

Alph. Carter is getting one of his billiard tables made into a fifteen ball pool table. This saloon is always up with all of 'em.

Don't fail to attend the lecture "Backbone" to be given by Rev. Sanders, before the Teacher's Institute to-night. It is said to be immense.

The roads are getting in a bad condition for hauling and traveling. Wood will begin to sell for two dollars an arm-ful in a few days.

There are almost two thousand four hundred banks in existence, and if they won't discount your paper at one you can pass on down the line.

Bets on the Presidential election last Tuesday were plenty and quite large in amounts. Those who lost on Harrison bet heavily so as to get even.

Mr. John Reesh was thrown out of a wagon on election day, by the horses taking fright and upsetting the vehicle. He was badly bruised.

A good many votes were challenged on Tuesday. The Republican leaders seemed to lack energy, and had but little, if any hope, of victory.

A lively fight took place yesterday between several parties, which lasted about twenty minutes. The proper authorities put a stop to it.

The lecture given before the institute last evening is highly spoken of by those who were present. The lecture for to-night is entitled "Backbone."

Johnny Knoder has erected a handsome sign in front of his blacksmith shop, in the shape of a horse, the handwork of himself. It looks tip-top.

Each township had from five hundred to one thousand tickets last Tuesday. Wonder what the Garrett News will think of to squeal about this time.

The little buildings on Fluke's and Hebel's corners are to be moved to the upper end of town. That's too bad, as it will give promiaence to Mr. Fluke's residence on that corner.

Mr. Dennis Lanham had one of his horses died last week. We are sorry he met with this misfortune as money is scarce and crops were light this Centennial year.

What's the use of making the saloons close on election day. If we didn't see a fellow call for a quart and said he wanted it for election, you can call us a Hayes man.

Enos Kuhlman has gone in partnership with J. C. Jackson, of Sedan, in the spectacle and jewelry business. En. will do well, being a good business man, and always steady to his labor.

How many shellbarks have you for winter use? A copy of THE COURIER to read, with plenty of hickory nuts to crack and eat, should serve to make many of the long winter evenings pass pleasantly.

With this issue of THE COURIER we close the protracted campaign of the Centennial year. Henceforth the quantity of political matter will be considerably less than during the past eight months.

A goodly number of our young hopefuls are spending this week in the city having their knowledge measured by degrees. We hope they may all stand the examination.

Walter Peterson has now a full outfit for the performance of Queen Esther, and will visit several places during the winter and place the piece upon the stage.

James Hazzard, Sime Snyder and H. H. Stamets gave the show twenty-five dollars for Saturday night. The troupe would have left had it not been for this arrangement. We hope the boys came out level.

A man living near this city did'nt know until Tuesday that if a wagon load of lime got wet the wagon would't sell for ten cents on the dollar. We live to learn.

The Methodist people are preparing for their celebrated game supper. Our citizens should all turn out and enjoy a night of pleasure and get a square meal once in their life.

The old building in the rear of Zacher's grocery has been pulled down. For a long time it has been an eye-sore to the public and we are like a large number of others, glad its gone.

Several of our citizens inform us that they saw the COURIER on file at the Centennial. That's nothing. You can find it at any station between the North and South pole.

The cold weather of 1875, the doctors said, gave nearly everybody seeds of consumption; the hot summer of 1876 has left the air full of malaria and fever so it is declared. It is a wonder how we exist at all.

Happiness comes and goes like the flowers of spring, and a boy no sooner finds out where the preserve jar is hidden than his mother totes it away to another corner.

The Catholic social will be entertained by Mrs. Wm. McIntyre, next Tuesday afternoon and evening. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

MISS LILLIE MCTIGHE, Sect.

In an argument on Tuesday regarding the "rebel claims," Mr. Pile and another young fellow came near coming together. If Mr. P. had ever hit him one it would have been a hard job to find the fellow's nose.

The Town Board have made an ordinance to have the sidewalks on Main street all on one grade. Its a splendid idea. Many a fellow has bit his tongue on a dark night by stepping off of one of those high walks.

Wendell Philips told the women of Boston that seven out of eight husbands were frauds and liars, but he did'nt say which term applied to himself. Rise up, Wendell.

Some of the experiences of a country editor are indicated by this item in a Lancaster (Ky.) paper: "We are indebted to Master George Bradly for a drum-solo serenade, and to Master Hugh Grant for a tomato curiosity."

There was several scratched tickets at this precinct. One had the name of Tilden erased, another that of Buchanan an elector. In the last, the voter was determined not to vote for Buchanan again.

V. A. Beard and G. W. Gorden made a bet on the election. The former bet on Tilden, the latter on Hayes. The one that looses is to haul the other around the public square in a wheelbarrow.

They say that Charles Sumner left behind him some of the most wretched daubs called paintings, for which he paid high prices. One can't carry the country on his back and be an art critic too.

ESTRAYED—Two cows, one a dark brown, line back, six years old. The other a red and white, five years old.—A liberal reward will be given for any information concerning them.

A. WHEELOCK,

A Dublin newspaper once severely attacked O'Connell. The great Liberator, in a speech, was denouncing the newspaper when one of his audience interrupted with a cry, "We'll burn the paper!" "You fool," said O'Connell "to burn it, you should first buy it."

A number of hogs have died to grunt no more, in this vicinity, from the cholera, during the last two weeks. Copperas and sulphur, applied in good season, have proved very efficacious in arresting the spead of the disease. It won't hurt to try it.

A. O. Miller's popular Dramatic Company will visit our city in a few weeks and will put upon the stage some very fine and instructive plays. Save your quarters, boys, and don't let you dulcinas miss this splendid treat, of seeing one of the best shows that travel.

Billy Burlingame has closed his engagement with Mr. Parent's livery barn and, we learn, will engage in the same business with Cook Ford, in Ohio. Bill is a capital good fellow and understands a horse perfectly. He has many friends who will miss him.

The performance given in Ensley's Hall last week, by the Vanduville Company was very slimly attended, no doubt on account of the super-abundance of cheek displayed by the male portion of the concern during the day before the performance. If their brass could be converted into steam, one of them could sit on the court house step and run a saw mill in Europe

Our friend Baxter of the Press said the other day as a matter of consolation over the late elections, that he lived in a Republican township. The last election developes the startling fact, that Union township has a republican majority of one! Happy Baxter.

The other morning when the boys of the Fruit House opened up they did'nt look around long until one of them thought "that's where the hen scratches" About a dozen chickens had broken out of a box and were looking over a variety of articles setting about the room.

Edward Stokes, the murderer of James Fisk, Jun, was liberated from Auburn Prison on Saturday last. He will remain in New York a short time and then proceed to Europe, where he will remain some time. It is said he wore a diamond pin when he walked out, 'Kinder tonny, Jim.

The delightful fall weather we have been enjoying of late has enabled the sturdy sons of toil to do their work with scarcely any interruption. Corn is being rapidly cribbed, and other farm work proggressing very satisfactorily. And now the weary, hardworking tiller of the soil is at rest.

With this issue we bid farewell to the campaign of 1876, and although our task has been long and tiresome, we would willingly keep on could we do anything for reform, the laboring man, the mechanic and the laboring man. Our patience, in this repect, are equal to Job's but we are left to do nothing more until another campaign dawns upon us.

Frank Benedict shelled out the cigars last Saturday night on the opening of his new restaurant. The Auburn Silver Cornet Band dished up several splendid peices which went to make the occasion more lively and more pleasant Frank and his partner has a neat and tastely establishment.

Our sprightly, versatile fellow citizen Rev. W. Langdon Sanders, will give his splendid lecture on "Backbone" to night, and it will come quite apropos as some of these election fellows are weakening. We want to see a rousing crowd as Mr. S. will certainly please you.

The great political strife is over, the election has passed, and the people will again settle down contentedly, as becomes an American citizen, and submit to whatever party has triumphed. This Americanism is surely a happy faculty, and sets an example worthy to be followed in many other ways. Our people are proverbially law abiding, and those who are contented under the powers that be have the least burden to bare.

The following persons from this city have attended the Centennial as near as we can learn:

Mr. & Mrs. J. L. Davis, Mr. & Mrs. J. E. Rose, Mr. & Mrs. F. E. Davenport, Mr. & Mrs. A. C. Dawson, Mr. & Mrs. G. Plum, Mr. & Mrs. H. H. Stamets, Mrs. Hartman, J. V. Hazzard, D. D. Snyder, G. C. Ralston, T. J. Cuppy, A. J. Ralston, S. W. Ralston, O. Shaffer, O Cool and your humble servant and better half.

The Cincinnati Commercial says A farmer near Arkron, who disliked to live in vain, mortgaged his farm last year, bought a balloon, and in due time heard something collapse at the height of a mile. Luckily the balloon formed a parachute, and he landed in a plowed field, badly bumped, but not pulverized. Properly enough he added Professor to his name, and now he has a second mortgage on his farm and a new balloon, you can't keep a man like that down.

School-teachers who have, no doubt sometimes inscribed on the blackboard, the mysterious characters, M. Y. O. B., and interpreted them as Mind Your Own Business, should profit by that advice themselves, in whatever calling they should afterwards engage. Its vacation now and we have a right to say what we please. You can't keep us in after school, nor make us go down foot, either.

A rare case of forgetfulness happened in the clerk's office the other day. A young fellow applied for a marriage license and couldn't for the life of him remember his girl's name. But the clerk was equal to the occasion, and after looking over the census report half an hour or so, the much desired name was found, and the young candidate for bliss was sent on his way rejoicing. And now if he don't forget to cut off his corns and take off his hickory shirt, he'll come out "all hunky-a-dora."

Parents should know where their children are at night. Everytime there is any performance going on at the town Hall several of them congregate in the stair-way and keep up a continual uproar during the entire performance.—Parents had better give them a quarter and let them see "the elephant" than have their "outside show" disgust the public. If we would have performed such tricks when a boy, our old man would have put in an appearance, and on our way home we would touch the sidewalk about once every square.

The winter term of school will soon begin, the new edifice being nearly completed, and then the modern school girl goes along with a bustle, striped hose, carrying about thirty-one different books three slates, four copy books, bottle of ink, pocket full of pencils and pens, seven dollar's worth of pinchbeck jewelry, a mouth full of chewing gum, and thirteen red streamers dangling after her and a little brother with her dinner basket.

The passenger train, bound eastward on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad ran off the track at Cromwell Station, last Saturday evening. Some fellow, full of pure cussedness, had placed an old tie upon the track, undoubtly with the intention of throwing the train. He was very considerate, however, in his undertaking, and laid the tie just a short distance from the Station, so that the train would reach the place before it was under much headway. Had the train been under good motion, "good bye Susan Jane," but was fortunately just starting It was delayed several hours.

Joes. E. Beugnot and Miss Annie Turner were married last Thursday afternoon. The parents of the girl was opposed to the marriage, on account of Joe. being a saloon keeper, but their love was fixed firm and true, and Joe. drove to the house and got his lady. They went to Waterloo and were married in the carriage, returning immediately after the ceremony. On Saturday evening last the newly married couple gave a reception at their residence in the north end of town. Guests from Ft Wayne and other places were present, and a very enjoyable time was had. We wish them success.

A large, funny looking German of about two hundred, was leaning against the little building of Fluke's Corner, yesterday, and from all appearances he was "pretty chucky." A middle aged lady came walking along and spying the old fellow she stepped in front of him and commenced arranging her hair.

"What are you doing here," asked the old man.

"I want to see that my hat is on al right," she said smiling at the fellow in a kind way.

"Well, I'd like to know where you are looking, madam, to see your hat, I ain't no lookin'-glass."

"I know that, but I can get reflection enough from your nose, sir.

We are glad to record the fact that we have a first-class Restaurant in all its appointments. Mr. Benedict, who has recently erected a handsome building for this purpose, may well congratulate himself on his achievements. The first story is most admirably arranged, the front part being occupied with a fine display of confections &c, the second elegantly furnished as a Restaurant, and the rear with an excellent kitchen, in which a colored Chef de cuisine, (that's a French term for a first-class cook,) holds full sway. A nice hall is furnished above where social parties dances, and other amusements can be enjoyed, is another great attraction. Some say this too high-toned for Auburn, but we believe Mr. B. has made a good investment, and the new enterprise deserves the hearty patronage of the people.

A Republican Dream.

A fellow on Jackson Street had a political dream the other night. He imagined many curious things; the reason of which was, we surmise, that he played "Nigger pool" late that night. He woke immediately after the dream, and giving his wife one in the ribs with his thumb, said:

"Come, old woman, get up and make the fire!"

"What's that mean?" asked the astonished wife.

"Don't ask any questions, git up, I tell you git"

"Not as anybody knows of. Ain't you sober yet?"

"I have'nt been drunk, and you know it, too,

"Well, what makes you talk so foolish. Telling me to get up and make the fire when you know blasted well I would lay here 'till noon before I'd do it."

"Now, look here Margret. Last night I staid up to hear the result, and Hayes is elected. Now, Marg I voted the Republican ticket, and did'nt that party promise us fellers better times?"

"Yes, I believe they did."

"Well, then, don't be so be so muleish Get up and make that fire. My fire making is done with for the next four years, I tell you."

"And if it had'nt been for the neghbors interfering his wife would have taken all the Hayesism out of him he could muster up from the time he gets around again until the next Centennial comes.

DRAMATIC ENTERTAINMENT.

Prof. W. H. Fertich, author of Fertich's Elocution, will give an amusing and instructive entertainment at Ensley Hall to-morrow, Friday evening. This will close the session of the Teacher's Institue now being held here. The Prof is the great elocutionist of the west, and his thrilling recitations never fail to please. He is thorough, practical and true to life, and his entertainments have always been successful. His humorous representations bring forth rounds of applause, and are very enjoyable. We hope he will be greeted with a large audience. Admission 25 cents, children 15 cents.

Pay Your Bills.

Times are excessively dull, and the collection of money is a task of the most difficult character. It is during stringent periods like the present that it especially behooves all who have the ability, to pay their small bills, and especially when they are due to people of moderate means. Not to do this is a natural breach of honesty, and is certainly a positive cruelty.

Pay your small debts the moment you have the money, and thereby not only get the approval of your own conscience but the good will and blessing of those whom you thus favor. And while you are going 'round settling up, don't forget you owe a little at THE COURIER office.

There are persons who will never pay a debt as long as it is possible to avoid it although possessed of means in abundance to discharge the obligation.

Their balance in bank may be large, and they could spare it without the slightest inconvenience, but their is a magnetism about money that binds their very souls to it, and which frequently nothing but the mandates of the law can server. Legally such people are honest, morally they have no claim to title.'

AUBURN COURIER.

THURSDAY, NONEMBER 9, 1876.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

A serious accident occurred a few days ago on the New Jersey Midland railroad. A freight train fell through the trestle and bridge-work at Hawthorn, N. J., the engine and tender landing end-foremost upon the Erie track, and the cars tumbling in a pile upon them. The engineer, the fireman, and three brakemen were fatally injured, and the conductor had both legs broken.

The entire Board of Excise of New York city was arrested last week on the complaint of a liquor-dealer, who charges them with a violation of the Excise law, in granting licenses for sale of spirituous liquors to the proprietors of eating-houses.... At St. Johnsbury, Vt., a few mornings since, Frank Johnson, Charles Putney and Joseph Heon were excavating for a paper-mill, and placed some rend-rock powder to dry under a stove in the basement. While they were at work on the first floor, the explosive ignited, blew the building (twenty feet square) into kindling-wood, and hurled the men skyward. Heon was denuded of his clothing, and filled with splinters, and may die. Johnson and Putney will recover.

An infernal machine of some kind, inclosed in a flimsy Saratoga trunk, exploded in the baggage-car of an express train from Philadelphia to New York, over the Pennsylvania road, last week. The trunk was fortunately on the top of a pile of baggage, and no damage was done, beyond scattering the trunks and prostrating the baggage men. The car was set on fire, but soon extinguished. Parts of the machine were found in the wreck, consisting of a small pistol and fragments of clock-work. The pistol was discharged into some inflammable substance that was entirely consumed.... Edward S. Stokes, who was convicted of shooting James Fisk, Jr., was released, on the 28th ult., from the Auburn prison, his term of sentence having expired.

A train from Scranton, Pa., consisting of seventeen cars, was run into by a coal train a mile and a half north of the Goldsboro station, on the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western railroad, a few evenings since. One car was burned and two telescoped. Nine persons were killed and twenty-six wounded.

The recent collision on the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western railway, in Pennsylvania, turns out to have been a more serious affair than first reports indicated. The casualties number nine passengers killed and twenty-six seriously injured, some of whom, it is feared, cannot recover. As usual, the accident was the result of carelessness, a coal train running into the passenger train.... The amount of grain in sight in the United States and Canada, on the 28th ult., was 10,440,056 bushels of wheat, 10,008,858 bushels of corn, 3,257,085 bushels of oats, 869,544 bushels of rye, and 3,243,245 bushels of barley.

A Philadelphia telegram says the Centennial Board of Finance have resolved to offer at public auction, on the 30th of November, all the buildings erected from their funds. The structures to come under the hammer are the Main building and its annexes, Carriage building, the annexes of Machinery hall, Shoe and Leather building, Photograph annex, Art annex, Judges' hall, Agricultural hall, Butter and Cheese building, Pomological hall, Wagon building, barracks and mess houses of the guards and firemen, and others of less note.

THE WEST.

A "well-informed business" man is quoted at Milwaukee as estimating that the yield of wheat in Minnesota this year has not exceeded 15,000,000 bushels, and that the quantity for export will not exceed 11,000,000 bushels. In Iowa, he says, there will not be a bushel for export, the farmers having no more than they need for home use and for seed....A Fort Randall telegram reports: "A duel between two Indians occurred at Standing Rock Agency. One of them was killed. Four shots each were exchanged, two of them taking effect, one in the breast, the other in the head. Henry rifles were the chosen weapons. It was a regular white-man's duel. They quarreled over beef issues.'

Parties engaged in digging a grave n the graveyard at Bloomingsburg, Fulton county, Ind., a few days since, unearthed the remains of a man that had recently been buried in an upright position, without coffin or box. The body was put in a box and decently interred. No person could recognize the body, and by whom it was put there is a mystery.

Chicago elevators, as per official figures, contain 2,295,460 bushels of wheat; 1,943,532 bushels of corn; 634,356 bushels of oats; 194,438 bushels of rye, and 916,181 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 5,983,967 bushels, against 3,755,414 bushels at this period last year.... A false alarm of "fire" created a panic in a Chinese theater in San Francisco, a few nights ago. The building was crowded, and a rush was made for the single means of exit, and many were trampled down in the confusion. The police dragged out twenty dead bodies and about the same number of wounded. The Chinese refused to render any assistance, and the performers continued playing until stopped by the police.... Sitting Bull has been heard from again, this time as an applicant for peace and provisions at Fort Peck. The secret of this magnanimous willingness to be forgiven and fed is found in the fact that S. B. has recently received a severe drubbing at the hands of Col. Miles' command, who overtook the hostiles at Cedar creek on the 21st of October, and for two days fought and chased them sixty miles in the direction of Fort Peck. There the Indians separated into two parties, and the next heard of Sitting Bull was a message that he was "coming in."

From late San Francisco papers we glean some additional particulars of the recent terrible calamity at a Chinese theater in that city, brief mention of which has been made heretofore. It appears that the disaster was occasioned by the matting catching fire from a Chinaman's cigarette. A cry of fire was immediately raised. It was benefit night, and the gallery and auditorium were crowded to their utmost capacity with fully 2,000 men. Those in the lower and upper circles rushed for the door. The crowd surging from the auditorium broke the door down, while an immense mass from the gallery broke down the stair-case and precipitated themselves on the heads below. The large, heavy double doors, twelve by six feet, were wrested off their hinges, and twenty-five or thirty men from above fell upon them and crushed a large number beneath. It was impossible to extricate them, and they were trampled and mangled by the panic-stricken crowd. Nineteen were killed and twenty-seven wounded. In the meantime the fire had been subdued, and the actors continued the performance, which allayed the panic, doubtless preventing many others from destruction. The calamity occurred at midnight. Policemen just going on their beats were attracted by the yells and moans of the wounded and dying. The news spread all over Chinatown, and in a few minutes there was a perfect babel of confusion. The dead and wounded, horribly mangled, and blood oozing from their mouths, eyes and noses, were ranged on the sidewalk, while the shrieks of men and women mingled with their agonizing groans.... The report of James H. Smart, Superintendent of Public Instruction for Indiana for the year 1876, shows that the common school fund of the State of Indiana amounts to $6,428,771.04; Congressional fund, $2,442,189; total fund, $8,870,871.08; increase during the year, $71,080.29. There are 9,244 acres of Congressional school lands still unsold in the State.

THE SOUTH.

A dispatch from Little Rock, Ark., says that three Methodist ministers, while riding a circuit in Pope county, were shot from the brush by two illicit distillers named Hughes and Hale. It is believed they mistook the ministers for revenue officers and Marshals coming to arrest them. One of the ministers was mortally wounded, and died two hours after being shot. The other two were seriously, if not mortally, wounded.

In Perrytown, Miss., one night last week, a Mr. Sturdivant, his wife, and three children were murdered in their beds, and the house burned to conceal the deed. Two negroes who planned and executed this crime were captured, one hung and the other shot in attempting to escape. Two confederates are still at large, but can hardly escape arrest. Many colored citizens assisted in the capture, and were with difficulty prevented from throwing the prisoners into the burning embers.

William Hawthorne, of Hagerstown, Md. aged 72 years, was killed the other day at that place by his son-in-law, Thomas Stevens. The latter was quarreling with his wife, and while attempting to eject him from his house Hawthorne received fatal wounds.

WASHINGTON.

George William Birney and his son, Arthur B., have been appointed Attorney and Assistant Attorney for the District of Columbia.

The number of postal-cards issued during the month of October was 23,116,000, being an increase of 2,977,500, or nearly 15 per cent., over issues of October of last year. This is the largest issue of cards occurring in any one month since the introduction of cards some three years ago.

President Grant, says a Washington correspondent, has been shaking hands with an average of 2,000 Centennial visitors daily until his right shoulder is very nearly out of joint. He has given up, and now refuses to see anybody but official visitors. The vandals who climb all over the White House, and who have to be watched to prevent them from gouging the furniture for relics complain excitedly over this seclusion.

The public debt statement of the United States Treasurer shows a reduction of $3,388,139 during the month of October. Appended are the official figures:

GENERAL.

A dispatch from Annapolis, Md., says that "Cadet Midshipman R. R. Cockle, of Illinois, a third-class man, who refused to testify in the investigation of the case of the 'hazers,' has been dismissed from the Naval Academy. This is the ninth cadet who has been dismissed for the same offense within less than two weeks. Cadets inside, who witnessed the 'hazing,' are just as stubborn as ever not to testify. The whole third class, it still appears, will have to be dismissed."

Charles Madison, who left New York, July 8, to cross the ocean in a dory, has probably been lost. When two days out he had his main boom broken, and on July 16 he boarded the British schooner Tempest, where he remained about ten minutes, and later on he boarded the ship Beethoven, and provisioned his little craft for the continuation of his voyage, since which time nothing has been heard from him.

The population of Buffalo, N. Y., as taken by the police authorities and just reported, is 143,594, being 25,889 increase in six years, and 9,021 more than the State census taken last year. The work was done by 120 policemen in two days, and the compilation in two days more, at a cost of $86. The number of buildings is 23,580.... A Philadelphia telegram of the 1st inst. says: "The total cash admissions to the Centennial during the past week were 566,023. The cash receipts for the week were $232,054. The Exhibition has been open 164 days, and during that time the total number of cash admissions has been 6,924,463, and the receipts in cash have been $3,279,483.25. The total number of admissions, cash and free, has been 8,453,923. It is considered certain that the financial success of the Exhibition will be such as to admit of the payment of at least 75 per cent. on the stock subscribed."

The returns of the National Agricultural Department for October indicate a reduction in the yield of the wheat crop of nearly one-sixth, while the quality is somewhat superior. Every section of the Union indicates a reduced product, except the Middle States, which increased about 2 per cent. The New England States fell off 4 per cent., the South Atlantic States 2 per cent., the Gulf States 27 per cent., the Southern Inland States 8 per cent., the States north of the Ohio river 14 per cent., the States west of the Mississippi river 27 per cent., the Pacific States nearly 2 per cent. These figures point to a yield of about 245,000,000 bushels. The rye crop of 1876 is reported 4 per cent. less than that of 1875, but in quality it averages somewhat above its predecessor. The cot crop of 1876 shows a falling off of 27 per cent. compared with its predecessor. Every section of the Union is deficient. Buckwheat is fully an average. The barley crop is 9 per cent. less than the average.

FOREIGN.

A London telegram announces the return of the British Arctic expedition, under Capt. Nares, comprising the steamers Alert and Discovery. Their progress to the North Pole was found to be impracticable. Capt. Nares reports that no land could be discovered to the northward of the highest latitude reached, namely, 83 degrees, 20 minutes, but in other respects the expedition was successful.... A severe cyclone recently passed over the Central American States. The town of Managua, in Nicaragua, was inundated. About 400 houses were blown down. The inhabitants had to climb on the top of their houses to prevent being washed away by the flood. Many were drowned by the houses falling. The total damage is estimated at about $2,000,000. The town of Blanfield, on the Mosquito coast, in Nicaragua, also experienced the hurricane. Over 300 houses were blown down. The same storm passed over the lake of Nicaragua, causing an immense amount of damage. The Commodore Adams, a lake steamer, was lost. The loss on the coffee crops is estimated at $3,000,000. About twenty lives were lost. The whole district is completely flooded.... A telegram from Vienna reports that Prince Auersperg, President of the Austrian Council, replying in the Reichrath to the interpellations on the Eastern question, declared that Austria's policy was, above everything, to maintain peace. Consequently any aspiration toward the acquisition of foreign territory was out of the question.

Advices from Kingston, Jamaica, report the severest hurricane ever experienced, at Grand Cayman island, lasting three days. One hundred and seventy houses and a large number of fruit trees were destroyed. A portion of the island was submerged and a number of cattle were washed away.

A severe engagement was fought between the Turks and Servians on Sunday, Oct. 29. The Turks attacked the heights of Djunis. The Servian artillery, irritated at Gen. Tchernayeff's deprecatory manner, refused to fight, and abandoned their positions despite the efforts of the Russian officers. A body of Russian volunteers defended the heights desperately, half of their number being killed. The Turks carried their positions, cutting the Servian army in two. After the fall of Djunis, Gen. Tchernayeff with his staff and part of the army retreated to Ragan.

The Pope, having desired to divide the Archbishopric of Lyons (France) into two dioceses without the assent of the French Government, the latter has issued a decree forbidding such a division.... A dispatch from Halifax, N. S., reports that an American schooner, with all hands, was recently lost on the west end of Sable island. Five bodies had washed ashore.

There is trouble in the Nova Scotia Government, and the resignation of a prominent member is anticipated. The difficulty is of a personal nature.... Slade, the American Spiritualistic humbug, who was arrested in London a short time ago, has been sentenced to three months' imprisonment at hard labor.... Advices from the interior of Cuba describe the effects of the late hurricane as very disastrous. The sugar crop, which promised to be exceptionally abundant, will be much reduced.... A dispatch from Belgrade says an order has been read in the streets throughout the day calling on all able-bodied men to report themselves for immediate service. The Turks lack transportation, and can therefore advance but slowly.

The great maritime canal connecting Amsterdam with the German ocean was opened on the 1st inst. with imposing ceremonies, at which the King, members of the Cabinet, and foreign representatives were present. The canal is sixteen miles long, and has at the sea end a harbor covering 250 acres.

Official dispatches both from St. Petersburg and Belgrade, the Servian capital, announce that the Porte has finally complied with the demand of Russia for an armistice, and that a two months' truce has been agreed upon, commencing Nov. 1. The opposing armies are to retain the positions which they now hold.

A SOUTHERN CYCLONE.

All the Inhabitants of a Small Island Swept Away by the Waves—Extraordinary Sufferings of the Crew of a United States Steamer.

A letter from Key West, giving the experiences of the United States steamer Ossipee in the storm of the 19th and 20th of October, says: "The men, in getting about the decks to attend to their duties, were thrown violently from their feet and blinded by the salt spray, and were obliged to go groping about as if they were in total darkness. They could only stick to their stations by the most desperate struggling against the hatches, grating, doors, deck-buckets, and many other articles that were being swept back and forth across the decks by the rushing of the water as the ship rolled and tossed. Breathing was difficult, and the air taken into the lungs was so loaded with sea salts that it caused excessive irritation, producing violent coughing and vomiting. The suffering of the men was most intense, especially among the firemen and coalheavers, who were not only deprived of ventilation, but obliged to inhale the salt-water steam produced by the sea rushing into the fire-room. It was then thought advisable to encourage the men by the use of stimulants. The surgeon found a sufficient quantity to give all hands a "tot" each, and sent it to the cabin to be distributed. The effect of the storm on the animals on board was peculiar. The cats disappeared the morning before the storm, and were not seen for five days afterward. The dog Daniel, a splendid pointer, owned by the Captain, exhibited the greatest dread at being left alone, and was only appeased when some one was petting him. The hens and turkeys, usually the most hungry and voracious and quarrelsome beasts on board, forgot their hunger, and barely opened their eyes when food was thrown to them. Two birds, bobos, a species of pelican, came on board while we were lying in the vortex. They must have been drawn down while attempting to fly over us. The parrot was the only thing on board that seemed at all to enjoy the surroundings.

The storm commenced on the 19th, and lasted twenty-six hours, and was intensely violent. The seas made clean sweeps over the vessel, and the sailors suffered severely. She lost her fore and main-top-gallant-mast, and much personal property was destroyed.

The storm came up over Cuba, and passed over Key West, leaving a track of desolation in its rear. Much property was destroyed, and several lives were lost.

The island of Kaya Sarga was flooded, and its entire population swept away. There were about 400 people there.

One vessel was capsized in Key West harbor, and all hands drowned.

The storm is pronounced the severest that has visited Key West since 1845.

Mental Differences Between Man and Woman.

Sir George Campbell, M. P., who presided over the section of Economic Science and Statistics of the British Association, touched in his opening address upon a great variety of topics, and among others gave his views as to the difference between the mental qualities of men and women. He said: "As regards the education and employment of women, is not there great room for scientific inquiry on the question how far the mind of woman differs from that of man? Is there not, in fact, a very considerable mental difference between man and woman, just as there is a considerable bodily difference? Is not woman, to some extent, at least, a different creature from man, so that we may in some sort predicate that under certain conditions a man will act in one way and a woman will act in another way, in the same manner (though not in the same degree) as we can predicate that a dog will act in one way and a cat in another? To some degree I am inclined to think that there is some natural difference, and that this difference must be taken into account in determining the treatment, the employment, and the functions of women. It is because I thoroughly sympathize with the desire of so many women of the middle classes to find useful and honorable employment for themselves that I think scientific inquiry into the economic capacities of the creature woman most necessary. If we can once solve that part of the problem, the rest will be comparatively easy. I feel sure that there are many functions, whether they depend on nimbleness of finger, sympathy of heart, or quickness of intellect, for which women are especially fitted, while there are others for which their nature is less fitted, and in respect of which they will do well to avoid an unequal rivalry with man."

A NEW INVENTION.

The "Automatic Welcome"—A Useful Mechanical Appliance that no Newspaper Office Should be Without.

[From the Burlington Hawk-Eye.]

The Hawk-Eye has just got into its new editorial rooms, and it is proud to say that it has the finest, most comfortable, complete and convenient editorial rooms in America. They are finished off with a little invention which will be of untold value to the profession of journalism when it is generally adopted, and we know that it will rapidly come into universal use as soon as its merits are understood and appreciated. We believe it is fully equal, in all that the term implies, to the famous Bogardess Kicker, less liable to get out of order, and less easily detected by casual visitors. It is known as "Middlecrib's Automatic Welcome." The sanctum is on the same floor as the news-room, being separated from it by a partition, in which is cut a large window, easily opened by an automatic arrangement. The editor's table is placed in front of that window and near the head of the stairs, and on the side of the table next the window, directly opposite the editor, the visitor's chair is placed. It has an inviting look about it, and its entire appearance is guileless and commonplace. But the strip of floor on which the chair rests is a deception and a fraud. It is an endless chain, like the floor of a horse-power, and is operated at will by the editor, who has merely to touch a spring in the floor to set it in motion. Its operation can best be understood by personal inspection.

Yesterday morning, about 10 o'clock, Mr. Bostwick came in with a funny story to tell. He naturally flopped down in the chair that had the strongest appearance of belonging to some one else, and began in his usual happy vein: "I've got the richest thing—oh! ha, ha, ha!—the best thing—oh! by George! I can't—oh! ha, ha, ha! Oh! it's too good! Oh! by George, the richest thing! Oh! it's too loud! You must never tell where you got—oh, by George! I can't do it! It's too good! You know—oh, ha, ha, ha, oh, he, he, he! You know the—oh, by George, I ca——" Here the editor touched the spring, a nail-grab under the bottom of the chair reached swiftly up and caught Mr. Bostwick by the cushion of his pants, the window flew up, and the noiseless belt of floor gliding on its course bore the astonished Mr. Bostwick through the window out into the news-room, half way down to the cases, where he was received with great applause by the delighted compositors. The window had slammed down as soon as he passed through, and when the editorial foot was withdrawn from the spring and the chair dropped and the nail-grab resumed its accustomed place, young Mr. Bostwick found himself so kind of out of the sanctum, like it might be, that he went slowly and dejectedly down the stairs, as it were, while amazement sat upon his brow, like.

The next casual visitor was Mr. J. Alexis Flaxeter, the critic. He had a copy of the Hawk-Eye in his hand, with all the typographical errors marked in red ink, and his face was so wreathed in smiles that it was impossible to tell where his mouth ended and his eyes began. He took the vacant chair and spread the paper out before him, covering up the editor's manuscript. "My keen vision and delicate sense of accuracy," he said, "are the greatest crosses of my life. Things that you never see are mountains in my sight. Now here, you see, is a——" The spring clicked softly, like an echo to the impatient movement of the editor's foot, the nail-grab took hold like a bull-dog helping a Burlington troubadour over the garden fence, the chair shot back through the window like a meteor, and the window came down with a slam that sounded like a wooden giant getting off the shortest bit of profanity known to man; and all was silent again. Mr. Flaxeter sat very close to the frosted window, staring blankly at the clouded glass, seeing nothing that he could offer as any explanation of what he would have firmly believed was a land-slide, had he not heard the editor, safe in his guarded den, softly whistling, "We shall meet, but we shall miss him."

Then there was a brief interval of quiet in the sanctum, and a rustling of raiment was heard on the stairs. A lovely woman entered and stood unawed in the editorial presence. The E. P., on its part, was rather nervous and uncomfortable. The lovely woman seated herself in the fatal chair. She slapped her little grip-sack on the table and opened her little subscription book. She said: "I am soliciting cash contributions—strictly, exclusively, and peremptorily cash contributions—to pay off the church debt, and buy an organ for the Mission Church of the Forlorn Strangers, and I expect——" There are times when occasion demands great effort. The editor bowed his head, and, after one brief spasm of remorse, felt for the secret spring. The window went up like a charm; the reckless nail-grab hung back for a second, as if held by a feeling of innate delicacy, and then it shut its eyes and smothered its pity and reached up and took a death-like hold on a roll of able and influential newspapers and a net-work of string and tape, and the cavalcade backed out into the news-room with colors flying. The chair stopped just before the familiar spirit who was washing the forms, and as the lovely woman gazed at the inky face she shrieked, "Merciful heavens, where am I?" and was borne down the gloomy stairway unconscious, while the printers whose cases were nearest the wicked window heard the editor singing, as it might be to himself, "Dearest sister, thou hast left us."

Shocking Scene at a Grave.

The Scranton (Pa.) Republican says: "A shocking scene occurred at a funeral which took place in one of the suburbs of this city a few days ago. There was a large attendance, and the immediate relatives of the deceased were so overcome by sorrow that the burial was left to the care of some friends who volunteered their services in paying the last sad tribute to the dead. Numbers gathered around the grave to see the coffin lowered, but the men having charge were so intoxicated that it was clumsily done. Before the first spadeful of earth was thrown on the coffin one of the party fell into the grave and could not extricate himself. A companion, no better off than he, attempted to rescue him, but he also fell into the grave, and there both struggled in vain until some of the sober attendants, who were shocked and justly indignant at the occurrence, lifted the drunken pair out, and, pushing them aside, kept them away."

A PENNSYLVANIA TRAGEDY.

A Crazy Negro Woman Kills Her Three Small Children.

[From the Philadelphia Times.

Glen Lock is a small station on the Pennsylvania railroad, about twenty-five miles from Philadelphia. Running directly through the center of the village is a cross-road. On this road Ira Baker, a colored barber, rented a house several years ago and did a small business as a country barber. He had a wife and four small children. This morning, at a little after 8 o'clock, as Joseph W. Sarchet was driving along the cross-road he overtook Mrs. Baker near the railroad station. She hailed him and said that she had just killed all of her children. At first Mr. Sarchet paid no attention to her, but she persisted in her statement, and at length he turned around and drove up to the little whitewashed barber-shop. The door was locked, but he kicked it open. On the floor in the middle of the room lay the eldest of the children, apparently dead. Another child, about 6 years old, was leaning against a chair and bleeding from the mouth, and another was behind the stove with a severe cut in its head. A large willow club, about two and a half inches in diameter, a very heavy weapon, lay near the head of the unconscious child in the middle of the floor, and, although there was no blood on the club, knots of hair adhering to it showed plainly that it had been the instrument of death. The fourth child, a baby, was found in the second story, in a bed, where it is thought Mrs. Baker had tried to smother it. Mrs. Baker, after leaving Mr. Sarchet on the cross-road, continued her journey to West Chester, where she arrived about 10 o'clock. After searching for her for some time Constable Baker arrested her in Market street, where she had made herself conspicuous by inquiring in many places for the nearest magistrate. She was at once taken to Justice Whitehead's office and was committed to jail, and this afternoon the magistrate gave her a hearing. Mr. Sarchet was the first witness, and he told substantially the same story that is related above. Mrs. Baker, during the hearing, was in the wildest state of excitement, tearing her hair, beating her breast, and crying continually: "I did it for the best. God judges me. I wanted them to get to heaven. I did not know what to do. It was my desire to get my poor, dear children to heaven. I want to go too." She is a full-blooded negro, with high cheek-bones, ugly features, round head, perfectly black, of medium height and build, and apparently about 35 years of age. There is scarcely any doubt that she is crazy.

A Disgusted Widow.

Capt. W—— has just returned from the Warm Springs. The Captain is a widower. At the Springs was a widow who rather set her cap for the Captain. The girls told him to look out, and the Captain replied, well, he was ready.

Sitting out in the portico one evening, the cool breeze fanning like a 10-cent palm-leaf, and thinking of his daughters far away at school, the widow moved up close by and opened conversation.

"I hear, Captain, you have grown-up daughters."

"Yes, madam, I have."

"How I should like to see their pictures!"

"I will show you a picture of my eldest daughter," said the Captain, handing her one.

"Oh, such a sweet face!" said the widow; "and such a fine eye! Isn't she called like you, Captain?"

"I don't know, madam, that she is."

"It is a wonder to me, Capt. W——, you do not get married."

"Well, ma'am, I never think of it; for the woman I'd have might not have me, and then, you know, vice versa."

"Yes, but what kind of a lady would suit you?" and the widow looked her sweetest.

It was right here the Captain's wonderful nerve never forsook him, but setting his eye steadily at the widow's he hardened his heart and replied: "Madam, she must be 95 years old to a second, and worth $200,000."

"It is getting so chilly out here I must go for my shawl," said the widow; and she looked frigid zones at the Captain as she brushed him by with a toss of her head.—Raleigh Sentinel.

Women's Wages in France.

In the late sittings of the Workingmen's Congress in Paris, Madame Raoult presented a report upon the wretchedly paid labor of women. Many made chemises at 3 francs (60 cents) a dozen, half a dozen a day being the average amount completed. Other work was in proportion. The report recommends that workwomen should associate co-operatively in large establishments, where they could not only receive wages, but share the profits now accruing to employers. Until women found a way of doing this successfully no chance existed of ameliorating their condition. The workingwomen's associations of Paris were represented at the Congress by 253 delegates, and those of the provinces by ninety-five. This Congress obtained a respectful recognition by the press.

Utilizing the Bandits.

It seems that the two dead Northfield bandits have been made useful. The Ann Arbor Register says that "the two robbers who didn't escape will devote the remainder of their bodily existence to the interests of science. In other words, they will attend the medical department of the University this year, having already arrived. The people of this city need have no fears of being robbed by these reformers, as they will be closely guarded by the University authorities."

One of the curious articles in the Woman's department at Philadelphia is a shutter from the window of Mary Phillipse, the haughty damsel whom George Washington wooed in vain. Delicate flowers on a background of gold have been painted upon it, and it is now waiting for some wealthy relic-hunter to come along and claim it.

BITTEN BY A TARANTULA.

A Strong Man's Struggle with the Deadly Poison.

(From the Pueblo (Col.) Chieftain.)

Dan Sheppard, a workman on the South Pueblo water-works ditch, at the St. Charles, was bitten by a tarantula on the evening of Friday last, in such a manner as to result almost fatally. On the night in question Mr. Sheppard was sleeping in a cabin on the "Grayback ranch," near where the Rio Grande railway crosses the St. Charles. He had made his bed on the floor, and had scarcely gone to sleep when he felt something pinch his shoulder and then run across his face. He tried to catch it with his hand, but it escaped him. Severe pains beginning to shoot from the shoulder, Mr. Sheppard became convinced that he had been bitten by a tarantula. He then ran up the track to Mr. M. T. Robinson's, about three-quarters of a mile distant, in the hope of getting some whisky to use as an antidote, but unfortunately Mr. Robinson had no whisky on hand. He then returned down the track and went to the house of Mr. Neece, near where he was bitten. Sheppard is a stout, powerful man, but by this time he was nearly exhausted. The pain had passed from his shoulder down his left side, until his whole body was affected, and he was in a state of the most excruciating agony. Mr. Neece hurried to Mr. Howard's, half a mile up the St. Charles, and informed him of the occurrence. Mr. Howard immediately mounted his horse and galloped to Pueblo, eight miles distant, for a supply of whisky. In the meantime Sheppard returned to his cabin, and in a short time, from the action of the poison, he became almost insensible, and his body, head and limbs became frightfully swollen. In just two hours and a half from the time he was bitten, Mr. Howard arrived with the whisky. The poisoned man was now in a very critical condition, unable to move, and evidently at the very gates of death. The whisky was immediately administered, and he speedily revived. About a quart was given him, when, as Sheppard himself says, he began to feel himself the strongest man in Colorado, and it was with difficulty that four men could hold him. It soon became evident that the whisky would prove an effectual antidote to the tarantula poison.

Mr. Sheppard is now recovering rapidly, and though he is still weak, and has lost some thirty pounds in weight, there is but little doubt that in a week or so he will be all right again.

Lightning in a Camp.

A camp of soldiers was lately struck by lightning in France, and the result is a good instance of the effectiveness of points to attract the electric fluid. The tents were full of men and arms, and the cots had iron frames. In one tent, three men were killed and seven wounded, all but one being struck either in both legs or on the right leg. That one was struck in the right eye. In another tent where four men were wounded, the charge entered by both legs or the left one. Some men were thrown out of their beds, or turned over in them. The uniforms of the soldiers were perforated, and showed spots which are said to be "sulphurized." One of these will be analyzed. The most significant part of the occurrence is the escape of a tent which stood near the telegraph line. A soldier standing in front of it was struck, but the tent escaped, the electric current passing to the telegraph, where it broke a dozen poles. It is thought from this that camps may be protected by being surrounded with lines of wire surmounted with points, and well connected with the earth.

Wonders of Mechanism.

A crowd of people were standing around the Corliss engine, Machinery Hall, at the Centennial, the other day, watching and admiring it, when a man stepped from among them and took from his pocket a tin box, and opening it took out what appeared to be an exceedingly diminutive alcohol lamp, and, placing it on the corner of the platform, lighted it. Then it began to buzz something as a humming-bird might if only small enough, and, upon close examination, it was found to be a perfect steam-engine in full motion, having for its foundation a 25-cent gold piece. It was composed of gold, steel and platinum, the fly-wheel being three-fourths of an inch in diameter, and the stroke one-twenty-fourth of an inch, and its full weight seven grains. A magnifying glass had to be used to see it distinctly.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

The Old Log House.

There's an old log house on my father's farm,
All silent, and lonely, and still;
Not a sound of mirth is ever heard now
In the old log house on the hill.

But fondly I think of the bygone days,
Where with brothers and sisters dear,
Not a happier home, in the country around,
Could be found, either far or near.

But my father builded another house,
And my brothers are gone afar;
And the old log house is deserted now,
And defaced with many a scar.

The rabbit and squirrel play hide-and-seek
With mice o'er the oaken floor;
But they quickly beats hasty retreat
When the owl flies in at the door.

The "twittering swallow" now builds its nest
On the rafters, going to decay;
And the robin and sparrow have made their house
On the logs for many a day.

The little room, where my brother and I
Oft listened to the weird whip-poor-will,
Is open now to the birds and the bats,
And they come here without fear of ill.

But poor-will is miss'd from his nightly seat
On the apple tree near the door—
For there's no one there to answer him back,
As we've done a thousand times o'er.

The primrose bloom uncared-for now,
And the "blue-eyed violets" blow;
And the cottage rose, that my sister loved,
Climbs in at the casement low.

As if it would ask, "Where are they all gone
That used once to caress and to love
Us poor flowers, neglected now
In the rank weeds that o'er us rove?"

But the friendly vine, on the old black logs,
Still clings there, loving and true,
As if it would hide the marks of decay
From the passing traveler's view.

Oh, my heart still clings to the dear old home,
And the times of my childhood there!
And I'd rather live o'er those blessed days
Than to dwell in a palace fair.

Experiments and Experiences.

WARTS can be removed from stock by touching them daily with a little acetic acid. It will soon destroy them.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Maine Farmer, speaking of improving wet land, says: "A few years since I took a piece of wet, rocky pasture that produced nothing but flags and rushes, cleared it from rocks and drained it with an open drain, then plowed and thoroughly pulverized it and seeded it down. The first year there was from one to two tons of grass per acre."

NO TOOL is more essential on the farm than a good grindstone. They were formerly all imported from England. Then the Nova Scotia ones were found superior. Ohio grindstones are largely used by Western farmers. But now Lake Huron grindstones are superseding all others; they have a fine, sharp grit, and leave a fine edge. The stone should be kept clean and dry, and free from grease and rust.

IT used to be thrown in our face by Eastern butter and cheese makers, that "the corn-growing West could not grow the grass and had not the water to make good market butter, except for the vitiated tastes of Western people, who know no higher flavor." But since we have come in competition with them in a fair field, and carried off the palm, they now patronizingly conclude, "you better confine your operations to corn and wheat-raising, for which your soil is peculiarly fitted." Come out West, young man.—Des Moines Register.

TO ASCERTAIN the number of head of cattle of an average of eight cwt. that a farm ought to support, French agriculturists generally estimate than an animal consumes in a year eleven cwt. of hay for every one cwt. of its weight. Thus, twenty-two tons of hay ought to support during a year two tons of live stock, equal to five animals of eight cwt. each. Two hundred weight of nutritive hay, being taken as the standard of nutrition, are found to be equal to eight and one-half stones of oats and sixteen of potatoes. It should be borne in mind that the richness of food varies with the soil, and its feeding value will vary with the temperament and the digestive powers of the animal.

WHO that has had a garden and grow vegetables but has time and again been disappointed, in getting old, worthless seeds, or such as turn out untrue to name. There are a few leading sorts of vegetables that are indispensable in a kitchen garden, and to have these fail is a serious matter. To avoid such failures, and always be sure of such crops, there is one measure which if put in practice is certain of success. This is at the time of gathering the crop to select a few of the best specimens of the different kinds, from which to raise seed the following spring. With the exception of parsnip seed, these are good for terms of from two to ten years, if properly kept. By following a plan of growing two or three kinds of seed each year, a supply can be kept up at a small outlay. In this way the constant annoyance and loss resulting from sowing seeds not true to name can easily be avoided.—P. T. Quinn, in Scribner for November.

TO HANG seed-corn, or place it where it can be smoked a few days, will put it in a condition beyond question. The heat will dry it out and the smoke leave a covering upon it which will protect it from the changes of temperature, from insects when planted, and be a stimulus to it when it starts to grow. It is hardly possible for a farmer to devote more time in the selection and care of his seed-corn than will be returned to him in a tenfold ratio in the crop which may be produced from it. When the seed is saved, be sure that it is placed beyond the reach of vermin. Mice will walk with feet uppermost if they only have two sides to brace them against. Suspend the frame or scaffold which supports the ears, by wires or rods of iron which can neither be gnawed off or descended by the little rodents. Do not fail to save the seed-corn in proper condition, for it is often worth, in a wet, backward spring, nearly a whole crop of corn to the man who devotes a little time to saving it just at the proper season.—Western Rural.

The Kitchen.

TRIFLES.—Roll out rich puff paste, quarter of an inch thick, brush over with icing as made for cake, then cut in strips four inches long, and one wide, and bake delicately.

DRIED SALMON.—Pull some into flakes; have ready some eggs boiled hard, and chopped large; put both into half a pint of thin cream, and two or three ounces of butter rubbed with a teaspoonful of flour; skim it and stir till boiling hot; make a wall of mashed potatoes round the inner edge of a dish, and pour the above into it.

BROWN SOUP FOR INVALIDS.—Take one tablespoonful of flour and brown it. Put it in a bowl and mix with it one ounce of butter, stir them together to a smooth paste; then add half a pint of boiling water, with a slice of toasted bread cut in small pieces, and just salt enough to taste; if approved, a little black pepper may be added. When animal food is forbidden, this may be used as a substitute for a richer soup.

BUCKWHEAT CAKES.—One quart of buckwheat flour, one pint of wheat flour, half a teacupful of yeast; salt to taste. Mix the flour, buckwheat and salt with as much water, moderately warm, as will make it into a thin batter. Beat it well, then add the yeast; when well mixed, set it in a warm place to rise. As soon as they are very light, grease the griddle, and bake them a delicate brown. Butter the cakes, and eat while hot.

ONION SAUCE.—Take four onions, four peppers, and one pint of green tomatoes, and chop all fine. Add one small cup of salt, and let it stand over night. Next morning drain off the liquors and add one cupful of grated horseradish, one tablespoonful of ground cinnamon, and a tablespoonful of ground allspice. Cover with vinegar, place on the back of the stove in a preserving kettle, and stew slowly for six hours or more. Bottle tightly. An excellent relish with cold meats.

WAFFLES.—In the evening boil quite soft four tablespoonfuls of rice, using more water than when cooking it for other purposes. In the morning beat the whites of three eggs, put the yolks into the rice, stirring both lightly together; add one pint of new milk, a little salt and flour to make rather thick batter; stir in the whites last, and bake a light brown in a well-greased waffle-iron; the batter should be thick enough to require a little spreading out with a spoon when put upon the iron, but if too thick the waffle will be tough. The above quantity is sufficient for a family of four or five persons. Deep irons are better than shallow ones.

A Father's Frantic Efforts to Save His Child.

Last Wednesday at noon, as Mr. Johnson went home to his dinner, he noticed his little boy, about 7 years of age, playing on the roadside, and his little girl near him. Going into the house, he threw off his coat. Mrs. J. called his attention to the fire the boy had set to the dry grass at the roadside, and was now, at her bidding, trying to extinguish. With the remark that he would help, Mr. Jones took up his hat and started. When a short distance from the house he was thrilled with horror to see the little girl speeding up the ravine at her best run, and a bright tongue of fire blazing a foot above her head. Calling out, "run toward pa," the father started in swift pursuit. The child heard, but as she turned her face the fire swept over it, and she kept on without again turning until caught by the frantic father, who tried in vain to tear the blazing clothing from her. Unhappily her garments were all new, and it was impossible to tear them. Dropping her to the ground he succeeded in slipping a portion over her head, and then as the flames blazed up caught them in his hands until they were extinguished. On raising her in his arms to take her home, the skin peeled from her arms and hands, which, as she ran, had constantly fluttered backward as if to fight the fire off. She had run several hundred feet from where she caught fire. Her constant cry was, "Oh, father! Oh, mother!" She was conscious to the last. Drs. Lotspeich and flowers were over two hours dressing the wounds. Two-thirds of the surface of her body was burned. The accident occurred at half past 12, and at 10 o'clock the next day she died. She was 4 years old the 26th of last August. Mr. Johnson's hands are perfectly cooked, and he is almost helpless, so far as hands are concerned. It is a great wonder that he too did not perish, as his only clothing was cotton. He thinks that had he but worn his coat the life of his pet might have been saved, but he had nothing with which to smother the fire but his bare hands.—Holden (Mo.) Enterprise.

An Expensive Lesson.

John Bright, in his recent speech at Manchester upon the Turco-Servian war, delivered to an immense audience, told the English people some home truths not only with regard to the Eastern question and the Bulgarian atrocities, but also the Crimean war. In the course of his speech, Mr. Bright said:

> Great, indeed, I know, were the reasons that were offered to thoughtless and uninformed people to induce them to support the Government and Parliament in that unhappy war. They were held sufficient, and the war took place. That it was disastrous, looking back twenty years, I think all men must now admit. I am not speaking of the valor of the troops or of their failures in any contest in which they were engaged. I am speaking of it from a far higher point of view than that. It was a disastrous war; and to us now looking back again it was especially humiliating. I think Mr. Kinglake says more than half a million of lives, first and last, were sacrificed in that war. I think our share is supposed to approach about 40,000 men. A hundred millions of money was spent by us—I am not speaking of what other nations spent; I am not addressing other nations. The moment the war was over, though there was a reduction of armaments, still our military charges remained, and have remained from that time to this at £10,000,000 or more higher than they were before; and, besides all this, we entered into commercial transactions with an insolvent firm on the Bosphorus [laughter], to which the people of England advanced large sums which there is no hope they will ever see again, to the amount probably of nearly a hundred million of money. It may be said, looking back to those loans, that at this moment there is not an ironclad that slumbers on the Turkish waters, there is not a musket or a rifle or a bayonet or a sword by which a Servian has been killed in this war, or unarmed men and helpless women or children have been murdered in Bulgaria, that was not purchased and paid for by money borrowed from the credulous people of this country.

A TEXAN was fined $500 last week for threatening the life of a neighbor. Had he committed the murder he contemplated he would have fared better.

TWO STRONGHOLDS.

The Key of the Black Sea and the Key of the Mediterranean.

Constantinople is to the Black sea what Gibraltar is to the Mediterranean. It is the key of the East, as the latter is of the West. There is great plausibility, to say the least, in the report that England proposes to seize Constantinople now, as it did Gibraltar 174 years ago, and, holding it, allow the other powers to carve the rest of Turkey in Europe to suit themselves.

Gibraltar, as everybody knows, is an insulated rock, the southernmost promontory of Spain, connected with the mainland only by a low sandy slip of land between the bay of Gibraltar on the west, and the Mediterranean on the east, forming one of the "Pillars of Hercules," Ceuta, on the African coast, being the other. It is 1,400 feet high, accessible only on the northern and western sides. Properly garrisoned, it is absolutely impregnable, and, what is more to the point, commands completely the passage between the Mediterranean and the Atlantic. In a word, England, by having possession of that rock, is entire mistress of the commerce of all Southern Europe. The Moors held it in the days of their power. England wrested it from Spain in 1702 by surprising the garrison. Several attempts have since been made to deprive England of this rock, which is indeed one of the most precious stones in the crown jewels of Great Britain. The most memorable attempt was made by the French and the Spaniards in 1779–83. That was perhaps the most determined siege and defense of military history. England guards Gibraltar as the very apple of her eye, and justly, too.

Constantinople, ancient Byzantium, is situated on the Bosphorus, where it commands the Black Sea. It is a triangular peninsula, with the Golden Horn on the north, and water on every side except the west. It occupies seven hills. Properly garrisoned, it would be as impregnable and commanding as Gibraltar. Founded by the Emperor Constantine, it is most admirably situated for being the capital of an empire embracing the two continents. It is stated that the city has been subjected to no less than twenty four memorable sieges. The Crusaders took it early in the thirteenth century. The Turks won it in the middle of the fifteenth century. It is a city of over 1,000,000 people, about half of them Mohammedans and the rest Christians and Jews. A city of about 20,000 has sprung up about Gibraltar.

Firemen's Dress.

An improved dress, designed to enable firemen to enter a burning building in safety, has been recently made the subject of some interesting experiments. It consists of two air-tight garments, worn one over the other, after the manner of a diver's dress. The inner dress is of rubber and fits tightly; the outer dress, worn over this, is of leather and is quite loose. The outer suit is also secured to a metallic helmet resting on the shoulders and entirely covering the head. A line of hose is attached to the back of the outer dress, where it divides into two smaller pipes. One goes to the top of the helmet on the outside, where it discharges a number of fine streams of water that flow down over the outside of the dress. The other branch pipe passes under the fireman's arm, and ends in a nozzle that he may use in directing the stream on the flames. Within this hose is another, smaller, that delivers air under pressure to the open space between the two garments. The air expands the outer garment and keeps it away from the person, and at the same time supplies fresh air for respiration. To allow for the escape of the spent air, two small holes are drilled in the helmet opposite the eyes, and through these the exhausted air escapes, driving the smoke and flames away from the face and giving a clear view without injury to the eyes. Such a dress enables a fireman to stay within a burning building for twenty minutes in perfect safety.—Scribner for November.

Audible Speech Conveyed Two Miles by Telegraph.

The Boston Advertiser prints an interesting account of an experiment in carrying on a conversation by word of mouth over a telegraph-wire, made on the evening of the 9th inst. by Alexander Graham Bell and Thomas Watson. Telephones were placed at either end of a telegraph-line owned by the Walworth Manufacturing Company, extending from their office in Boston to their factory in Cambridgeport, a distance of about two miles. The company's battery, consisting of nine Daniels cells, was removed from the circuit, and another of ten carbon elements substituted. Articulate conversation then took place through the wire. The sounds, at first faint and indistinct, became suddenly quite loud and intelligible. Mr. Bell in Boston and Mr. Watson in Cambridgeport took notes of what was said and heard, and the comparison of the two records shows that the transmission was almost perfectly accurate. Conversation was carried on for about half an hour, generally in an ordinary tone of voice, but often in a whisper. The credit of this important discovery is due to Mr. Bell.

An Old Bombshell Explodes in a Kitchen.

On Wednesday morning a bombshell, which had been picked up on one of the battle-fields of the late war as a relic, found its way into the cooking range at No. 4 South Broadway, the residence of Capt. Alex. Jones, and exploded, doing considerable mischief, but injuring no one. The shell was thought to be empty, and had laid in the cellar for seven years. A servant, without knowing it, picked up the missile with a bucket of coal. The coal and the shell were emptied into the range, and the servant left the room to attend to other duties. The shell exploded with a loud report, nearly demolished the range, tore through the ceiling, and caused other damage.—Baltimore Sun.

AN enterprising Yankee whose reverence for historic landmarks is only equaled by his zeal in selling groceries and provisions, advertises in a Boston paper that his store was built in 1782 as a city market, and that Lafayette, during the siege, stopped there one day with his staff and ate bread and cheese on the counter. Boston was besieged before the structure was erected, and Lafayette was not in America during the siege. But no matter; the grocer is there now, and ready to see his customers every morning.

Remarkable Exits from Life.

When he (William the Silent) felt himself dying, "Holland's greatest warrior" sent for two clergymen of the opposing religious factions, and bade them argue which of their creeds was the right one. "I see well enough," said the hardened unbeliever, when they had finished their discussion, "I see there is nothing certain except mathematics." With this he turned his face to the wall. He had ceased to live. A remarkable dependence upon the certainty of mathematics. One who was not quite so confident endeavored to make "assurance doubly sure." I quote from Scaliger and De Thou, who both maintain that Hieronymus Cardan, a celebrated astronomer and mathematician, who lived in Pavia towards the middle of the sixteenth century, and who may be better known to students as the discoverer of "Cardan's suspension," having foretold the day of his death by various calculations, starved himself to death for fear that his prediction would not be verified, and that his beloved science might suffer in consequence thereof. This might be called being imbued with the spirit of the thing; but I think that my next example goes a step further still. "Creech, the celebrated commentator on Lucretius," says Voltaire in his Dictionnaire Philosophique, "wrote on his manuscript, 'N. B. I must hang myself when I have finished my commentary.'" He kept his word in order to have the pleasure of ending his days like his author. We are told that the first copy of Copernicus' book was brought to him when all consciousness was gone. When they brought Breech's they found him suspended from a beam. "If he had undertaken a commentary on Ovid he would have lived longer," remarks the commentator on this commentator's mad act. Champcenetz, the Secretary of Rivarol, during the French Revolution of '93, innocently asked, when he had heard his sentence, whether a substitute would not do. Andre Chenier did not trouble himself so far. Perceiving his friend Roucher, the author of the "Months," a poem not unlike Thompson's "Seasons," he apostrophized him quite cheerfully by reciting the opening lines of the first scene of "Andromache," after which he kept silent, until they arrived at the Barriere du Trone Renverse, near which the guillotine was erected. The hideous cart was met by a flock of sheep just entering Paris. It brought to the young author's mind the seventh Eclogue of Virgil, which he closed with "Torridas." "Torrida," corrected Roucher. His companion did not answer until they had mounted the scaffold, when he softly approached Roucher, and tapped him on the shoulder. "You were right; I forgot that summer was feminine in Latin." It brings the tears into one's eyes, and we turn with relief to more peaceful closing scenes, in which the wit, though no less brilliant, is not so harrowing. When the Count de Caylus was dying, they brought to him, much against his will, a priest whose name happened to be Chapeau (Hat); upon hearing which he exclaimed: "I came into the world without breeches, I can well afford to go out without a hat." This was the same who always persisted that he had no soul. Unknowingly there may be many such, who think that it is sufficient to have lived well in order to die well. There is a sentiment of rectitude, which influences those of whom we would least expect it to do what is right in this world, without thinking of any reward which they may reap from it in the next. That Montaigne should get up in his dying hours to pay his servants their salary, for fear that his heirs might neglect it or dispute the amount, is not so wonderful, knowing what we do of the man and his principles; but that one his very opposite should have some thoughts for his creditors after he should be gone is rather surprising. Vangelas, author of the "Remarques sur la Grammaire Francaise," a not very strait-laced personage, did so, however. Notwithstanding his ample pension, he was loaded with debts to that extent that he no longer dared appear in the streets in the day time, but only went out at night, a proceeding which gave rise to his friends calling him "The Owl." This condition of things made him very uneasy, as was proved at his death in his will. After having disposed of his wardrobe to satisfy all outstanding claims, he adds, with perfect frankness and bonhomie, "But as there might still be left some creditors who cannot be paid, even after everything is sold, in that case my wish is that they shall sell my body to some surgeon at the highest price that shall be paid for it, and that the amount shall be applied to the liquidation of these debts which I may still be owing in the world; so that, if I have not succeeded in being useful during my life, I may be at least so after my death." I wonder whether he ever heard of Dryden's body being detained by his creditors.—Tinsley's Magazine.

One Fair Woman the Cause of Three Deaths.

The estate of Keroalain, in Brittany, for centuries occupied by the ancient and wealthy family of Kermel, is soon to be sold by auction. The last tenants of the old and picturesque chateau were a widowed mother and her two sons. The eldest, Olivier, was Mayor of the Commune, and the youngest led the quiet life of a country gentleman. Both became attached to a young servant girl of the establishment, and Olivier, having reason to think that his brother obtained the preference shot him. He was condemned to the galleys for life, and soon died of mingled remorse and fever. The mother, crushed with grief, soon followed. Hence the auction.

THE heaven-born and other poets will be glad to know that a new rhyming dictionary is projected, and that it is to be on an enlarged and improved plan. It is to be very comprehensive, including all the outre rhymes of Browning and Byron, and many more which have never before appeared. The effect of this volume will be to reduce still further the price of the divine afflatus, so that only the basest of mankind can afford to be without it.

Effect of Recoil in Rifle-Shooting.

It has been a question with marksmen, says the Springfield (Mass.) Union, whether the recoil of a pistol or rifle occurred before the ball left the bore. Many have contended that it did not, and that the tendency of a pistol to "throw up" did not affect its accuracy. A recent experiment seems to have shown conclusively that the recoil occurs before the ball leaves the bore and does [illegible] direction. The experiment was this: A rifle barrel, [illegible] inches long for [illegible], was [illegible] to a solid bed in such a way as to prevent any movement but that of recoil directly to the rear upward. In this situation it was fired a number of times, and the balls followed each other into the same hole in the target. An incline or wedge was then made fast upon the bed at the rear of the barrel in such a way that the breech would be raised as it slid back in the recoil. Fired under these conditions it sent the balls lower than before. This showed that the recoil and subsequent elevation of the breech occurred in season to affect the direction of the ball; that is, before it had left the bore. Of course the length of the barrel has an effect in several ways upon the degree in which the recoil affects the accuracy of the shooting.

Frog Story.

A remarkable incident occurred at Brown & Hall's sawmill, in Acton, while a pine log was being sawed up into lumber. The outside slab and one board had been cut off, and while the workmen were turning over the log they were surprised to see a large toad poke his head out of a hole in which he was imbedded, and where he had barely escaped being cut up by the saw. How the stranger got there was a mystery, as he was completely incaged in the wood, with no possible means of ingress or egress. As the log was the fourth or fifth from the butt of the tree, his position must have been at least fifty or sixty feet from the ground, and he had no doubt grown up with it from infancy, being probably hundreds of years old. The animal was quite flat, and nearly as large as a man's hand. He was perfectly blind, but when taken from his bed he made use of his limbs to crawl away. The tree was perfectly sound, with the exception of a decayed spot of about a foot in length below the hollow place in which he was imbedded. How did he get there, and what did he live on?—Toronto Globe.

Wild Cat Tip.

Here it is: The precious blossom rock of the Far West. If worked into the mosaics of a new literature, it will catch the eye of the English critic as a thing of beauty, fresh, unique and unconventional. A miner, with a revolver in each boot-leg, and a gallon of California whisky under his hat, was lounging in the streets of Deadwood City, in the Black Hills, when suddenly a stranger happened to brush against him. Out came the pistol from the right boot, and up went the right arm with a flourish. "Now, look yer, everybody in this yer gulch; look at me and crawl! I'm Wild Cat Tip from Bear Gulch. Git out here, a half-dozen of yer, and form a line of battle, 'cause I can't hold onto this yer hammer much longer; so trot 'em out." Some one in the crowd fired a pistol in the air, and simultaneously a rotten egg struck Tip between the eyes. "I'm murdered," he yelled, dropping his revolver and falling heavily to the ground. In a moment he came to himself, and, straightening up, remarked plaintively: "Boys, let me see the caliber of the gun what shoots eggs."—New York Tribune.

An Engineer's Quick Wit.

A few days since, as an excursion train of eighteen heavily-loaded cars on the Vermont division of the Portland and Ogdensburg railroad had commenced the descent of a heavy grade between St. Johnsbury and the Connecticut river, the engineer suddenly descried three cattle upon the track just in advance of him. To drive or frighten them from the track, or to seasonably stop the train, was impossible. Instantly he decided upon his course. He sent his fireman to disconnect his engine and tender from the train, whistled "down brakes," and, with full steam on, plunged forward alone, and, with the fearful impetus thus gained, threw the cattle from the track. He then quietly allowed the train to overtake him again, connected it, and continued on, his passengers knowing nothing of the fearful danger they had escaped by his bravery, his quick wit, and his fidelity to duty.—Burlington (Vt.) Free Press.

A Tough Antagonist.

The Sitting Bull of East Africa is the King of Abyssinia. Against this rude General and his hordes the Khedive of Egypt has been directing his best military strength for a year past, only to be repulsed and outmaneuvered at every turn. More than this, the Abyssinian has shown no quarter whatever to any who have fallen into his clutches—American officers, home ability, allies of Egypt, and any others under the banner of the Khedive having been sacrificed, until hardly a relic remains of the three expeditions sent out against the Abyssinians within a few months. An enemy may be rude, untrained in modern military tactics and possessed of a light army, and yet be capable of giving good battle on his native soil, as the King of Abyssinia has proved to Egypt, the patriots of Cuba to Spain, and the Modocs and Sioux of the plains to the United States.

Something New in Mexico.

From Mexico we learn that Porfirio Diaz, the rival of President Lerdo, has done something so novel as to deserve at least passing notice. He negotiated a loan of $50,000 in Oaxaca, which was to be paid in installments of 25 per cent. Of course the lenders never expected to see their money again; for a Mexican merchant counts forced loans to revolutionary bandits among the losses to be looked for in a business career. The surprise of the lenders may therefore be imagined when, instead of the first installment, they received the whole amount in liquidation. The enemies of Diaz intimate that the repayment was a trick to enable him to secure a larger loan hereafter. But, in any event, the incident is probably unprecedented in the varied history of Mexican revolutions.—New York Sun.

IN 1790, not 100 years ago, at the sack of Ismail, the Russians were as atrocious toward the Turks as the latter are toward the Servians; and Suwarrow put 3,000 persons to death, as a lesson to his soldiers in the art of massacre.

THE last high-toned Boston family left Swampscott on Monday. Said mamma: "I carn't stand the cold weather, and I sharn't be back until next June." Said papa: "By Jove, but it's dismal, ye know, and I'm off for home, egad!"

THE latest, simplest and most effectual mouse-trap yet thought of is an earthen wash-bowl nearly half-filled with water, covered over with meal, and placed on the pantry shelf. A Pulaski, N. Y., woman recently caught half-a-dozen of the mischief-makers in one night by this method.

IN the midst of a colloquy between Booth and McCullough, as Iago and Othello, in San Francisco, a huge watermelon rolled out from the wings to the center of the stage, then down the slight incline to the footlights, struck Booth's legs, and finally fell into the orchestra with a thud and a spatter.

AND now shall the brains of the good people of Connecticut be strengthened accordingly. TO A BIRD.

When maiden daisies deck the ground,
And violets in the lanes are found,
When warmer suns in heaven glow,
And milder winds o'er meadows blow;
Thou com'st, sweet bird! at that blest time
To glad with songs our northern clime.
How mellow is each warbled note
That gushes from thy mottled throat!
Such music sweet is seldom heard
As here thou givest, happy bird!
For, listening with a pleased surprise,
The forest seems a paradise,
Such happy notes tell of a land
By gentle zephyrs ever fanned;
Where summer reigns throughout the year,
And raging tempests come not near.
When winter strips these woods again,
May thou and I that Eden gain.
—Scribner for November.

THE Chinese have an idea that the moon does not show her nose at midday for nothing. Late in August groups of natives gathered at noonday in the streets of Shanghai and gazed intently at the sky. There was the moon—no mistake; a faint but well defined curve, dodging in and out of cloud; and to the southwest was a bright star—Venus. It meant something, and an old Chinese merchant wagged his head very sagely as if he understood it. "I saw the same thing once before," said he, "and that was thirty years ago; and not so very long afterward the English took Chusan! Subsequently, too, they took Nanking."

Thiers.

Every one will learn with regret that the health of M. Thiers is slowly, but surely, declining. Until the last year he was vigorous for his age, always walking distances which would deter most venerable men. Now his physical system is decaying so fast that he rides. There will be heavy lamentation, even among the French, when their greatest statesman leaves them forever. He is justly entitled to be called in history "The Savior of France."

How Sioux Warriors Fight

The Sioux, when on the war path, black their faces from their eyes down, the forehead being colored a bright red When in mourning, and when very eager to avenge the death of friends or relations, they cut their hair short and daub their faces with white earth. Their feats of horsemanship are wonderful. They consider the greatest act of valor to be the striking of their enemy with some hand instrument when alive, and, whether alive or dead, it is the first one that strikes the fallen foe that 'counts the coop,' and not the one that shoots him. They do not always scalp. Their object in scalping is to furnish a proof of their deed and give them to their women to dance over. They always attack in a sweeping, circling line, eaglelike, give a volley, pass on, circle and return on a different angle. When they kill one of their enemy there is always a rush to get the first crack at him so as to 'count the coop,' and then some Indian who was disappointed in getting a cut at the victim while alive scalps him. The Sioux always camp with tepees (lodges) in a circle, making, as it were, a stockade, and when on dangerous ground they picket their ponies in the center.

A Peculiar Newspaper.

London has a large weekly newspaper called the "Obituary," devoted, as its title shows, to obituary and mortuary proceedings. It has an immense circulation and columns of splendid advertisements. Undertakers who get up funerals in every variety, cremationists, embalmers, vault makers and grave diggers all have their say in its columns, while the makers of humble tombstones and the sculptors of gorgeous monuments are ready to decorate the last home of man. Crape makers, manufacturers of all sorts of funeral appliances, and especially mourning mantua makers, claim the attention of the afflicted in their special advertisements.

Wills of distinguished individuals are given, and lost wills advertised; the cards of attorneys drilled in probate matters, and advertisements for absent heirs, make up a portion of its patronage.

The reading matter is all suited to the subject, while the obituary notices from a staple item, and, if necessary, choice notices are written by distinguished writers for the afflicted friends and relations, so as to move them to appropriate grief and lead them to gentle consolation.

Many people are afflicted with a morbid love for such reading, and to them this paper furnished the choicest matter.

A travel through its columns is like a solemn promenade through a splendid geaveyard, with a half a dozen funerals in sight, with the truthful utterance of the epitaphs thrown in.

It takes all sorts of people to make a world, and there are those who strive to please each sort of people. The London Obituary has a serious mission to fill, and it seems determined to fill it.

How to Get Rid of a Cold.

Few unimportant maladies are more disagreeable than a cold in the head, and how to get rid of it is a problem not always easy of practical solution.—Some people resort to "sudorifics and lying in bed," others to large and frequent doses of quinine, and others to persistent and resolute dipping of their heads in cold water—the colder the better. But Dr. Ferrier, in to-day's Lancet, recommends a novel cure, which he has tried with excellent effect in three cases—his own and those of two others persons the local symptoms of cold in the head—namely, watery eyes, running nose, sneezing, and nasal speech—are, as Dr. Ferrier says, the chief source of annoyance and discomfort. Local treatment, therefore, seems to him to be the most rational. In the catarrh of alcohalism, and in more chronic forms of gastric catarrh, bismuth alone or in combination with morphia acts almost like a specific. Dr Ferrier came to the conclusion then that in nasal catarrh—i. e., cold in the head—the same drug by itself or with others would prove efficacious. On a certain evening recently, Dr Ferrier, "I began to suffer with simptons of cold in the—irritatation of the nostrils, sneezing, watering of the eyes, and commencing flow of the mucous secretion. Having some trisnitrate of bismuth at hand, I took repeated pinches of it in the form of snuff, inhailing it strongly so as to carry it well into the interior of the nostrils. In a short time the tickling in the nostrils and sneezing ceased, and next morning and all traces of coryza had completely disappeared." Dr Ferrier adds: "The formula which I find on the whole the most suitable combination of the ingredients of the snuff is as follows: Hydrochlorate of morphia, two grains; acacia powder, two drachms trisnitrate of bismuth, six drachms.—As this is neither an errhine nor a sternutatory, but rather the opposite, it may be termed an anti-orrhine or anti-sternutatory powder. Of this powder one-quarter to one-half may be taken as snuff in the course of 24 hours. The inhalations ought to be commenced as soon as the symptons of coryza began to show themselves, and should be used frequently at first, so as to keep the interior of the nostrils constantly well coated. Each time the nostrils constantly well coated. Each time the nostrils are cleared another pinch should be taken. It may be taken in the ordinary manner from between the thumb and forefinger, but a much more efficacious and less wasteful method is to use a small gutter of paper, or 'a snuff spoon,' placing it just within the nostril and sniffing up forcibly so as to carry it well within. Some of the snuff usually finds way into the pharynx and acts as a good topical application, should there be also pharyngeal catarrh The powder causes scarcely any perceptible sensation. A slight smarting may occur if the mucous membrane is much irritated and inflamed, but it rapidly disappears. After a few sniffs of the powder a perceptible amelioration of the symptons ensues, and in the course of a few hours, the powder being inhaled from time to time, all the simptoms may have entirely disappeared." This is worth knowing and remembering in the present season of hot sun and cold winds.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Getting Married.

This is the chief ambition of many young people, and the mania sometimes follows them through life. Hence we find them committing motrimony every few years, from the time they are "of age" until they turn the late corners of seventy or eighty.

But with all this marrying and giving in marriage, when the results are footed up, the product, in a majority of cases, is either indifference or misery. Out of this well known fact has arisen all kinds of theories in relation to social life, and any amount of abuse is poured upon the marriage covenant, especially by those who are unhappy in their domestic relations. It never occurs to them that they are responsible in any degree for the result of their actions, or that they are paying the penalty of their own rashness. Neither do the young, or even the middle-aged, take any warning from the married lives around them, but rush into the bonds of matrimony with their eyes shut and reasoning powers entirely dormant.

Thus the tide rolls on, and unhappy homes find place in every community, while the divorce courts pour out the disgusting tales of domestic infelicity. The marriage covenant is the highest and purest relation that God has given us. It is the bond of earthly happiness and the center of purity and truth; but unless its alters are lighted with love, its hearthstone is desolate and its very name is mockery.

The institution of marriage is in no way responsible for the accumulated misery that in many instances surrounds it. The trouble is that people will marry for anything and everything except pure affection. Girls will marry because it is fashionable, for the sake of having a wedding, to create a sensation, to get their names into the papers, or to keep from being an old maid. What they marry seems to be a matter of secondary importance, hence they will promise to 'love, honor and obey,' almost anything in the shape of a man or dandy, whether his mouth is clean or defiled with tobacco juice, whether his brain is cool or cooked in whisky, whether his morals are pure or whether he has any morals at all. And then, because they are not happy, they will declare that men are all alike and that marriage is a curse to humanity. If a girl marries for money and gets it, she has no right to complain of the result. If love was not invited to the wedding happiness will not come at the bidding. Money is good in its place, and a very convenient article in house-keeping, but it never purchased happiness, and nature seems to compensate by sending more love to the cottage than to the mansion.

A large exchequer is no detriment to a good husband, but don't for heaven's sake marry a fool or a brute, because, forsooth, he owns a few grrenbacks. Wealth is safer after all in a man's head than in his pocket, for brains are not like other stocks, liable to go down in financial panic; and fire will sweep through a block of tenement houses while the investment under his hat is left unscathed. But woman is not the only victim who is occasionally 'sold' in the matrimonial market. Men who pride themselves upon their good sense, often marry for beauty and find it fading quickly on their hands.

Men who flatter themselves that they are very shrewd, will marry an idle, helpless girl, in order to get the few thousands that her father is willing to give to have her taken off his hands. If the bridegroom was as shrewd as he thinks he is, he would rather have his hundred thousand dollars 'all in wife,' than to take one half in cash and the other half in dry goods and jewelry—weak nerves and neuralgia.

Another fatal mistake is for a middle-aged man to marry a young wife, and fancy that his happiness will be complete. The bride of course has made a foolish bargain, and one that coming years will chain with deep regret, but neither she nor her friends need flatter themselves that the sacrefice is all on her side. If compatibility affects both parties alike, and if marriage is not harmonious and loving it become a galling fetter that both must endure until death severs the bond. True marriage is a union of hearts and hands, cemented with a love that is deep enough to make sweet the dark passage of life—a love that is brave enough to make cheerfulness dwell in the shadow of poverty, and strong enough to make even a sacrifice for the loved one a pleasure. Then the years that go smiling by will strengthen the bond, and the great sorrows that haunts life's pathway will bind the twain closer together, and they will walk through life with hearts so warm and hands so close together that outside storms and trials will beat upon them comparitively in vain.—Farmer's Monthly.

Scaring Away his Sister's Young Man.

A young man, born of poor but honest parents, went to see his sweetheart Thursday night. Her youngest brother during the "primping interval," entertained the beau as follows:

"Sis says she's going to shake you, she is!"

"Ah!" exclaimed the astonished you'g man.

"Yes, she is; she's got you down on the slate for a gran' bounce, she has."

"Why, how?"

"Well, now, thar aint no use for you to chaw dictionary 'bout it neether, cause thar aint no discount on sis—she's a he ole gal when she starts!"

'My goodness grac—!'

'She sez she goes out with you an' tramps 'round jess as lonesome as some ole married cow, and when yer treats it aint ter nuthin' but cheap ole soda water at er nickle a quart!"

The young man sighed and reached for a fan

'She sez she wants a feller thet's got sum stile about him, and kin set up a square meal ter his gal when he takes her a gallivantin', she does!"

The young man rumaged for his hand kerchief.

'I tell yer what it is, boss, my sis ain't no slouch, and when she gits a crank in her hed dad sez she grinds it wuss nor our ole ricketty coffee mill. She's goin' fer yer, and she'll tell all the other gals ter shoot the miser, and yer jess bet the'll do it, 'cause they can't go back on sis—not much!"

The young man was climbing down the front steps.

Just then sis entered, and Johnnie explained how he had 'giv' the ole dug-out a big wabble.'

But Jonnie's opinion, since his 'daddy let go of him is, that if he had been Sitting Bull during the performance, he would now be sore in a different locality.

Newspaper Carriers Talk.

"You see" said one, I don't take a back seat to no man in this town in landin' a paper just where it's wanted. Up on Stockton Street there is a little French woman who hangs a parrot out in a cage from her window evry afternoon, and when I sling the Post up it falls on the ledge about the cage and the parrot grabs it with its beak. She can't read a word of English, but she takes the paper because she likes to see me sling it around so lively. I never missed but once and that was one foggy day last winter, when I suppose I didn't make proper calculation for the condition of the atmosphere."

"Pshaw, that ain't nowhere," chimed in another. I've been servin' a morning paper all along to a man who's never left his bed for seven years. Got the rheumatiz. There's a hole busted in one of the windows about two inches wide, and it's two stories high. I shoot it up through that slit at twenty minutes past five every mornin', and it strikes him in the face and wakes him up. On these dark mornin's when there's a high wind, it takes some mighty lively calculation to hit the right place. One morning I droped it on the foot of the bed and didn't wake him, so he stopped the paper the next day."

MOSAIC STANZAS.

When Ajax strives some rock's vast weight to throw,
And heaven's last thunder shakes the world below,
We find a little life—this life of man,
Laugh when you must—be candid when you can.

Yon cottager, who weaves at her own door,
When the loud thunders rock the sounding shore
Some mute, inglorious Milton here may rest,
Man never is, but always to be blest.

Silence how dread! and darkness how profound!
Let fall the curtain—wheel the sofa round—
The curfew tolls the knell of parting day—
He stole her slipper—filled it with Tokay.

Syphax! I joy to meet thee thus alone,
A youth to fortune and to fame unknown,
Where'er I roam, whatever lands to see,
Nor on the lawn, or by the brook was he.

Oh! happy peasant! Oh! unhappy Bard!
Then tell me not that woman's lot is hard;
My daughter—once the comfort of my age—
With the dear love I bear to fair Anne Page.

The squirt, flippant, pert and full of play,
Live while you live, the epicure would say,
One truth is clear, whatever is is right,
Better, quoth he, to be half choked than quite.

Sweet Auburn! loveliest village of the plain!
He shrieked and scrambled, but 'twas all in vain
Laymen have leave to dance when passions play
With aspen boughs, and flowers, and fennel gay.

Pity the sorrows of a poor old man!
In every clime, from Lapland to Japan,
I'll leave this wicked world and climb a tree!
In maiden meditation fancy free.

'Tis pleasant through the loopholes of retreat
(Although, thank heaven, I never boil my meat)
To fix one spark of beauteous heavenly ray,
Let Hercules himself do what he may.

With few associates, and not wishing more,
Let those laugh now that never laughed before.
The good we seldom miss we rarely prize,
Hills peep o'er hills, and Alps on Alps arise.

The waves o'ertake them in their serious play,
Far as the solar walk, or milky way,
'Tis distance lends enchantment to the view,
'Tis true, 'tis pity, an' pity 'tis, 'tis true.

Lo! the poor Indian! whose untutored mind—
Just as the twig is bent the tree's inclined.
—A needless alexandrine ends the song,
That, like a wounded snake, drags its slow length along.

THE ELECTORAL COLLEGES.

The discussion on the powers and duties of Congress in the matter of counting the electoral votes for President and Vice President may be in some degree enlightened by an account of what has been done heretofore, beginning at the commencement of our Government under the existing constitution, 1789. The manner of electing President and Vice President engaged the attention of the convention that framed the constitution, and the system of electors now in use was proposed by James Wilson, one of the delegates from Pennsylvania. Other plans were proposed, although none of them contemplated an election by direct vote of the people, and Wilson's plan was adopted and became a part of the organic law. That plan was defective in two important particulars; it fixed no time for the choice of electors, and made no distinction between votes for President and Vice President, simply providing that the person having the greatest number of votes, if a majority of all the electors, should be declared President, and the person having the next highest should therefore be Vice President. Another oversight was in the method of opening and counting the votes. That important work was to be done, as now, by Congress in joint session, and the "President of the Senate" was to be the custodian and the opener of the votes, and he was to declare the result. The manifest impropriety of delegating this power to one who would naturally be a candidate for the highest office was quickly perceived in the first Congress, for that body had not been four weeks in session, and the electoral votes given in 1788 had not been opened when the Senate (April 6, 1789) proceeded to ballot for the choice of a President "for the sole purpose of opening and counting the votes for President of the United States." John Langdon, of New Hampshire, was unanimously elected, and a message sent to the House "that a quorum of the Senate is formed; that a President is elected for the sole purpose of opening the certificates and counting the votes of the electors of the several States in the choice of a President and Vice President of the United States; that the Senate is now ready, in the Senate Chamber, to proceed, in the presence of the House, to the discharge of that duty, and that the Senate has appointed one of its members to sit at the Clerk's table to make a list of the votes as they shall be declared, submitting it to the wisdom of the House to appoint one or more of their members for the like purpose."

FIRST COUNTING OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

Immediately upon receiving this information the members of the House, preceded by the Speaker (Frederick A. Muhlenberg, of Pennsylvania), went to the Senate Chamber. Mr. Langdon took his place and declared the purpose of the meeting. He then opened and read the certificates from the States, and the tellers made the record. When completed, the presiding officer declared that George Washington had been unanimously elected President of the United States for the term ending with the 3d day of March, 1793; and that John Adams, having the next highest vote, and a majority of all the electors, was elected Vice President for a like term. There were sixty-nine votes sent in from ten States, New York, Rhode Island, and North Carolina not voting, because they had not ratified the constitution in time to do so. About the vote for Vice President there seems to be some confusion. If there were sixty nine votes cast, as recorded in the "History of Congress," then Mr. Adams did not have a clear majority. Lanman's "Dictionary of Congress," however, gives only sixty-seven votes, ignoring the two votes from Georgia set down in the "History" as given for a Mr. Milton. Lanman may be presumed to be right, as there was no question raised about Adams' election, and yet he could not have had a majority of all the sixty-nine electors. Everybody agreed upon Washington; but the full vote for the second place is interesting as showing that party divisions were already beginning among our people. Adams had but two States complete—New Hampshire and Massachusetts; he had five votes from Connecticut, one from New Jersey, eight from Pennsylvania, and five from Virginia; John Jay had Delaware, five of New Jersey's six, and one from Virginia; Robert H. Harrison had Maryland; John Rutledge had six of South Carolina's seven; John Hancock had two from Pennsylvania, one from Virginia, and one from South Carolina; George Clinton had three from Virginia; Samuel Huntington had two from Connecticut, and Edward Telfair and Benjamin Lincoln each one from Georgia. If New York had voted she would have named Clinton, and there would have been no choice for Vice-President.

REGULATING THE SELECTION OF ELECTORS.

To reduce the business of choosing electors to something like order, the act of March 1, 1792, was passed, and is still in force. It provided that the electors should be chosen within thirty-four days immediately preceding the first Wednesday in December of each year preceding the end of a Presidential term; that the electors should meet and vote by ballot on the first Wednesday in December, and sign three certificates of the result, one to be sent to the President of the Senate by mail, one to be sent to him by a messenger, and one to be deposited with the United States Judge of the particular district. The second section provides that Congress shall be in session on the second Wednesday in February succeeding every meeting of electors "for the purpose of counting and declaring the vote." Should there be no President of the Senate, the votes are to be in care of the Secretary of State. The same act made provision that in case of vacancy of both President and Vice President the President of the Senate pro tempore should act as President; and if there should be no such officer chosen by the Senate, then the Speaker of the House should act.

In 1792 Washington was unanimously re-elected, all the old thirteen and the new States of Vermont, Georgia and Kentucky voting. On this occasion a joint committee was raised to determine upon the forms to be observed in counting the votes, and that practice yet continues. This committee reported, and it was ordered that the two houses should meet in the Senate chamber at noon of the day fixed by the act of Congress; that the Senate should previously appoint one and the House two tellers to set down the votes as declared; that they should deliver the result to the President of the Senate, who should announce the state of the vote and declare the persons elected to both houses then assembled, "which shall be deemed a declaration of the persons elected President and Vice President," which declaration, together with the list of votes, should be entered on the journals of the two houses. There was nothing worthy of note in the counting on the second Wednesday of February, 1793; Washington had the entire 132 votes; Adams had 77, Clinton 50, Jefferson 4, and Aaron Burr 1.

In 1796 John Adams was chosen President, having all the votes of the New England States, with New York, New Jersey and Delaware, and ten scattering from other States. He had barely enough—seventy-one out 140 votes, only one majority. Jefferson, having the next highest, was the Vice President. There was a peculiar incident about the announcement of this result that is worth noticing. The President of the Senate was Muhlenberg, the same who presided in 1789. After declaring the result, and proclaiming that John Adams and Thomas Jefferson were duly elected, etc., etc., for the term of four years, he added: "And may the Sovereign of the Universe, the Ordainer of civil government on earth for the preservation of liberty, justice and peace among men enable both to discharge the duties of their offices conformably to the constitution of the United States, with conscientious diligence, punctuality and perseverance."

The first action suggesting that Congress ought to have anything to say about the casting or the receiving of the electoral votes, beyond the purely ministerial act of counting and declaring, was in the Senate, in January, 1800, when a committee was raised to report what regulations should be made for deciding disputed elections of Presidents and for determining the legality or illegality of votes for President and Vice President in the different States. A bill was reported in February, when Charles Pinckney strenuously opposed it, taking the ground that neither house ought by the slightest suspicion of an act to exercise control or even revisal over the franchise. The bill passed, 16 to 14, but did not go through the House, and appears to have been dropped altogether.

THE FIRST SERIOUS DIFFICULTY—AN ELECTORAL TIE.

About the close of the year 1800 it was known that there was likely to be a tie vote for President between Jefferson and Burr. So, about a week before the day for opening the returns, the usual joint committee brought in a rule, which was adopted, that if no person should have a constitutional majority of the electoral votes, the Speaker and the members of the House should at once return to their chamber and immediately proceed, without debate, to vote for President, and should not adjourn until they had made a selection. The counting, on the 11th of February, resulted as anticipated — Jefferson and Burr had each seventy-three votes. As soon as the presiding officer made the announcement, the House returned to their chamber and began to vote by States; Jefferson got eight States, Burr got six, and two (Vermont and Maryland) were divided. This was the result of the thirty-seven ballots, taken during a session extending from noon of the 11th to noon of the 17th of the month. Intense solicitude was felt throughout the country, more particularly because of the reputation of Burr, who had suddenly sprung into prominence as a bold and unscrupulous leader. The dead-lock was broken on the thirty-eighth ballot, when Jefferson got Vermont, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Kentucky and Tennessee—ten States. Burr got New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut—four States. Delaware and South Carolina voted blank. This contest made vividly apparent the necessity of some law or rule requiring the electors to state the offices as well as the man for whom they voted, so that the tellers might know which was for President and which for Vice. Therefore, as soon as Congress met in December, 1803, the Twelfth amendment to the constitution was proposed, requiring separate votes, so certified, for the two offices. The amendment was ratified and proclaimed Sept. 25, 1804, in time for the Presidential election of that year. The election of 1804 was almost informal. Of 176 votes Jefferson had 162, and George Clinton for Vice President the same. The other fourteen were for Charles Coatesworth Pinckney and Rufus King. There was nothing of consequence about the counting, the President of the Senate, however, for the first time, did not read the certificates, but broke the seals and handed them to one of the tellers, who read the contents. On this occasion the geographical order of the States was officially recognised. On commencing the presiding officer said: "Perceiving no cause for preference in the order of opening the returns, I will pursue a geographical arrangement and begin with the Northern States." He began with New Hampshire, and this form of calling the States was the rule until quite recently, when the alphabetical form came into use. In 1808 Madison came in as heir-apparent without serious opposition, having 122 out of 175 votes. Now, for the first time, the distinction was made by the electors of President and Vice President, and George Clinton was chosen to the latter place by 113 votes to 47 for Rufus King. Charles C. Pinckney had 47 votes for President. At the counting, Feb. 8, 1809, the Senate for the first time went to the hall of the House of Representatives. Madison's re-election in 1812 was also a matter of course. He had 128, and DeWitt Clinton 89 votes. Elbridge Gerry had 131 and Samuel Ingersoll 86 for Vice President. Monroe's first election, in 1816, was all one-sided. He had 183 votes, and Rufus King 34; Daniel D. Tompkins had 183 votes for Vice President.

FIRST OBJECTION TO THE VOTE OF STATE.

When the above votes were counted, Feb. 12, 1817, Mr. Taylor, of New York, interrupted at "Indiana." The Senate immediately retired, and Mr. Taylor stated that his objection to the vote of Indiana was that the electoral vote had been cast before Indiana had been admitted to the Union. The declaration of admission was made Dec. 16, 1816, and the vote had been given by the Indiana Electoral College a few days before. As the vote of the State could not in the slightest manner affect the result, neither house took any definite action, and the point, if there was any, was not accepted. The Senate returned, and the count was completed and announced in the usual form. At the count in February, 1821, a similar objection was made to the vote of Missouri; but as every vote in the Union (except a single one from New Hampshire) had been cast for James Monroe, and as there was no actual opposition to Tompkins for Vice President, the objection was not pressed. Missouri had chosen electors for President some months before she was fully admitted as a State.

ADAMS, JACKSON, CLAY, CRAWFORD.

In 1824, there was no choice of President by the people, and the excitement about the result in the House, increased by all sorts of rumors of bargains and bribery, was intense. The usual joint resolution was passed, and the houses met Feb. 10 for counting, John Gaillard, of South Carolina, presiding. On this occasion the presiding officer opened two packets from each State, the one sent by mail and the one brought by messenger. One of them was read by Mr. Gazewell, the teller for the Senate, while the other copy was followed by Mr. Taylor, of New York, and the figures written down by Philip P. Barbour, the teller on the part of the House. The figures were also taken down by the Clerks of the two houses. When the report was finished it was read in detail by Mr. Gaillard—Adams, 84; Jackson, 99; Crawford, 41; Clay, 37. He then announced that no person had received a majority of the votes given for President; that Andrew Jackson, John Quincy Adams and William H. Crawford were the three persons having the highest number of votes, and that the remaining duties in the choice of a President of the United States devolved upon the House of Representatives. He then declared that John C. Calhoun, of South Carolina, had received a majority of the votes of all the electors for Vice President, and was duly elected. The Senate then retired, and the House at once proceeded to vote. Thirteen States voted for Adams, seven for Jackson and four for Crawford, and the speaker (Henry Clay) announced that John Quincy Adams had been duly chosen President for four years from the 3d of March, 1825.

The college of 1829 and 1833 that elected Jackson moved along in the beaten track without incident worthy of note.

NO CHOICE OF VICE PRESIDENT.

In the count in 1837, when Van Buren was elected President, there was no choice for the second office. For President the vote was: Van Buren, 170; Harrison, 73; White, 26; Webster, 14, and Mangum, 11. For Vice President Richard M. Johnson had 147, just one-half the whole number. The President of the Senate (John Bell) declared Van Buren elected, and added: "As no person has a majority of the whole vote for Vice President there is no choice. Richard M. Johnson and Francis Granger have the highest vote, and it is for the Senate to elect." In such case the vote is not taken by States, but each Senator votes as he pleases. The result was: Full Senate, 52; majority, 27; legal quorum, 35; present, 49; for Johnson, 33; for Granger, 16, and the presiding officer declared Johnson duly elected Vice President. There was a little question about the reception of the vote of Michigan, the latest addition to Uncle Sam's family, but as her three votes made no possible difference the objection was dropped.

PUTTING ON OFFICIAL DIGNITY.

Heretofore there had been no especial formalities observed in the meeting of the two houses, except that the House members went to the Senate or the Senators to the House, all at once. But when the time for meeting, in February, 1841, arrived, the Senate formed, with their Sergeant-at-Arms at the head, then the Vice President, with the Secretary of the Senate on his left, then the Chief Clerk bearing the electoral votes, and then the Senators, two by two. The procession was met in the rotunda by the House Sergeant-at-Arms, who led it down the broad aisle. The Speaker received the Vice President on the steps of his stand and conducted him to the chair as President of the joint session, the Speaker seating himself on the left. The Secretary of the Senate took a seat at one end of the Clerk's table and the Clerk of the House at the other. The tellers were stationed in front of the presiding officer, the Senate teller in the middle and the House tellers on each side. The members of the House remained standing while the Senate came in. The galleries were filled with ladies, and the scene was very impressive. The presiding officer announced the purpose of the joint session, and took up the package containing the vote of Maine. He broke the seal, and, handing it down, said: "I deliver to you, gentlemen tellers, the votes of the electors of the State of Maine for President and Vice President of the United States, that the same may be counted." When the counting of the States was finished the presiding officer declared the result, and said: "I do declare that William Henry Harrison, of Ohio, having a majority of the whole votes for electors for President, is duly elected President of the United States for the term of four years, commencing with the 4th day of March, in the year 1841." The same declaration was made in the case of John Tyler for Vice President, and then the Senate retired in formal order.

The counts in 1845, 1849 and 1853 were conducted in the same way, and nothing occurred beyond the ordinary routine. In 1857 a great deal of time was wasted in discussing whether the vote of Wisconsin should or should not be counted. The objection was raised by Mr. Mason, the presiding officer of the joint session, and was on account of irregularity, the Wisconsin electors having met the day after and not on the day fixed by law. No decision was made, and the matter was dropped after two days of debate. In February, 1861, while we were on the very eve of war, the proceedings of the joint session were brief and entirely quiet. The same old formalities were observed, except that there was no dignified parading.

REJECTING THE VOTES OF STATES.

The first move toward positively rejecting the vote of any State was made in the House, Dec. 19, 1864, when Mr. Wilson offered a joint resolution declaring certain States (those in rebellion) not entitled to representation in the electoral colleges, and that no votes from them should be received or counted. This was adopted, and votes from only twenty-five of the thirty-seven States were counted. No votes were offered from the States in rebellion.

In 1869, the question of the regularity or legality of counting the vote of Georgia was brought up by Senator Edmunds, who, on the 6th of February offered a concurrent resolution, reciting that whereas the question is now pending whether the State of Georgia is entitled to representation in Congress, because not yet reorganized: Resolved, That, if the votes of Georgia shall not essentially change the result, they should be reported thus: "Were the votes of Georgia to be counted the result would be for ——— for President, ——— votes; if not counted, for ——— for President, ——— votes; but in either case ——— is elected President of the United States." The Senate passed this resolution, 34 to 21. Subsequently, Senator Trumbull moved to reject the votes of Louisiana, but the motion was lost. There was much confusion and wrangling, but finally the count was completed, and the tellers announced 294 votes, including Georgia, of which 148 would be a majority; but excluding Georgia, there were 285 votes, and 143 was a majority. As Grant had 214 votes and Seymour only 71, or 80 with Georgia, the result was fixed beyond cavil, and the presiding officer declared Ulysses S. Grant duly elected.

THE LAST MEETING—THE TWENTY-SECOND RULE.

The last joint session for counting the electoral votes was on the 12th of February, 1873. Again there was difference over the the votes of the reconstructed States, although their reception or rejection could not have made the slightest difference. On this occasion the somewhat famous twenty-second rule (passed Feb. 6, 1865) was used to stop debate and questioning while in joint session. The substance of this rule is as follows:

> If upon the reading of any such certificate by the tellers any question shall arise in regard to the counting of the votes therein certified, the same having been stated by the presiding officer, the Senate shall thereupon withdraw, and said question shall be submitted to that body for its decision; and the Speaker of the House shall, in like manner, submit the said question to the House for its decision; and no question shall be decided affirmatively and no vote objected to shall be counted except by the concurrent votes of the two houses, which being obtained the two houses shall reassemble, and the presiding officer shall then announce the decision of the question submitted and upon such question there shall be no debate in either house; and any other question to this object, for which the two houses are assembled, may be submitted and determined in like manner.

The two houses met on the 12th of February to count the vote. When Georgia was reached Mr. Hoar objected to the three votes for Horace Greeley, because they were given after his decease, and the electors could not lawfully vote for a dead man. The point was waived for the time, and the count went on till Mississippi was read. Mr. Trumbull objected to the vote because the statement did not say it was done by ballot. Both objections were put in writing, and the Senate retired. In that body it was voted—44 yeas and 19 nays—to count the votes for Greeley. During the debate Mr. Conkling and others undertook to get through a declaration that the functions of the joint session were purely ministerial, and that the recording of the votes of the States was done independent of and without regard to the effect of such votes; but the motion failed—yeas 8, nays 32. In the meantime the House voted not to count votes for Greeley, but both houses decided to count Mississippi. They met again at half-past 3 p. m., and, as the houses disagreed on the Greeley votes, they were not counted. Still another trouble was found in Georgia. There were two votes for Charles J. Jenkins, of that State, for President, and five votes for A. H. Colquitt, also of that State, for Vice President. The constitution says that the President and Vice President must be citizens of different States. There was also a similar mistake made by the Missouri electors. Then Mr. Trumbull objected to the vote of Texas for certain irregularities, chiefly clerical; and with this budget of troubles the Senate again retired. On reassembling, both houses had agreed to count Texas, and six or seven States were gone through with when Louisiana appeared with two returns. Again the Senate walked out, and a long war of words followed in both houses. Finally the joint session was resumed and the count completed at about 8 o'clock in the evening. The Vice President then stated that there were 366 electoral votes, of which 349 had been counted for President and 352 for Vice President; that for President, Ulysses S. Grant, of Illinois, had received 286; B. Gratz Brown, of Missouri, 18; Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana, 42; Charles J. Jenkins, of Georgia, 2; and David Davis, of Illinois, 1 vote; that for Vice President, Henry Wilson, of Massachusetts, had 286, etc. And he declared U. S. Grant and Henry Wilson duly elected. (The 17 votes rejected were 3 of Georgia, 6 of Arkansas, and 8 of Louisiana.)

CONCLUSION.

It does not appear that the houses, in joint session, can pass upon anything beyond the result as shown by the count. Their duties are merely clerical; they have no power to decide upon what to receive or what to reject. The cases where such power has been exercised (not in joint session, but in each house for itself) are all since the rebellion. In 1865 there were no votes offered from the States not counted; in 1869 Georgia was practically counted, and only in 1873, at the very last election, was there a positive throwing out of a State, and on that occasion the omission of their votes made no difference, for Gen. Grant was almost unanimously re-elected. What might be done if the vote of a single State should be enough to change from one candidate to another is a question yet to be reached.

Cost of Railroads.

Nothing has been more effective in developing the resources of nations than railroads, and through no other means has the percentage of loss of capital been so great. We gather some facts in this connection from a recent number of Frazer's Magazine, which facts, in their magnitude and character, can scarcely fail to astonish even educated readers. The rapidity with which money has been borrowed on railway enterprises is most astonishing, and, notwithstanding revulsions, renewed outbursts of zeal in new projects have followed in quick succession. As recently as 1845 the total capital sunk in railways throughout the world was only about $570,000,000, of which Great Britain had spent some $320,000,000, and America $90,000,000. At the present time the railways of Great Britain alone represent a nominal outlay of nearly $3,280,000,000, and those of the United States $3,800,000,000. Besides these sums France has spent about $3,000,000,000, Germany about $1,100,000,000, and Russia about $1,250,000,000. Many other foreign countries have thus pledged the national credit for, nominally at least, the same kind of "works of public utility" to an enormous extent, and hence the national debts of Turkey, Austria and Hungary, Egypt, Italy, Spain, and of various petty semi-barbarous South American republics, of the empires of Brazil and Chili, have been swollen prodigiously. What the total pledges of credit in the world may amount to, or what amount of savings may have been locked up in corporate enterprises, it would be almost impossible to say, just as it is impossible to reckon how far the aggregate figures represent money spent and how far mere paper; but the national debts of the world are now swollen almost as much as the credit of separate enterprises and corporations. The principal countries of Europe owe about $17,500,000,000, exclusive of the unsecured paper currencies and home debts, and all other national debts which come within the cognizance of civilization may be valued at about $5,000,000,000. Those huge and rapidly accumulating obligations are not, it is true, due by any means exclusively to the spread of industrial enterprise, Austria, Spain, Italy, France, the United States and Russia having contracted large national debts in the prosecution of wars and conquests, but for the purpose of the stock-broker it is much the same whether the "securities" he deals in are based on industrial undertakings or commerce, or are mere loans necessitated by a national bankruptcy or an ambitious war. His business is to buy and sell and get gains out of these bits of paper, and it is of the essence of that business that quantity should have weight with him, not quality. And of quantity it cannot be denied that the modern stock-broker has enough.—Philadelphia Ledger.

A Colorado Avalanche—A Striking Spectacle.

At an early hour on Friday morning last the denizens of Alpine street, which runs parallel with Republican mountain, were aroused by the ominous rumbling of rock far up the mountain side, and ere the first echoes had dies away a fearful sight met the gaze of the terrified crowd who stood riveted, as it were, to the ground in speechless awe, not knowing which way to turn. A tremendous mass of rock weighing some 2,500 pounds came leaping and rolling down the rugged sides of Republican mountain at a rapid rate. Every eye was strained in a painful anxiety as it came nearer and faster, and seemed to be bent on destroying everything in its path. It barely missed the residence of Mr. Glaze, which is situated just on the side of this mountain, and was only stopped by coming in contact with Mr. Forrest's stable, which, but a moment before, had contained a large number of horses and pack animals. It made a hole in the stable large enough for ten persons to go through. Mr. Forrest's loss is not very great. Owing to the early hour of the morning the lives of many little children were saved who would, later, most probably, have been in the path-way of this havoc-making rock.—Denver Tribune.

One of the many characters of San Francisco is "Jack the Grabber." Jack moors his boat close to ships discharging cargo at the wharves. His boat contains hooks and grapples, specially devised for bringing up substances from the bottom. If a vessel be discharging coal, Jack's hooks will fish up all the lumps that drop into the water while in transitu from the ship to the wharf. If an angler drops his pocket-book in the water, Jack is the man to find it for him. He is said to make a good living.

THE OLD HOSTLER'S EXPERIENCE

BY IRWIN RUSSELL.

I gits up hesh—like good ol' Paul,
Obed'ent to de Mahs'r's call—
To tell my 'sperience, tell it all!
Ol' chains's put up;
An' I's led Glory out de stall,
[illegible]

Den, all you sinners, cl'ar de track!
I's mounted on ol' Glory's back;
Her hufs a-gwine ta-click-ta-clack,
Dat's how dey's gwine!
An' Satan's rattlin', shacklin' back
Is lef' behin'.

Ah, Christians! in my foolish days,
I rid de debbil's blooded bays;
Presumptious Pride an' Worl'ly Ways,
An' made 'm lope;
But now I's turned 'em out to graze
Widout a rope.

Yah! Yah! Oh! how I used to—. Well,
De 'ticklars 'taint no use to tell,
But once I rid de road to hell
Wid nary bit,
An' went two-forty on de shell
Toward de pit.

Like Balaam, when he rid de ass,
I 'lited on a dreadful fas'—
[illegible]
An' I got th'owed,
I cotch Religion trottin' pas',
An' back I goed.

An' now I simply 'vise you
You debbilish boys I's talkin' to—
Don't nebber hab a thing to do
Wid Satan's hosses;
Dey'll break an' fling you in de sloo,
Fus' one you crosses.

But git Religion well in han',
An' ride her like a little man—
Dere ain't no hoss in all de lan'
Kin run agin her—
An' you'll come by de judges' stan'
A easy winner.
